ARTICLE 50.

CONTRACTS.

Every manager, agent or artists' representative, or any associate thereof, who shall engage the services of an artist, shall enter into a uniform and equitable written "Play or Pay" contract with the artist, setting forth the amount of compensation to be received by the artist for his services. Any failure by any manager, agent or artists' representative, or by any associate thereof, to comply with the provisions hereof and any issuance of a false contract in relation to any act, presentation or attraction shall be deemed an unfair trade practice.

Where in any contract between the operator of a theatre and independent contractor, the latter shall undertake or agree to do and perform, or not to do or perform acts and deeds required to be done or performed, or prohibited from being done or performed by this Code, the duty, liability and responsibility for so doing or performing, or not doing or performing shall rest solely on such independent contractor.

ARTICLE 51.

UNFAIR COMPETITION.

No auditorium, hall or other place not regularly constituted as a theatre shall present the same type of performance as is presented in regularly operated theatres, provided, however, that the foregoing shall not be deemed to prevent such presentations in connection with industrial expositions, operatic performances or symphony concerts.

THE MINORITY PROPOSALS

August 23rd, 1933.

Hon. Sol. A. Rosenblatt,
Deputy Administrator,
N. R. A.,
Commerce Bldg.,
Washington, D. C.

Sir:

I have the honor to submit herewith a record of the exceptions taken to action by the majority of the committee on certain provisions of the Code, together with the counter proposals of those taking such exceptions.

In this connection I am also placing at your disposal a record of the vote taken on all measures to which an exception was noted.

I further invite your attention to the fact that there were sharp divisions in the opinions on many of the measures as to which exceptions were noted or counter proposals offered, and I trust that you will consider all such exceptions and counter proposals on their merits.

Respectfully submitted,
CHARLES L. O'REILLY,
Co-Ordinator.

EXCEPTIONS NOTED AND COUNTER PROPOSALS MADE IN CONNECTION WITH THE CODE OF FAIR COMPETITION FOR THE EXHIBITION BRANCH OF THE MOTION PICTURE INDUSTRY.

I. EXCEPTIONS TO MEASURES ADOPTED.

2. Right to Buy.

EXCEPTION:

Every theatre owner shall have the right to buy in free and open competition whatever run of pictures he desires.

TEXT OF MINORITY'S SUGGESTIONS

ADDITIONAL EXCEPTION:

Memo for the Chairman:

In the interest of harmony, I believe that the exception reserved to the provision adopted yesterday would be withdrawn if the language indicated by italics could be added to that provision, making the whole read as follows:

That there be incorporated in the code a provision that it is an unfair method of competition to deny to any theatre owner the right to buy in free and open competition whatever run of pictures he or it desire; provided, however, that the seller shall have the right of selection based upon bona fide consideration of the character, responsibility, prior performance, prestige of theatre or theatres , and potentially of income; and provided further that buying power in other situations resulting from the fact that a particular theatre is operated by a circuit shall not be a factor in determining its prestige or potentiality of income, within the meaning of this code.

4. Allocation of Certain Film Rentals.

Exception taken, no counter proposal.

5. Dating Restrictions.

Exception taken, no counter proposal.

6. Unreasonable Discrimination.

EXCEPTION:

Unreasonable discriminations in favor of any theatres as against any other theatres, as to film rentals, the terms upon which exhibition rights are granted, or the availability of prints shall be unfair competition.

14. Eliminations.

EXCEPTION:

In contracts for the exhibition of groups of ten (10) or more pictures the exhibitor shall have the privilege of rejecting at least (15%) fifteen percent of the number of pictures released without paying therefor.

ADDITIONAL EXCEPTION:

BLOCK BOOKING and BLIND BUYING is hereby declared to be an unfair trade practice and no distributor shall offer for rental any feature film product that has not been made or produced at the time of offering, and the exhibitor shall have an opportunity to see screened, all feature product before contracting for it, and no exhibitor shall be required to contract for and/or purchase, any feature pictures as a condition for the opportunity to purchase any other feature pictures.

ADDITIONAL EXCEPTION:

Compulsory block booking is hereby declared to be an unfair method of competition, and no exhibitor shall be required to contract for and/or lease any feature pictures as a condition for the opportunity to purchase a substantial portion of the remaining feature pictures produced or distributed by such producer or distributor during a stated period of time.

15. Substitutions.

Exception, no counter proposal.

18. Non-theatrical Competition.

Exception, no counter proposal.

19. Pictures Violating Production Code.

Exception, no counter proposal.

20. Advertising Code.

Exception, no counter proposal.

24. Forcing Shorts with Features.

Exception: counter proposal to omit Section 2.

25. Special Productions.

27. Double Features.

EXCEPTION:

Exhibiting two or more feature photoplays for one admission price is an uneconomic and unfair competitive practice. Because of peculiarly local conditions, however, such practice shall not be deemed to be an unfair trade practice, in such cities, towns and communities where seventy-five percent (75%) of the exhibitors approve thereof.

EXCEPTION:

Exhibiting two or more feature photoplays for one admission price shall be an unfair competitive practice in those cities, towns or communities where seventy-five percent (75%) of the exhibitors so declare;

EXCEPTION:

* * *; provided, that this shall not apply to situations where more than one picture is shown in a single enclosure for a single admission, but in different auditoriums.

29. Interference with Negotiations.

Exception, no counter proposal.

30. Checkers.

EXCEPTION:

The use by two or more distributors of the same box office checking service is an unfair trade practice.

31. Poster Exchanges.

32. Release Dates.

Exception, no counter proposal.

33. Transfer of Assets of Distributors.

Exception, no counter proposal.

34. Code to Apply to Existing Contracts.

Exception, no counter proposal.

36. Circuit Cooperative Booking.

Exception, no counter proposal.

38. Unauthorized Exhibition.

EXCEPTION:

The penalties provided by the N. I. R. A. shall be exclusive for any violation of the foregoing provisions.

II. EXCEPTIONS ON SUBJECTS NOT COVERED BY CODE PROVISIONS.

Foreign Pictures.

EXCEPTION:

No agreement for the sale of or otherwise concerning foreign made pictures shall be made a part of the subject matter of a contract for the sale of domestic pictures; nor shall the purchase by an exhibitor of any foreign picture or the payment therefor be made a condition for the sale to him by a distributor of any domestic picture.

The securing of the execution of an application for the sale of foreign pictures that is followed by the acceptance of an application for the licensing of domestic pictures for the same season, shall be presumed to be contrary to the purpose of this article, and may be cancelled by the exhibitor by giving written notice by registered mail within ten days after the receipt by such exhibitor of notification of the acceptance of the application for the exhibition of domestic pictures.

Building Restrictions

EXCEPTION:

RESOLVED that there shall be no restriction as to the erection of any theatre, except that before such construction may proceed the certification of the local zoning board shall be obtained, and it shall be the duty of such local zoning board to determine the public need of such a theatre, and the board shall give due weight and consideration to the rights of existing theatres within the competitive area affected.

Elimination of Minimum Admission Price.

EXCEPTION:

No film leasing contract shall provide either a minimum or a maximum theatre admission price.

ARTICLE VI

Modification

1. By the President

This code recognizes the right of the President from time to time to cancel or modify any order, approval, license, rule or regulation issued under Title I of the NIRA.

2. By the Association

This code may be amended in any particular, subject to the approval of the President as to matters he finds under his control, by a two-thirds vote of the members of the Association in meeting, provided that notice of submission of the proposed amendment has been given in the notice of meeting.

ARTICLE VII

General

1. Membership

(a) All members of the Association shall, as a condition of membership, subscribe to this code.

(b) Association membership shall remain open at all times to any motion picture laboratory under no restrictions, except as to initiation fee and payment of dues.

2. Effective Date

This code becomes effective the second Monday after its approval by the President.

3. Termination

This code, unless otherwise terminated, shall expire on the same date as the NIRA.

4. Code Violation

Violation of any provision of this code shall be deemed unfair competition.

5. Saving Clause

Should any provision of this code be determined invalid or unenforceable the remaining provisions thereof shall nevertheless continue in full force and effect in the same manner as if they had been separately presented for approval and approved by the President.

Signed and submitted by ALAN E. FREEDMAN, STEPHEN H. ELLER, TOM EVANS and HERBERT J. YATES, a committee representing the Motion Picture Laboratories Association of America, Inc., applicant for this code, and vested with suitable authority by resolution adopted at a meeting of the Association August 11, 1933, copy of which resolution is included in the formal application filed with the Administration.

UNITED ARTISTS SPEEDS PROGRAM; FOUR COMPLETED, FOUR IN WORK

Goldwyn Making Cantor's "Roman Scandals" and Anna Sten's "Nana"; 20th Century Finishes Its First, "The Bowery"

With two Samuel Goldwyn productions before the cameras and microphones and two 20th Century pictures being filmed, the United Artists program for 1933-34 is away to a flying start in Hollywood. The first of the 20th Century films, "The Bowery," is now in the cutting room. This story of early New York, starring Wallace Beery, George Raft and Jackie Cooper, will have an early Broadway premiere at the Rivoli.

Another of the Eddie Cantor music carnivals, "Roman Scandals," and the photoplay "Nana" introducing Anna Sten, Russian actress, to American screen audiences, are now being filmed by Mr. Goldwyn. The 20th Century pictures in production are Walter Winchell's "Broadway Thru a Keyhole" and "Blood Money," starring George Bancroft.

"Roman Scandals," based on the fable, "Androcles and the Lion," was authored by George S. Kaufman and Robert E. Sherwood. William Anthony McGuire, author of many stage hits, made the adaptation, a job he also filled for Cantor's "Whoopee" and "The Kid from Spain," both Goldwyn releases.

Ruth Etting, making her debut in a feature-length picture, is Eddie Cantor's leading woman, and Gloria Stuart and Edward Arnold have featured roles. David Manners, Aileen Riggin, girl swimmer, the Four Abbottiers, dancers, and 101 Goldwyn girls will also be seen in "Roman Scandals," which is being directed by Frank Tuttle, with music by Harry Warren and Al Dubin, and dances under the direction of Busby Berkeley.

"Nana" from Zola Story

"Nana," in which Miss Sten will star for Mr. Goldwyn, is from the story by Emile Zola, and is being directed by George Fitzmaurice from a scenario by Edwin Justus Mayer and Leo Birinski. Phillips Holmes, Warren William and Pert Kelton have featured roles. There will be an introduction of the "can-can" as originally danced, by Miss Sten, Busby Berkeley directing. Richard Rogers and Lorenz Hart wrote the songs Miss Sten sings.

Mr. Goldwyn expects to have both "Roman Scandals" and "Nana" completed by November.

In "Broadway Thru a Keyhole," which Joseph M. Schenck and Darryl Francis Zanuck are making as a big feature on their 20th Century list, Constance Cummings has the feminine lead. Others in important roles include Russ Columbo, Frances Williams, Blossom Seeley, Paul Kelly, Eddie Foy, Jr., Gregory Ratoff, Texas Guinan, Hugh O'Connell, Abe Lyman and his band, Andrew Toombs, Hobart Cavanaugh and Edward Ellis. Lowell Sherman is directing the story taken from Walter Winchell's experiences as a newspaper columnist. Gene Towne and Graham Baker made the screen adaptation, and there will be music and songs by Mack Gordon and Harry Revel, with Jack Haskell acting as dance director.

"Blood Money," an original by Rowland Brown, is a story of the bail bond and income tax rackets. Brown is directing "Blood Money," the cast supporting Bancroft including Judith Anderson, Broadway actress, making her screen debut; Frances Dee, Chick Chandler and Etienne Girardot.

Walt Disney will contribute 13 Silly Symphonies in color and 13 short features with Mickey Mouse to the current United Artists program. "Lullaby Land" and "Puppy Love" have been completed by Mr. Disney, and he is considering making "The Shepherdess and the Chimney Sweep," one of Hans Christian Andersen's fairy tales, and "The Night Before Christmas" for early release.

Four Already Completed

The product to be distributed by United Artists may reach forty pictures before the season 1933-34 draws to a close. New pictures are coming from Mary Pickford, Charles Chaplin and Douglas Fairbanks. 20th Century will have a minimum of twelve; Samuel Goldwyn will contribute five; Reliance, the Edward Small unit, will make four; there will be several from independent producers such as John Krimsky and Gifford Cochran, who have finished "Emperor Jones"; British and Dominions will contribute a quota including Noel Coward's "Bitter Sweet" and "The Private Life of Henry VIII."

Pictures already completed are "Bitter Sweet"; "Private Life of Henry VIII," starring Charles Laughton; "Emperor Jones," starring Paul Robeson, and "The Bowery,"

Mr. Goldwyn's "The Masquerader," starring Ronald Colman, with Elissa Landi in the feminine lead, is also finished. "Nana" will be followed by "Barbary Coast," based on Herbert Asbury's novel of the San Francisco tenderloin. Mr. Goldwyn, as his fifth production, will offer an epic of American family life after the fashion of "Cavalcade."

Two of the most important pictures on the 20th Century list are "Red Tape" and "The House of Rothschild," both of which will star George Arliss, stage and screen actor, now under exclusive contract to Schenck and Zanuck. Mr. Arliss will start work on "Red Tape" about September first, following his return from a vacation.

Constance Bennett will make two films for 20th Century, the first of which "Moulin Rouge," based on a French play, is expected to go into production soon. It will be a musical extravaganza, with a supporting cast including Tullio Carminati, formerly of "Music in the Air." The Ann Harding feature on the 20th Century list will be "Gallant Lady," with Clive Brook, Janet Beecher, Tullio Carminati and Veree Teasdale, to be directed by Gregory La Cava.

Other 20th Century Films

Spencer Tracy and Jack Oakie will star in "Trouble Shooter," story of the telephone linemen. Other 20th Century films will be "Miss Lonelyhearts," based on the experiences of an advice-to-the-lovelorn columnist, adapted by Leonard Praskins from the novel by Nathanael West; "Born to Be Bad," an original story by Ralph Graves, who also has sold "The Fair" to Mr. Zanuck; "I Knew Her When," to be directed by Gregory La Cava from a story by Willard Robertson; "P. T. Barnum," to star Wallace Beery, and "Gentlemen, the King!" an original story by Damon Runyan.

The Reliance company, makers of "I Cover the Waterfront," will contribute "Joe Palooka," based on the Ham Fisher comic character, with Jimmy Durante, Lupe Velez and Stuart Erwin; "The Count of Monte Cristo"; "The Shanghai Gesture" and "Style."

Alexander Korda will make two specials for United Artists release, and a comedy will come from Sydney Chaplin. Another picture to be made in England for the United Artists schedule will be a talking version of "Sorrel and Son."

TROUBLE LURKS FOR LOCATION MAN

When the communities around Hollywood and their city fathers determine, for the good of the municipalities, to institute improvements of a highway nature, the several expert location men of the major Hollywood studios sit up nights and worry. One famed example is the old road near the Old Soldiers' Home at Sawtelle, used times without number to simulate a lane in France or any other foreign country. Now that is paved and location men must obtain permission, block it off, cover it with dirt to restore it to a condition of screen value. Another difficulty is the searchlight of night location work, which draws flocks of educated spectators to impede the work. Classic is the example of the ramshackle, untenanted house, selected on Friday for shooting Monday. Monday arrived, the company on deck, only to find the house painted, cleaned, tenanted. The owner, a prospective tenant in sight, could not resist the opportunity.

20th Century Has Winchell's "Broadway Thru a Keyhole" and "Blood Money" in Production; Three Others Ready

Goldwyn to Remake Two

Samuel Goldwyn will remake "Stella Dallas" and "Dark Angel" for next season's release by United Artists. Ronald Colman and Vilma Banky will play in " Dark Angel" and a double is being sought for the role created in "Stella Dallas" by Belle Bennett.

The Power And the Glory

(Fox-Lasky)

Drama

So much furore and fuss has been made of the manner of the telling, in the exploitation of "narratage," that it will be possible that the excellences of the story and the performances of the players in this rather uusual production will be neglected.

To average audiences it would appear that exploitation might well pay special heed to the capable job that Colleen Moore has done in the role of "Sally," the driving wife, in the career of "Tom Garner," track walker to railway president and magnate, portrayed so excellently by Spencer Tracy.

The story is pretty grim tragedy, an ironic tale of the disaster and failure which may be the aftermath of even a winning struggle for success.

The story curiously begins with the funeral of Tom Garner, and gets into narration through cutbacks of action which are presented as visualization of the story of the life of Garner as told by his worshipful secretary "Henry," portrayed by Ralph Morgan, engaged in defending the repute of the boss in an after-supper conversation with his critical wife, played by Sarah Padden.

Despite the fact that the major complication of the plot involves the sex intrigue of the son of the hero with his father's second, young and winsome wife, the piece is cleanly done. It is obviously strong meat and strictly adult entertainment.

Whether or not one agrees with the Broadway enthusiasm for the methods of narration and what it calls "narratage," it will probably be found of benefit to prepare prospective audiences somewhat by indicating in announcements that the picture is something of a departure in technique. Popular success will depend necessarily on the emotional effect attained by the production, regardless of the intricacies and refinements of screen method. The better the audience is prepared for the peculiarities of the production the better will be the opportunity for the story to prevail over the method in attaining audience effect. "The Power and the The Glory" will inevitably take a place of interest and importance in the annuals of the season's product. —T.R.

One Sunday Afternoon

(Paramount)

Dramatic Romance

In premise this picture has much to recommend it, but audiences should be prepared for the remarkably slow tempo in the main part of the story. The basic idea, while not exceptionally novel, has an interestingly different presentation. A dramatic romance in tone; asides, particularly the prologue, epilogue and spots in the central theme, give it a comedy atmosphere. At the same time the picture carries a certain thrill.

The action is timed in the late nineties, locaded in a small town. Biff, a dentist, and his pal, Snappy, stage a Sunday afternoon drinking bout which, as it comically leads to "I-remember-when days," brings about the fact that Biff married the wrong girl. This sequence is brought to a close as Hugo, who married Biff's ideal, Virginia, comes in to have a tooth pulled. Old acquaintances reviewed, Biff sits him in a chair, plans his revenge, turns on the gas. Then the story flashes back.

A date, Cooper inserting hilarious comedy antics, falls for Virgina, who wants Hugo. Cooper is forced to accept the girl friend, Amy. Developing to a point where the selfish Virginia turns down the lovesick swain, whose job in a carriage factory, despite the fact that he is studying dentistry, is not so alluring as the more promising Hugo. Stood up on a date, as Virginia elopes with Hugo, Biff marries Amy. Here the slow tempo carries on over a couple of years until Hugo, returning as boss of the carriage factory, precipitates a situation in which, during a struggle with Biff as he is being fired, the watchman is shot.

Then the epilogue. Hugo is still in the chair; Biff grim, Snappy panic-stricken as the gas is asphyxiating the patient. Virginia, now a super vamp, strolls in, goes on the make for Biff. The dentist figures that having to live with this woman is punishment enough for Hugo, and he turns on the oxygen, deciding that in Amy he got the better of the deal.

The idea of the man sitting in the dentist's chair while the story is told should be productive of some clever exploitation gags, which can be given a personal significant twist by constructing a localized campaign that propounds the question, "Did you marry the wrong man—the wrong woman?" remembering that lots of people are perplexed by that problem. Go after the more mature portions of your patronage. Make a special effort to attract the curiosity of the women folk by means of names and the gist of the story.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

The Blarney Kiss

(Principal)

Comedy-Drama

The exhibitor must face a problem in selling this picture in this country, since, made in England by British and Dominions, it is, from first to last, an English and Irish yarn, with the speech of all players definitely of the manner of either the British people or the Irish. It would be well, consequently, if the exhibitor were to avoid too pronounced a mention in his selling of the origin of the film, since there has been definitely indicated a rather pronounced antipathy on the part of American screen audiences, particularly in the smaller communities, for the accents of the English-made picture.

Tom Walls, as well as the rest of the cast, is completely unknown in this country, despite the fact that he is one of the better known English players and a favorite in England. As always, he is his own director.

The story is light, lively and entertaining and may be sold as such. The cast displays competence, and the film is well staged, well developed. Though it has its own fair portion of drama, suspense and near tragedy, it is characterized chiefly by its comedy and general lightness. Throughout, the film is dominated by the lighthearted liveliness and personality of Walls.

Walls, an Irishman, is a moment's host to Robert Douglas, young English lord, and his sister, Anne Grey, at the moment that a group of Irish farmers in an ugly mood, mistaking him for some one else, turn him out, burn his home. A short, prologue sequence shows Walls as a child being held precariously while he kisses the famed Blarney Stone, said to bring good luck. He finds himself in London, broke, is befriended by Douglas, and rises to a position of importance and wealth in a financial house he founds, with Douglas as his partner. He falls in love with Miss Grey.

Douglas, to cover certain gambling debts, misappropriates the firm's funds, and when Walls is brought to court for mismanagement, permits him to be sentenced to 10 years in the penitentiary. Douglas commits suicide, but reveals the truth before he dies, freeing Walls for an expected conclusion with Miss Grey.

The theme throughout is the luck that pursues the kisser of the Blarney Stone, and that should be the exhibitor's theme as well. In an Irish community, or one where there are many Irish, the film should have a definite appeal. In other communities, the exhibitor should emphasize the Blarney Stone theme as well as indicating the film as a lively, entertaining, not too serious yarn of a good fellow who trusts to luck and is not let down in the end.—Aaronson, New York.

Produced by British and Dominions. Distributed by Principal. Directed by Tom Walls. From the story by A. R. Rawlinson. Release date, August 18, 1933. Running time, 71 minutes.

Man from Monterey

(Warner)

Western

A western which harks back to the days of 1848 and slips down to the Mexican border for its locale, "Man from Monterey" treats of the Spaniards who, owning their land by grant from the Spanish throne, are required to register their property with the United States authorities following acquisition of the Spanish territory from Spain by the United States.

John Wayne presents all that the youngster should want in the way of western heroes. He can ride, fight, shoot and is physically attractive, in addition to proudly riding a beautiful white horse, Duke.

Wayne, captain in the United States army, is ordered south to attempt to persuade the Spanish owners to register their land as required. A particularly large holder, a recalcitrant, is Don Castanado, who is acting on the advice of a fellow-owner, unscrupulous, who has designs on his neighbor's property, knowing it will be declared free land if it is not registered by the appointed date. His son, Donald Reed, seeks to marry Castanado's daughter, Ruth Hall, as part of the scheme.

Wayne appears on the scene and immediately incurs the enmity of the son by defending Luis Alberni, voluble itinerant beggar who supplies the comedy, from his tormenter's nasty temper. Wayne, then playing squarely with an American gang, also after land, enlists them on his side in his fight with Castanado's neighbor. When Castanado is captured and held prisoner and Reed is about to marry Miss Hall, Wayne comes to the rescue with a plan requiring the aid of Alberni and the leader of the gang. It works, the girl is saved from marrying Reed, and her father's place of imprisonment is discovered. Pursued about the house by the enraged group, Wayne is defending with a sword snatched from the wall, when the gang arrives in response to an alarm carried by Duke, the horse, and saves the situation.

The exhibitor has here slightly varied western material to sell, in that it concerns something besides the cattle rustlers, bank robbers or hold-up men. Sell it with all the emphasis on John Wayne possible and attract the attention of the youngsters especially with an indication of the type of story offered, with Wayne as a United States army officer of 1848.—AARONSON, New York.

Gun Law

(Majestic)

Western

Here's an outdoor story with a Badlands terror swung over to something else again by mother love, which might well be capitalized in billing, though first and foremost for patronage purposes comes the name Jack Hoxie, and perhaps one might add Dynamite, his horse.

There is a bit of turn to the theme that might make good copy. The Sonora Kid (Hoxie) splits with Nevada (J. Frank Glendon), who is all set to rob the cowtown bank. The Kid beats Nevada to it, but in order to get $500 for the woman running the lodging house for doctor bills. As The Kid escapes into the Badlands with Black Jack (Harry Todd) and Tony Andrews (Paul Fix), a posse bullet has wounded Tony, and he kills himself rather than slow up his pals.

The Kid and Black Jack go to the Circle Bar ranch to tell Tony's mother (Mary Carr). She is sightless and mistakes The Kid for her boy. They go through with the deception, with the help of Nita Hammond (Betty Boyd). Then come Nevada and his gang to steal the cattle. For the sake of the mother Nevada takes the name of Sonora Kid, but goes ahead with his cattle rustling plot, having tied up the real Kid and Black Jack at a deserted cabin after exposing their ruse that a buyer is coming and there's money in the family strongbox. The two manage to get free and return to the ranch to battle with the rustlers. When the sheriff arrives to take The Kid on a charge of slaying Tony, all is explained to him, and the sheriff, pointing to the body of Nevada, declares that The Sonora Kid is dead, and wishes Hoxie luck as being Tony henceforth.

Besides Hoxie, the names Betty Boyd and Mary Carr may be of significance. Recollection of the gracious motherliness of Miss Carr in many similar roles may, if she is publicized, bring some patrons outside the dyed-in-the-wool western customers.

After Hoxie's real nature has been established, the story becomes real fare for the youngsters, and there's plenty of action for them.—ROVELSTAD, New York.

Distributed by Majestic. Directed by Lew Collins. Story and continuity by Oliver Drake. Release date, April 15, 1933. Running time, 62 minutes.

"HENRY THE EIGHTH" CONVULSIVE: MOORING

Alexander Korda's London film production, "Private Life of Henry the Eighth," convulsed a London premiere audience. It is a superb expose of England's most amorous monarch, with spicy bridal episodes and grim scenes of a queen's decapitation. Naughty dialogue and sultry situations exploit the perfectly terrific screen personality of Charles Laughton as the obese and almost obscene king immortalized as history's greatest Bluebeard.

Dramatic license was taken with historical detail but the picture provides brilliant and unusual screen entertainment promising strong interest when presented by United Artists in New York next month.

Grand moments of high tragedy contrast with flashes of sidesplitting comedy. Reminiscences of Henry the Eighth suggest that modern divorces are old fashioned. He didn't believe in alimony so cut off their heads. It is definitely a film to make men envious either of Korda or King Henry, or both.—MOORING, London.

Unknown Valley

(Columbia)

Western

The considerably popular Buck Jones is here his usual, sure-fire, action-producing western self, who knows how to ride, shoot and fight with the best of them, and thereby thrill the future adult patrons of the screen. The exhibitor who can sell westerns to his adults, and all can sell them to the youngsters, has here a fast-paced western with a slightly different slant, which takes it just a little out of the ordinary run of stories of the type.

A brief resume of the story will indicate to the exhibitor how best he may sell the film, utilizing the slightly different story angle to best advantage. Outside of the fact of Buck Jones' appearance, the cast names mean very little.

Jones learns from a dying prospector of a hidden valley where there is much gold, and of the sudden and strange disappearance of the prospector's partner who is Jones' father. The valley is somewhere across the desert. Jones sets out, loses his way, runs out of water and is about to give up when he is rescued by the inhabitants of the strange valley, who are revealed as a highly religious sect, hidden away from the world by the great desert, under the complete dictatorship of several elders, and living a most strait-laced existence. Jones accidentally meets and falls in love with the naive Cecilia Parker.

The girl and her young brother, Bret Black, hate and fear the elders, especially since the girl is forcibly betrothed to Wade Boteler, most unscrupulous and hateful of the elders. Jones discovers that Boteler and another elder are secretly getting gold from a hidden cavern at the foot of a sharp, steep cliff, and are planning to leave the valley when they are ready. Jones also discovers that the mine in the cavern is being worked by an old man from the outside, who had been captured years before by the elders. In the course of Jones' rescue of the man, who expectedly turns out to be his father, there is a fight between Jones and Boteler on the edge of the cliff which should bring the youngsters to the edges of their seats in excitement. The rescue is completed and romance, too, is anticipated.

With Buck Jones, an unusual type of western story, a plenitude of action, shooting and fast riding to sell, the exhibitor should have no difficulty putting this across for an hour's western entertainment to those adults who still enjoy a western, and to all the youngsters.—AARONSON, New York.

Produced and distributed by Columbia. Directed by Lambert Hillyer. Story by Donald W. Lee. Screen play by Lambert Hillyer. Assistant director, C. C. Coleman. Cameraman, Al Siegler. Sound engineer, George Cooper. Film editor, Clarence Kolster. Release date, May 5, 1933. Running time, 69 minutes.

Strange As It Seems

Interesting

There is rather the usual amount of general interest in this, Number 30, of the John Hix series of novelties found the world over. Highlighting the subject are scenes showing the manner in which the not altogether pleasant appearing octopus mothers, or rather smothers, its eggs at the bottom of the sea in the process of hatching; a natural well of dry ice which freezes anything in the blazing hot Imperial Valley of California; the horned toad, sealed for ninety days in cement, coming out alive, and the Oklahoma City man, whose stomach is inflated with air, expanding it some 40 inches, like an automobile tire, and then expelling it. Diverse, the subjects are of interest.—Running time, 10 minutes.

The Desert Patrol

(Fox)

Splendid

One of the excellent Magic Carpet of Movietone series of travel pictures, this subject concerns itself with the desert police patrol of Morocco, where the troopers, mounted on tireless camels, patrol vast stretches of barren deserts, keeping travelers safe from marauding bands of roving bandits. Pictorially, the subject is one of most unusual beauty, with the mounted troopers, seen silhouetted against the desert sky at night, forming a picture of great impressiveness. The subject matter, also, is of real interest.—Running time, 10 minutes.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 187.—(A) Draw sketch of a simple, easily constructed tester for both plug and cartridge fuses. (B) How are fuses marked as to their voltage and amperage capacity? (C) At what various points are fuses required? (D) Must every circuit, regardless of its capacity, have fuses? (E) Does blowing of a projector circuit fuse necessarily indicate a fault in the circuit?

Answer to Question No. 180

Bluebook School Question No. 180 was: (A) What dangers are set up by boosting fuses? (B) Is boosting fuses justifiable under any conditions? (C) What should govern the fusing of ordinary circuits? (D) What two things must govern the fusing of motor circuits and what provision for excess capacity do Underwriters' rules make in the matter of motor circuits?

The list of approximately correct answers was large this week. The following made good:

C. Rau and S. Evans; T. Van Vaulkenburg; H. Edwards; D. Danielson; L. Van Buskirk and E. Kroll; G. E. Doe; J. Wentworth; W. Ostrum; B. Doe; S. Maybe and R. D. Konley; L. F. Evans; D. L. Mason and J. Diglah; A. L. Chambers, M. Scully and P. L. Wheeler; R. C. MacDonald; O. L. Evans; L. and D. Casey; B. L. Tanner and E. Rymer; T. S. Raymond; R. Suler and R. Wheeler; L. H. Danville and R. S. Patterson; D. L. Howard; L. M. Oglesby and son; E. Harlor and G. Garrison. A splendid list for this hot weather, if you ask me.

(A) We will do well to listen to Brother G. E. Doe on this one. He says:

"Dangers from the hazardous and rather silly practice of boosting fuses (practiced, however, only by those few foolish men we have still in the profession) are:

"(1) Possible injury to insulation by moderate heating. This is especially bad when it occurs inside a conduit where it cannot be detected until trouble results.

"(2) Danger or possibility of heating wires of the circuit 'protected' (?) by the boosted fuses until they become red hot and set fire to something. This, of course, would be impossible with wires inside conduit for the reason that before the conduit would become heated to the point where fire would result the insulation inside would be totally destroyed and a dead short result, so that either the boosted fuse would let go, or the wires themselves would burn off. [Note: Doe probably is correct in most cases, but still I believe if the boost be heavy enough the short would possibly not occur until the conduit itself became hot enough to start a fire. What are your views as to that?—F. H. R.]

"(3) Danger of damage to such electrical equipment as might be connected to the boosted-fuse circuit.

"(4) Danger to the idiot who does such a stunt for the reason that he might get caught at it and put where he belongs—in the asylum for those of feeble intellect."

Pretty strong talk that last, but I nevertheless agree with it. The man who boosts a fuse has no right place in a theatre projection room.

(B) Rau and Evans answer this one thus: "Fuse boosting is not justifiable under any conditions, as a sufficient stock of fuses should be kept on hand for any emergency. Any trouble that occurs on account of continual blowing of fuses should be traced to its source and this rectified."

(C) Van Buskirk and Kroll say: "Voltage of circuit, and amperage requirements of same, govern the fusing of ordinary electric circuits." Which is concise and an entirely correct answer to the question as stated.

(D) D. M. Banks and L. Summers answer: "Circuits should never be fused in excess of rated capacity of the wires. However, provided the wires have sufficient capacity (which must be provided) motors may be fused 25 per cent in excess of their normal capacity. This is provided for in Underwriters' rules."

Gentlemen, may I compliment you? I had fully expected that answers would fall off sharply during the summer, but so far there has been almost no drop at all. Several have written that, although the theatre they work in is closed for the summer, they will keep right on in the "school." That's the right spirit. Such men will win out in the end.

THINGS LOOKING UP IN KANSAS CITY

A PARAMOUNT SEPTEMBER!

← KLASS with a Capital K. KNIGHT'S her name, JUNE KNIGHT . . . and that's JIMMY DUNN at her feet . . . in "TAKE A CHANCE", PARAMOUNT'S screen version of Larry Schwab's big musical hit. BUDDY ROGERS, LILLIAN ROTH, CLIFF EDWARDS, LILLIAN BOND, LONA ANDRE and DOROTHY LEE are in the cast . . . and Bobby Connolly's there with 50 girls 50 . . . all new tunes save "EADIE WAS A LADY" and that's sumpin. Release date September 29th.

"A GOOD NUMBER" "Thanks!" croons CROSBY to PARAMOUNT for JUDITH ALLEN who plays with him, JACK OAKIE, SKEETS GALLAGHER in "TOO MUCH HARMONY". This number and six others, musically speaking, plus LILYAN TASHMAN, GRACE BRADLEY and thirty others, figuratively speaking, round out the entertainment. Eddie Sutherland directed. Released September 15th. →

HE PETS They say GARY COOPER says it with pets instead of with flowers. In PARAMOUNT'S" ONE SUNDAY AFTERNOON" he says it in enough ways to FAY WRAY and FRANCES FULLER to thrill every flapper in the audience from stem to stern . . after you see this picture you'll go home and give your wife a great big kiss . . . if you have a wife. NEIL HAMILTON and ROSCOE KARNS are in the cast. STEPHEN ROBERTS directed. Released September 1st.

"BOY, SHE'S STACKED!" This exclamation came from a visiting collegian as he got a load of CLAUDETTE COLBERT as PARAMOUNT'S "TORCH SINGER". You'll see what he meant after you've taken in a few of the curves she throws in this picture . . . and you'll probably carry the torch for her, too. DAVID MANNERS, RICARDO CORTEZ, LYDA ROBERTI, and, last and least, BABY LEROY are in this picture. GEORGE SOMNES and ALEXANDER HALL directed. Released September 8th.

JENKINS' COLYUM

Scotts Bluff, Neb.

Dear Herald:

If you want to know what the wide open spaces look like, just drive from Hot Springs, South Dakota, to Scotts Bluff, Nebraska, over the hills and canyons of southwest South Dakota and Northwest Nebraska, a distance of 220 miles and only two theatres on the way, Harrison and Mitchell, Nebraska.

When you get out in those hills and come to the forks of the road, be sure to take the other fork; if you don't you will be on the wrong road. We took the wrong one several times. They don't know what a road sign is in that country. Those ranchmen all know the road and think the public ought to. If you see a herd of antelope along the road don't shoot any, for it is against the law. And don't shoot any buffalo, for they might turn out to be cattle. One old bull got right in the middle of the road and refused to get out of the way until we rammed into him and then he tried to kick the headlights off of April Shower, which made April Shower mad and she plowed into him again. They better not monkey with April Shower, she's a bad actor. We named her April Shower because it always rains every time she takes the road, even in the middle of January. That's why states never have drought when she goes into 'em.

Judge Williamsdorfer used to operate the theatre at Harrison, but the Judge became so busy performing marriages and filing petitions for divorces and alimony that he had to turn the theatre over to his son, who is now the present operator. When the junior Williamsdorfer introduced us to his wife she said, "Well, you are meeting a real Jenkins fan." And we said, "Whatja mean Jenkins fan?" and she replied, "I never miss a word you write, I'd go crazy without the Herald." And we said, "Well, we have heard of baseball fans, football fans, fight fans and Charlie Ruggles and Clark Gable fans, but you are the only Jenkins fan on record that we have ever heard of and we'd like your photograph for the Herald, it would be a novelty." The Williamsdorfers are mighty delightful folks.

It hasn't rained at Harrison but once since Noah landed on the hills just north of the town, and it is so dry around there now that if you spit on the grass it will set it afire, but in spite of that, the Harrison folks like to go to the movies because the manager gives them the best there is on the market. If our wife ever files a petition for divorce we hope she files it in Judge Williamsdorfer's court, because he's not very strong for this alimony stuff.

Billy Ostenburg is playing Charlie Ruggles in "Mama Loves Papa" in his Egyptian theatre here in Scottsbluffs tonight, and will we go see it? Do we ever miss our old favorite Charlie? Well, you tell 'em, Oscar. If we might be permitted to pass judgment we would say that Billy would play to as many people had his theatre cost $30,000 less than what it did. The Egyptian is fine enough for Broadway but there are no Broadway people out here; if there are, they are looking for a job. If this Platte valley ever fails in a crop it will be because it has quit snowing on the eastern slope of the Rocky mountains, from which the Platte river has its rise, and it will never quit snowing up there so long as the democrats have anything to do with it; they are strong for landslides, and snowslides.

We tried to inveigle Billy into a game of golf, but that baby is afraid of us, he knows our reputation.

Irrigation has made this Platte valley the garden spot of the world, and that's taking in a lot of country. The sugar factories will produce enough sugar to sweeten the soured disposition of every prohibitionist in the country, and their potatoes grow so big that a bushel of 'em will fill a barrel. It's a great country, Mabel, if you ask us.

Next Saturday and Sunday we expect to be in North Platte, Nebraska, to see our Neligh Antelopes wipe up the earth with Wyoming, Colorado and New Mexico in the American Legion junior baseball regional contest, and if they don't win we will have to wire the HERALD for funds, for we'll be broke, yes sir, broke, flat broke. After that they will go to Topeka, Kansas, to contest for the championship of the west half of the United States and then on to New Orleans to win the championship of the United States, but whoa Bill, let's not get in too big a hurry, they might lose at North Platte, but if they do we will have to panhandle something to eat.

Oshkosh, Neb.

Gordon H. Cary recently opened a theatre at Minatare. Minatare is located in the sugar beet belt and the sugar factory there will employ about 300 men when they start operating and this ought to make business good at Cary's Aladdin theatre. Mr. Cary is also the postmaster and this ought to help out should the theatre be inclined to run in the red.

Bayard, Nebraska has become the Oberammergau (if that's the way to spell it) of America. This is where they stage the passion play annually, beginning on June 15th of each year and running for four days. This play is presented in a canyon at the foot of Chimney Rock, a noted landmark on the old Oregon Trail about five miles south of Bayard. The play is very similar to the original passion play except that the character of Christ is omitted.

The play was written by the Rev. Louis H. Kaub and is staged and directed by the Rev. John H. Patterson and is given each year under the auspices of the Federated Churches, both Protestant and Catholic. The acoustics are said to be so perfect that voices can be heard distinctly for half a mile and a choir of 300 voices has been heard in Bayard five miles away. The presentation of this play is regarded the greatest event of the year in western Nebraska. Last year 27,000 people attended the play, representing seventeen states. There is no admission charge, the expenses being provided for by freewill offerings. Here Nature has provided a natural amphitheatre with perfect acoustics and it only remained for man to make use of it, which the people of Bayard and vicinity are happy to do.

Mr. and Mrs. Jenses are still keeping the doors of their theatre open here in Oshkosh. Mrs. Jenses says that every time Old Man Depression tries to sneak in without buying a ticket she slams the door in his face and gives him a kick in the pants. They are mighty nice people and we hope Oshkosh gets some rain pretty quick, for it is getting drier around there than a senator from Louisiana.

Jazz orchestras and radio crooners consider themselves artists. It's quite an art to file a cross-cut saw too. Outside of that everything ought to be all right.

Curtis Dall, son-in-law of President Roosevelt, has been named chairman of the board. The Federal Radio Commission has not as yet assigned call letters to the main station.

Offers Insurance Plan

Hancock Company, Inc., New York insurance brokers, has announced an easy premium basis for exhibitors to pay insurance premiums over a period running from eight to 24 months. All types of insurance except life are included under the new payment policy.

William Sexton Dead

William F. Sexton, owner of the Family theatre, Toronto, for 25 years and well known Canadian independent exhibitor, died last week at the age of 83. An only son, Mr. Sexton, a retired sea captain, had 13 sisters. His son, William, will continue the theatre.

Allied

MAN'S LAND, A: Hoot Gibson—Good average business. Seemed to please. Recording below standard in spots. Played July 28-29.—Avece T. Waldron, Blue Moon Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Suburban patronage.

Columbia

BELOW THE SEA: Ralph Bellamy, Fay Wray—Pretty good picture but not near the picture "Submarine" was. Did not draw at the box office. Running time, 80 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

DARING DANGER: Tim McCoy—Good business on this. Played August 5-6.—Avece T. Waldron, Blue Moon Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Suburban patronage.

DECEPTION: Leo Carrillo, Thelma Todd—A fairly good program picture and good for one day only. This is packed full of thrills and excitement and interest from beginning to end. Would make an excellent Saturday picture as it contains plenty of action. Showing a wrestling ring and how the hero turns them all up. The patrons seemed to like it fairly well but as a rule they are getting about as bad as gangster pictures. Running time, 64 minutes. Played August 9.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

SOLDIERS OF THE STORM: Regis Toomey, Anita Page—Nice little program picture, clean in every respect. Running time, 69 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

WHAT PRICE INNOCENCE?: Willard Mack, Jean Parker—Excellent program picture that every father, mother, son and daughter should see. The delicate subject it deals with is handled in a very fine way, the picture is clean in every respect. Willard Mack and Jean Parker play their parts excellently. It's a good drawing card. Grossed more at the box office than many socalled specials. I think this picture should be played in every theatre. You exhibitors that have not yet bought this picture are missing a good bet as Columbia sells this picture at a live and let live price. Running time, 64 minutes. Played August 13-14-15.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

WHITE EAGLE: Buck Jones—I can play these on Saturdays and Sundays for the country trade and will outgross any other program I can put on. Running time, 65 minutes. Played July 15-16.—Henry Bettendorf, Opera House, Foley, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

First National

CROONER, THE: David Manners, Ann Dvorak—Held this so long it cashed in on present musical vogue. Pleased women, but men kicked a little. Played August 3-4.—Avece T. Waldron, Blue Moon Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Suburban patronage.

HEROES FOR SALE: Richard Barthelmess, Loretta Young—Another very fine picture, but not the type that appeals to the average theatregoer. This is a modern version of the depression and, of course, people do not like it. They go to the theatre to laugh and forget the depression. However, I personally enjoyed the picture from start to finish. Barthelmess, Loretta Young and Aline MacMahon all turn in some very good acting. Running time, 76 minutes. Played August 7.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

LITTLE GIANT, THE: Edward G. Robinson—This is 100 per cent picture in every respect. My patrons thought it wonderful. Robinson always brings them in for me. Running time, 74 minutes. Played August 4-5.—J. E. Weber, Princess Theatre, Chelsea, Mich. Town and country patronage.

MIND READER, THE: Warren William—A very good picture any day. If you can get them in they will like it. Running time, 68 minutes. Played August 11-12.—J. E. Weber, Princess Theatre, Chelsea, Mich. Town and country patronage.

Fox

ADORABLE: Janet Gaynor, Henry Garat—"Adorable," surely the right name for this one, especially for Janet Gaynor, for she is very adorable in this picture. She is the whole cheese, although her supporters are all kings and queens of the highness types with a brogue hard to understand. Over the heads of our show going people and in this part of the country. Running time 85 minutes.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant Miss. General patronage.

BEST OF ENEMIES: Marian Nixon, Buddy Rogers—A fine comedy picture. Morgan and Cawthorn stole the picture away from a couple of good, clever kids. Good, clean comedy that pleased them all. People want to laugh and will at clean comedy, where the roughnecks walk out on smut. They have just got to clean them up before we can get the business back on pictures.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

BEST OF ENEMIES: Marion Nixon, Buddy Rogers—Clean as a hound's tooth. Entertaining. Rogers sings one song. Frank Morgan and Joseph Cawthorn are main players and they are good. Several compliments. Said it was good to see this for a change. Good small town picture. Played August 3-4.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

BEST OF ENEMIES: Buddy Rogers, Marian Nixon—Very good picture. It is so different from the ordinary run of pictures. Running time, 75 minutes. —P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

CAVALCADE: Clive Brook, Diana Wynyard—An outstanding picture that brought record business. Could have run another day had it been free. Running time, 110 minutes. Played August 4-5.—Wm. A. Crute Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

DEVIL'S IN LOVE, THE: Victor Jory, Loretta Young—Don't know where they get the title. A story of the Foreign Legion, and not much entertainment to it and just another picture. They are going to kill Loretta Young if they give her many more like this and "Midnight Mary." Played August 8-9.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

HOLD ME TIGHT: James Dunn, Sally Eilers—Dunn and Eilers never fail. They are a great team and always get business for me. Running time, 72 minutes. Played August 2.—J. E. Weber, Princess Theatre, Chelsea, Mich. Town and country patronage.

HOLD ME TIGHT: James Dunn, Sally Eilers—It is a mixed society-loving drama ending with one of the biggest and hardest fights ever shown on the screen. They do not know what music is in this one. They take it out in talking, loving and fighting. Running time, 71 minutes.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

HUMANITY: Boots Mallory, Ralph Morgan—If Fox had left the title of the original story on this, "The Road to Heaven," it might have meant something at the box office. As it was this title does not mean a thing and the stars do not draw, so it fell perfectly flat at the box office. Otherwise, it is merely a nice little story that no one would give a second thought to.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

HUMANITY: Boots Mallory, Ralph Morgan, Alexander Kirkland—This is a good picture but a poor title. Will please them if you can get them inside.—H. G. Stettmund, Jr., H. & S. Theatre, Chandler, Okla. Small town patronage.

I LOVED YOU WEDNESDAY: Warner Baxter, Elissa Landi. Nothing to recommend. In addition to being a picture that's poison to a small town we were unfortunate to get a print that was poorly developed and the recording was so poor we had to pull the picture and book in something else. Poor story; just talk, talk, talk. Elissa Landi acts goofy in this. Victor Jory will never be an actor, same expression no matter what the scene calls for. Had more walkouts than any picture we ever ran. Running time, 77 minutes. Played July 30-August 2.—W. A. Collins, New Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. Small town patronage.

LIFE IN THE RAW: George O'Brien—A Zane Grey story that is the best western that has come out of the can in many a day. Will please your patrons practically 100 per cent. Did a nice busines for us.—H. G. Stettmund, Jr., H. & S. Theatre, Chandler, Okla. Small town patronage.

MAN WHO DARED, THE: Preston Foster, Zita Johann—Personally, I liked this picture. It will go over big in a Bohemian setlement. A true story of the life of Anton Cermak, Chicago's late mayor. Tie up with Z. C. B. J. organization and clean up. Schools will cooperate also. This is a clean family picture and will satisfy. What a relief to play a picture of this type. Very timely on account of World's Fair.—A. G. Miller, Lyric Theatre, Atkinson, Neb. General patronage.

ROBBERS' ROOST: George O'Brien, Maureen O'Sullivan—Fox evidently thinks that they have a Clark Gable in George O'Brien. There was too much mush and while there was some action and a fair story, there was a little too much sentiment to suit the Saturday crowd.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

SAILOR'S LUCK: James Dunn, Sally Eilers—Good light entertainment. Running time 75 minutes. Played August 5-6.—Henry Bettendorf, Opera House, Foley, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

TRICK FOR TRICK: Ralph Morgan, Victor Jory—This a crazy production. Ought to have been a serial. It is good and big and those that could keep track of the plot liked it. Fine acting, great scenery, and a lot of story if you can find it.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

WARRIOR'S HUSBAND, THE: Elissa Landi, Ernest Truex—A good picture with an out-of-the ordinary story. Will please the vast majority of your patrons.—H. G. Stettmund, Jr., H. & S. Theatre, Chandler, Okla. Small town patronage.

ZOO IN BUDAPEST: Loretta Young, Gene Raymond—Not so hot. Pleased about 40 per cent. Running time, 84 minutes. Played August 6-7.—J. E. Weber, Princess Theatre, Chelsea Mich. Town and country patronage.

MGM

DEVIL'S BROTHER, THE: Laurel and Hardy, Dennis King, Thelma Todd—Rather disappointing, especially to the younger folks. Stan Laurel and Oliver Hardy are good drawing cards but an audience that comes to fill up on belly laughs goes away hungry.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwingsburg, Pa. Small town patronage.

DEVIL'S BROTHER, THE: Laurel and Hardy—With this pair you have to laugh or bust. It did not draw those that were looking for a society love affair, but those who knew this pair came and got what they wanted—laughs, fun and entertainment from start to finish, and the recording perfect. It's OK every part of it. Running time, 95 minutes.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

FAST LIFE: William Haines, Madge Evans, Clifi Edwards—Excellent picture that pleased. Cost me 40 per cent over usual film rent and did not draw anything over regular business, however. I should know better next time. Played July 30-August 2.—Avece T. Waldron, Blue Moon Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Suburban patronage.

PEG O' MY HEART: Marion Davies, Onslow Stevens—Boys, here is a real show! Marion Davies can strut her stuff if given the right story, and this one fits her like a glove. Clean, wholesome and most entertaining. The whole cast simply shines and special mention must be made of the finest tenor singer that ever stood before a microphone. The haunting melodies sung in this picture will ring in your ears for weeks. What a show! We have a Pennsylvania Dutch population and it takes force to open their pocket books, but they did enjoy this picture. It drew above the average, and better still, it satisfied! Forget all about "Strange Interlude," "Rasputin," "Gabriel Over the White House," etc. In "Peg O' My Heart" you have something real that gets under your skin like nobody's business. Be kind to it and get back of your advertising with a consciousness that you are not exaggerating, that you do have a picture that is not going to get you in wrong with your public! After all, that's the point.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwingsburg, Pa. Small town patronage.

REUNION IN VIENNA: John Barrymore Diana Wynyard—A perfect answer to "What's wrong with the movies." Plenty of squawks on this one. Story is about a woman who had an illicit love affair for four years with John Barrymore. Then she marries an innocent doctor. J. B. tries to "make her" while she is married and she does her best to fight him off.

Other scenes and dialogue shows what a "devil" John is with the women. None seemingly can resist his charms.—H. G. Stettmund, Jr., H. & S. Theatre, Chandler, Okla. Small town patronage.

SECRET OF MADAME BLANCHE, THE: Irene Dunne, Phillips Holmes—Had many favorable comments on this feature and consider it better than average. — Henry Bettendorf, Opera House, Foley, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

SMILIN' THROUGH: Norma Shearer, Fredric March, Leslie Howard—Everything a picture should be. Nuf sed.—Amuzu Theatre, Inc., Inman, S. C. General patronage.

STORM AT DAYBREAK: Kay Francis, Nils Asther, Walter Huston, Phillips Holmes—Here is a woman's picture. We have had so few lately, and it will be entertaining for most men. I call it good entertainment. Music exceptionally good and settings beautiful. Nils Asther is hard to understand, recording uneven, have to change volume control constantly. Played August 6-7.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

Monogram

FIGHTING CHAMP: Bob Steele—A real western and, we think, Bob's best. Out of the ordinary too in that the star puts up an excellent exhibition of boxing. A good picture for Friday and Saturday.—Amuzu Theatre, Inc., Inman, S. C. General patronage.

HIDDEN VALLEY: Bob Steele—Good kid business; adults, fair. Picture thrilling, but ending very abrupt. Played July 21-22.—Avece T. Waldron, Blue Moon Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Suburban patronage.

RETURN OF CASEY JONES: Charles Starrett, Ruth Hall—A railroad drama with all the thrills and excitement that we have come to look for in this class of pictures; will be liked by all who crave action melodrama. One exhibitor in a recent issue of the Herald complained about the sound in this. On our equipment, which is an independent outfit, this sounded OK. Drawing power average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

Paramount

BEDTIME STORY, A: Maurice Chevalier, Baby LeRoy—So much has been said about this baby, there is no need to say more except you can tell your patrons anything you want to about him and he'll live up to all you say. Of course, we miss Jeannette MacDonald singing with Chevalier and there's very little romance in this picture, so step hard on the baby angle. Business was disappointing, as outside of a splendid matinee, to which all the women flocked, we had a very small house each night.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

BEDTIME STORY, A: Maurice Chevalier, Baby LeRoy—I think this is the most entertaining picture that Maurice ever made but the Baby stole the picture. Patrons left the theatre smiling, and that is what you like to see these days. Running time, 86 minutes. Played August 13-14.—J. E. Weber, Princess Theatre, Chelsea, Mich. Town and country patronage.

EAGLE AND THE HAWK, THE: Fredric March, Cary Grant, Jack Oakie—This one has no love interest and does have a sad ending, but it drew good business and pleased. Fredric March is superb and is still proving he was entitled to that Academy award. Cary Grant and Jack Oakie are also splendid. In all an outstanding picture.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

GAMBLING SHIP: Cary Grant, Benita Hume—Good. Well liked. Good Friday-Saturday picture, plenty of thrills. Business above average. Played August 3-5.—W. A. Collins, New Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. Small town patronage.

GIRL IN 419: James Dunn, Gloria Stuart—Rather "talky" and slightly hard to follow. Not much action to it as it is laid entirely within a hospital. Pleased fairly well, but did not draw the usual Saturday business.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

HELLO, EVERYBODY: Kate Smith—Less than average business four days. The picture is tried and true plot, so threadbare it will give you the willies to look at it. Suggest that in the event Kate Smith means anything to play; if not, set it out.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

HORSE FEATHERS: Four Marx Brothers—Never have been able to get average business on Marxes at regular prices, so put this on bargain night and got fair business. I wish to goodness they would clean up Groucho's songs and dialogue before his next picture. Played July 12-13.—Avece T. Waldron, Blue Moon Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Suburban patronage.

IF I HAD A MILLION: Gary Cooper, Wynne Gibson, Richard Bennett—About average summer gross. Picture pleased all. Played July 9-11.—Avece T. Waldron, Blue Moon Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Suburban patronage.

INTERNATIONAL HOUSE: W. C. Fields, Peggy Hopkins Joyce, Stuart Erwin—This picked up on the second night. A sure sign it was liked. Drew a little above average business. We concentrated our advertising on Fields and he did not disappoint us, but Burns and Allen, Stuart Erwin and all the rest in the cast certainly delivered their share of the fun. —A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

INTERNATIONAL HOUSE: Peggy Hopkins Joyce, Burns and Allen, W. C. Fields and radio stars—This picture missed fire for some reason and I cannot tell just where it is, unless it was that there was not more dance sequences and more music. W. C. Fields was not so hot, he is using the same old stuff that he used some eight years back when he flopped and he has not added any to his popularity in this one with his "My little tomato" and that line of hooey. Peggy Hopkins Joyce is an eyeful all right. She has that definite "it." That helped to some extent.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

INTERNATIONAL HOUSE: Peggy Hopkins Joyce, Stuart Erwin, W. C. Fields and radio stars—Those that saw this picture seemed to enjoy it as I heard them all laughing all the way through. Not much story to it. Fade in and fade out from one thing to another. Recording perfect. Running time, 7 reels.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

LUXURY LINER: George Brent, Zita Johann, Frank Morgan—A most interesting picture taken entirely on ocean liner, done by capable folks of the screen and should be a good picture for any theatre. We failed to get any business and that's that.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

MAMA LOVES PAPA: Charlie Ruggles, Mary Boland—Very good comedy. Created good word of mouth advertising. Believe better played away from Sunday as no young romance that will appeal to young couples. Good story, good acting and direction, lots of laughs. Running time, 69 minutes. Played August 6-9.—W. A. Collings, New Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. Small town patronage.

MIDNIGHT CLUB: Clive Brook, George Raft, Helen Vinson, Alison Skipworth—A very good picture and one that seemed to please all classes. A clever detective story that is full of interest all the way through, with Clive Brook, George Raft and Helen Vinson at their best. A good clean show and OK for children. We played this to a large crowd and everyone left well pleased. Advertise it up and if you can get the people in, you can be sure that they will like it. Running time, 70 minutes. Played August 8.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

MIDNIGHT CLUB: Clive Brook, George Raft, Helen Vinson, Alison Skipworth—Here is a good tense entertainment. You don't know just how it is going to turn out by the end of the first reel. It drew better than usual and was well liked. It was reminiscent of George Raft's earlier success, "Night After Night," and quite a worthy successor. Helen Vinson very charming.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

MURDERS IN THE ZOO: Lionel Atwill, Charles Ruggles—This is just a bit too gruesome. Had several walkouts, mostly women with kids. Running this in double bill helped to offset those who were disappointed. Running time, 61 minutes.—Wm. A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

PICK UP: Sylvia Sidney, George Raft—A fair picture. Ran this in double bill to fair business only. Running time, 75 minutes.—Wm. A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

SUNSET PASS: Tom Keene, Randolph Scott—A very ordinary western, to our way of thinking, that brought very ordinary business.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

Powers

MY WIFE'S FAMILY: Gene Gerrard—A snappy British stage comedy with some spicy lines that sent them out laughing. Very poor business on an off night.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

RKO

GIRL OF THE RIO: Dolores Del Rio, Leo Carrillo—Drew fair American and good Mexican business, but Americans complained about broken dialect and too many Spanish words. Not so good for straight English speaking patronage. Played July 19-20.—Avece T. Waldron, Blue Moon Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Suburban patronage.

IS MY FACE RED: Ricardo Cortez, Helen Twelvetrees—Good bargain night gross and average matinee gross. Picture good. Played July 26-27.—Avece T. Waldron, Blue Moon Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Suburban patronage.

KING KONG: Robert Armstrong, Fay Wray, Bruce Cabot—Good entertainment with a lot of unusual shots. Just a little too much footage that slowed it up in the shots of the jungle and the prehistoric beasts. Another picture that the technique was peddled in the Popular Mechanics as to how it was done and that is not so good and the less that the public knows of the magic of camera and production of pictures would be better for the box office. The public likes still to believe in fairy tales. The Popular Mechanics carried two full pages in a recent issue that shows just how dumb the producers are to let things like this come to the attention of the public. The less the public knows of how pictures are made the better. No other business but movies follows this practice. Try and get the inside of the Utilities and other big business? It can't be done but it can in the producing end of pictures. Why?—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia, Ind. General patronage.

MELODY CRUISE: Charles Ruggles, Phil Harris —A wonderful picture, with one exception. Why did the producers ruin such a great picture with such trash as "rhymer conversation"? The ice skating ballet is excellent and I have seen nothing to beat it. Plenty of comedy, music and singing. Business about average but in most places it should fill the house. This is good clean entertainment for young and old. Running time, 74 minutes. Played August 10-11.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

MELODY CRUISE: Phil Harris, Charles Ruggles—A very good, entertaining picture. Some good singing, very little dancing. One of the finest novelty ballets on ice skates I ever saw. Ruggles the funniest drunk on the screen, and a lot of pretty women. I call it a good picture, too big for a program picture and not quite big enough for a special, but it will satisfy most any crowd. Played August 6-7.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

RENEGADES OF THE WEST: Tom Keene—Not much. Keene is worse than Mix about fighting five or six huskies single handed. Played July 5.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

SAILOR BE GOOD: Jack Oakie, Vivienne Osborne —Only fair. The comedy in this helped, as I ran this in a double bill, but the fight scenes were unconvincing. Running time, 66 minutes.—Wm. A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

SECRETS OF THE FRENCH POLICE: Gwili Andre, Frank Morgan—A good picture but patrons are tiring of this murder mystery cycle of picture, although this has a new angle in using the sound screen to send the victims to their death. Running time, 58 minutes.—Wm. A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

SWEEPINGS: Lionel Barrymore—A picture that will interest every father and mother; a picture that strikes home its powerful lesson without being tiresome; a picture that backs you with confidence to get in personal contact with your best people and tell them to break any engagement in order to see it. These pictures are few and far between. It rings true to life. There is something to it. No big crowd but those who did come liked it and that is more than can be said of 75 per cent of today's product.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Owrigsburg, Pa. Small town patronage.

THIRTEEN WOMEN: Ricardo Cortez, Irene Dunne —Very unpleasant story to very poor business on a very hot night.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

TOPAZE: John Barrymore—Perfect acting in a clever play, but no drawing power.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

United Artists

I COVER THE WATERFRONT: Ben Lyon, Claudette Colbert, Ernest Torrence—They don't make any better entertaining pictures than this one. The stars, all of them, extra good. Story very entertaining. Satisfied them all.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville Mich. General patronage.

SECRETS: Mary Pickford, Leslie Howard—To me this seems about the best of Mary's talking pictures. For the ladies, Mary's display of the dresses of an older day is alone worth the admission price. While "Secrets" covers a period of many years, it is all well knitted together. You have all the popular ingredients for the masses. Romance, thrills, suspense and all well done. Drawing power well above average. —J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

Universal

BE MINE TONIGHT: Jan Kiepura, Magda Schneider—A good pleasing picture. Very good for Sunday. Running time, 78 minutes. Played July 30-31.—J. E. Weber, Princess Theatre, Chelsea, Mich. Town and country patronage.

BIG CAGE, THE: Clyde Beatty, Anita Page—Here is the most wonderful effort that has ever been made for the screen to show a real wild animal act, and you can bill this as the greatest show on earth and tell 'em the truth. Too much cannot be said in favor of Clyde Beatty, and besides being the greatest cat trainer in the world he is also a very good and pleasing performer.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester Ind. General patronage.

COHENS AND KELLYS IN TROUBLE: Charles Murray, George Sidney—Very good comedy, the best these two have made for a long time. Running time, 70 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

HER FIRST MATE: Zasu Pitts, Slim Summerville—Just fair, and draw far under former productions by these two stars. Universal is killing these two by putting out three pictures in less than seven months. Two or possibly three a year with the right kind of story and direction would be plenty for Zasu and Slim, but because "They Just Had to Get Married" (which was a natural because of the title) clicked at the box office, they rushed in two more "quickies," bringing them too frequent. Hal Roach knows his onions when he makes a Laurel-Hardy at the start of the season and one more seven or eight months later, thus not tiring the public with too frequent appearances. This, I think, applies in particular to Pitts and Summerville, and comedy stars. Played August 13.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. General patronage.

HIDDEN GOLD: Tom Mix—Prize fighting, prison breaks, bank robberies, everything in this western. Fair Saturday business.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

KING OF JAZZ: Paul Whiteman—Went into a tail spin here. Reissues n.g. at any time and especially this one on account of no story. Just some old worn out songs connected with dirty jokes. (These smutty jokes are what the public want (??) to hear, so be sure and stress them in all your advertising.—H. G. Stettmund, Jr., H. & S. Theatre, Chandler, Okla. Small town patronage.

MY PAL, THE KING: Tom Mix—Far less than usual Mix gross on account of title, but picture satisfied. Played July 14-15.—Avece T. Waldron, Blue Moon Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Suburban patronage.

OUT ALL NIGHT: Slim Summerville, Zasu Pitts—This picture sure gets the laughs and it will draw better second night showing for it gets publicity by word of mouth advertising. But this mother, who has watched over her son in rearing him, butts in and wants to look after him after he is married. It makes real mothers who come to our theatre feel that they carry this to the extreme.—Walter Odom Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

PRIVATE JONES: Lee Tracy—Good. Liked by most of them. Running time, 80 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

THEY JUST HAD TO GET MARRIED: Slim Summerville, Zasu Pitts—Nice summer receipts. Picture pleased audience, though I could not get excited over it. Right now the public does not want to be educated nor made to think; it just wants to laugh, be entertained and to forget. Played July 16-18.—Avece T. Waldron, Blue Moon Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Suburban patronage.

Warners

EX-LADY: Bette Davis—This is a splendid picture. Star and cast fine. Story a little dangerous in spots, but it gave good satisfaction. The young generation seems to like these kind of pictures, and the old folks have got tired of kicking about them. But just the same we don't get the business on them we used to.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

42D STREET: Warner Baxter, Ruby Keeler, Bebe Daniels, Dick Powell—Very good Sunday and Monday business, and pleased 100 per cent.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

42D STREET: Warner Baxter, Bebe Daniels, Ruby Keeler, Dick Powell—Return showing and pleased all who saw it. Such pictures as this will always please the producers, exhibitors and the whole picture-going public, for it has in it what they all want, and the recording is most wonderful. Running time, 12 reels.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

HARD TO HANDLE: James Cagney—Drew average business and pleased all. Played July 23-25.—Avece T. Waldron, Blue Moon Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla. Suburban patronage.

PICTURE SNATCHER: James Cagney—Here is one that seems to be made to order for Cagney. He has a real story in which to display his talents. There are a couple of sizzly sex spots in which Alice White tries to vamp Cagney. Everything moves with machine-gun like swiftness. Drawing power good. The best midweek business in several weeks.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

WORKING MAN, THE: George Arliss, Bette Davis—This one is good and was well liked by our patrons.—H. G. Stettmund, Jr., H. & S. Theatre, Chandler, Okla. Small town patronage.

World Wide

CROOKED CIRCLE, THE: Ben Lyon, Zasu Pitts, Irene Purcell—Very good comedy mystery drama. Running time, 67 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

FORESMAN SHOWS HOW IT'S DONE

When Frank C. Foresman, of the Ritz theatre at West Point, Miss., went direct to his community with a special preview to put over a picture, he did just the right thing. When he held off from reporting to "What the Picture Did for Me," he was doing the wrong thing. Now he's in the fold. The point is, Foresman, the comment of each exhibitor reporting has exactly the same weight as the comment of any other exhibitor. That's the strength of the department. Here's what he writes:

"I have never offered anything to this column before, for the principal reason that I doubted that my comments would have any weight or worth to anyone. But after reading one exhibitor's remarks on the foreign production, 'Be Mine Tonight,' released by Universal, I am aroused to the point of taking a little time off to tell my story.

"I can heartily agree that most of this type of entertainment means little or nothing in the smaller towns. However, on this particular picture I worked up a nice business by first appealing to the type of patronage that likes clean entertainment and good music. To do this I arranged a special preview in advance of date and invited the heads of all the civic organizations in town, all music teachers, band masters, presidents of all the church auxiliaries, etc. The preview went over ok, pleasing them all, I think. Then I quit. I had done my part; they did the rest. Result, good business."

PHANTOM THUNDERBOLT: Ken Maynard—A great action picture. Lots of harmless fighting. Ken can ride but as a fighter I don't think he ever will be world's champion. Played on a double bill and the western fans hollered and I guess they liked it. But Ken Maynard has made a lot of better pictures than this one.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

COLLEGE GIGOLOS: Sunrise Comedy—Patrons did not go very strong on this. Running time, 17 minutes.—Henry Bettenodrf, Opera House, Foley, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

WEDDING BELLS: Krazy Kat—Very good. Running time, 8 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

Educational

HOLLYWOOD DIET: Terry-Toon—Very poor. Running time, one reel.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

PAIR OF SOCKS, A: Moran and Mack—Kept my Saturday night house in almost a continuous uproar. Running time, two reels.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

MGM

BARGAIN OF THE CENTURY: Zasu Pitts Thelma Todd—A very funny comedy of two reels. Rough stuff, but funny and not disgusting.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

CUBA, LAND OF THE RHUMBA: FitzPatrick Traveltalk—Some music and dancing, which improves. A good single reel where you need one of this class.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

LUNCHROOM, THE: Flip the Frog—Mighty poor offering. Not much to these frog cartoons lately. Plenty of action but no entertainment. Not a laugh.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

ME AN' MY PAL: Laurel and Hardy—Not as good as some. On a par with others.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

NATURE IN THE WRONG: Charley Chase—Another knockout comedy. Give it a preferred position.—J. J. Goetz, Monroe Theatre Company, Quality Amusements, Monroe, Wis. General patronage.

OVER THE COUNTER: Colortone Musical Revue—Very good. Some remarked best short they had seen for a long time. Running time 20 minutes.—Henry Bettendorf, Opera House, Foley, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

RIO THE MAGNIFICENT: PitzPatrick Traveltalks—Excellent. Shows city of Rio de Janeiro—and what a beautiful city.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

THEIR FIRST MISTAKE: Laurel and Hardy—Usual good performance from this pair. Running time, 18 minutes.—Henry Bettendorf, Opera House, Foley, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

Paramount

BALANCE: Sports Eye View—A most interesting reel illustrating how necessary it is to keep one's balance in diving, tight rope walking, skiing and dancing. Running time, one reel.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

BETTY BOOP'S BIRTHDAY PARTY: Betty Boop and Bimbo—This is a good cartoon comedy with lots of laughs and good music. Everyone enjoyed it, especially the kids. A good filler on any program and sure to please. Running time, 9 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford N. C. General patronage.

HOLLYWOOD ON PARADE: No. 10—A baby orchestra, a marionette show, Roscoe Ates, Burns and Allen and other stars all help to make this number one of the best in this series. Running time, one reel.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

HOLLYWOOD ON PARADE: No. 11—With little Jackie Searle as master of ceremonies. This introduces Charles Ray, Fifi D'Orsay, Frank Fay, Barbara Stanwyck, Kate Smith singing "Here Lies Love," and Wesley Ruggles and Arlene Judge. This was very interesting.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

HUSBAND'S REUNION: Walter Catlett—When "Husband No. 1" and "Husband No. 2" meet, there is bound to be some fun. Our folks liked this very well. Running time, two reels.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence Ky. Small town patronage.

LION AND THE HOUSE, THE: Sennett—Lloyd Hamilton is still good for a laugh. A tame lion and George Stone helped to make this only fairly good. Running time, two reels.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

PHARMACIST, THE: W. C. Fields—Really clever, but did not get over with our weekend audience. Would have been better if we had used it on Monday-Tuesday dates. Running time, two reels.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

POPEYE, THE SAILOR: Talkartoon—This is a knockout. Give it a preferred position.—J. J. Goetz, Monroe Theatre Company Quality Amusements, Monroe, Wis. General patronage.

SING, SISTERS, SING: Three X Sisters—The songs in this include "Coming Through the Rye" and "The Little German Band." An exceptionally good reel. Running time, one reel.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

RKO

LOOPS, MY DEAR: Harry Sweet—Good flying stunt comedy.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

MERCHANT OF MENACE, THE: Edgar Kennedy—Funnier than usual.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

THROWN OUT OF JOINT: Harry Sweet—Two reels of slapstick. Some laughed and some went out. I call it a poor excuse for a comedy.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

Universal

BEAUTY ON BROADWAY: Radio Series with Walter Winchell—A radio series with a part of one song. Nothing to recommend in this one. Nothing objectionable—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison Ark. Small town patronage.

CROWD SNORES, THE: Pooch the Pup cartoon—

Good cartoon filler.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

ROCKABYE COWBOY: James Gleason—A really laughable comedy.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

Warner Vitaphone

BOSKO IN DUTCH: Looney Tune—Good. Running time, 7 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

BOSKO IN PERSON: Looney Tune—Pretty good. Running time, 8 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

HIGH SPOTS OF THE FAR EAST: E. M. Newman World Adventure Series—Just another World Adventure Series as interesting as any of the previous ones. Showing many interesting spots in India, China and other countries. These are very educational and interesting, but our patrons do not care for them. Running time, 9 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford N. C. General patronage.

LEASE BREAKERS, THE: Melody Master Series—Very good. All these band acts are good. Running time, 7 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General Patronage.

NORTHERN EXPOSURE: Broadway Brevity—Another Broadway Brevity in colors. Plenty of pretty girls, good music and wonderful dance routines. The ice scenes in this one are beautiful and very entertaining. Warner certainly has the musical comedies and all of them are excellent. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

ORGAN GRINDER, THE: Merry Melody—Good cartoon comedy. Running time, 7 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

RED SHADOW, THE: Bernice Claire, Alexander Gray—Pretty good. A little too much singing and not enough dancing. Running time, 18 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

RED SHADOW, THE: Broadway Brevity—A wonderful two-reel subject. Better than some features.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

YOUNG AND HEALTHY: Merry Melody—Just another cartoon comedy. Music only fair and not up to the standard cartoons from Vitaphone. However, we can overlook this one as the majority are very good. Will please the kids and a few of the older folks. Running time, 9 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

YOUNG AND HEALTHY: Merry Melody—Good. Better than many of the rest. Running time, 7 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

Serials

Universal

CLANCY OF THE MOUNTED: Tom Tyler—This is a well made serial with a real story and no impossible scenes. It has held interest throughout.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

JUNGLE MYSTERY: Tom Tyler—We have so far played seven chapters and find this a good serial if your patrons like wild animals. Kids eat it up.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

Audio Productions Formed To Produce and Distribute

The formation of Audio Productions, Inc., with offices at 250 West 57th street, was announced Monday by W. A. Bach, president. The new organization is a Western Electric licensee and, according to Mr. Bach, will specialize in the production and distribution of "unusual" talking pictures. Films of educational and scientific interest that have demonstrated a definite entertainment value will be handled for theatrical distribution.

Production will be done either in the Bronx or Astoria studios of Eastern Service Studios, or at the Western Service Studios in Hollywood. Production headquarters will be at 2826 Decatur avenue, Bronx, New York.

Kent with New Laboratories

John A. Kent, formerly of DuArt Film Laboratories, is now affiliated with the new Producers Laboratories, Inc., 630 Ninth avenue, New York, as sales manager.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

"WE DO OUR PART"(?)

No exhibitor can display the NRA symbol, conscience clear, unless he allows his manager or managers one day off each week. No theatre operator can expect enthusiasm or box office zeal from a manager now doomed to labor and sweat from morn to midnight, seven days a week. Few managers are given competent assistants, and no conscientious showman will leave his theatre in unskilled hands, even if allowed a day of liberty.

Then what to do? Here is a suggestion from a level-headed, seasoned showman. Put on relief managers, now unemployed through no fault of their own, capable men of experience and judgment. Appoint one man for every six houses to serve as relief for one day in each, thus giving the regular manager a day off without worry, and at the same time easing the theatre unemployment problem.

In the bigger cities, circuit theatres are within easy reaching distance of one another, and other situations can be handled according to location and distance. Where a lesser number of theatres makes a week's work unavailable, then as many days as there are local or nearby theatres under one operation should be arranged.

This is a thought that should be given the fullest consideration. Exhibitors thus will be able to allow the manager that necessary day of rest besides reemploying able, deserving showmen without bearing down heavily upon the theatre payroll.

In our descriptions of various effective campaigns, we have indicated from time to time the willingness of managers concerned to forward in detail to interested members the ways and means of putting over these ideas. Managers taking advantage of these offers have received immediate and helpful cooperation, but the graciousness of Merrill F. Hanna, manager, Hollywood Theatre, Detroit (Mich.), in expressing his thanks to a brother member deserves a bit of a bow.

Some weeks back, we described the local "World's Fair" lobby planted by Morris Kinzler, dynamic old Roxy Theatre ad chief, at which time we stated that Morris would gladly send on the workings of the idea to others who wanted to put it on. Hanna's request received the usual prompt attention, and in return Merrill was nice enough to include Kinzler's name and the Roxy in all advertising.

Obviously, managers are only too happy to assist brother members in putting over workable ideas just for the joy of lending a hand, but Hanna's generous thought lights up the routine of the day's labor with what the French so admirably describe as a "beau geste."

TEST OF FIRE

We are glad to note one of our long nourished pet notions is being brought out into the sunshine and that S. Charles Einfeld, Warner Brothers director of advertising, has hit upon the swell idea of inviting managers in the field to assist on exploitation campaigns for coming pictures.

Having served a long stretch as a home office press book exploitation director, we realize the advantages of such cooperation, insomuch as any idea conceived in the mind of the home office exploiteer, no matter how promising in theory, cannot rank with the exploitation that is actually tried and tested in the theatre.

With the cooperation of able showmen in the field, film company advertising heads should now be able to turn out campaigns that not only promise practical aid to the box office, but can be put on with every confidence that they have come through after a test of fire.

THAT "GET-TOGETHER"

In New York last week, with the help of many local managers, the Round Table Club put on a midnight party, of which you no doubt have been reading for some weeks past. It seemed very fitting that members of the same guild, wrestling long days and nights with similar problems, should come together in good fellowship and for a few hours over kindly brew and good food, relax and bask in an atmosphere of gaiety.

It is with pleasure we state that the gathering was a great success. All present seemed to be having a fine party, and nothing was left undone to assure an evening's pleasure. We point with pride to what can be done by managers desirous of getting together to enjoy each other's company, for what these local members have done so well can be duplicated by managers elsewhere.

This thought has been in our mind since the earliest planning of last week's party, and we trust that its successful culmination will be the means of bringing together, under like auspices, Round Tablers in other parts of the country. We should enjoy being invited.

A. Mike Vogel

MANAGERS REVEL AT ROUND TABLE CLUB MIDNIGHT "GET-TOGETHER"

Packing every corner of the commodious air cooled grill of the Brass Rail Restaurant, theatre managers and others of the industry thoroughly enjoyed themselves at the Summer Midnight "Get-Together" of the metropolitan division of the Managers Round Table Club on Thursday, Aug. 17.

According to comments from everyone present it was a grand party in all respects. The atmosphere and privacy of the grill, the plenteous food and golden lager, the entertainment, the guest stage and screen stars, the good fellowship, all contributed to an evening of joy that will long be remembered by everyone present, and deeply regretted by those who were not present.

Shortly after eleven o'clock the first arrivals hove in view and from then on the boys came thick and fast.

A-Mike Vogel, Club chairman, was busy making all the boys "to hum" and with the arrival of Hal Horne, well known wit and United Artist ad chief, with a flock of celebrities including Gus Edwards, Herb Rawlinson, Walter Futter and others, the gathering got down to the serious business of putting on a large evening.

Special sections were reserved for the swell delegations from the Skouras and Randforce circuits, these boys turning out almost to a man. Unfortunately the Randforce supervisors could not attend, as a last moment meeting called for the same hour changed their plans.

A tasty lunch was next in order, during which Rudy Vastos and His Five Cubanolas, an ace rhumba string ensemble from Havana, appearing by the courtesy of Gus Edwards, entertained the boys with songs, dances and plenty of that hot melody. These boys are going places, and smart managers looking for the unusual might investigate their possibilities.

After the eats, A-Mike bade the company welcome, and turned the meeting over to Hal Horne, who kept the gang in howls with his ideas of improvement of managers' duties under the new deal, and then introduced Gus Edwards, the ever popular Broadway producer and discoverer of countless stage and screen stars.

Gus brought along Jack Liss and Davy Bigelow, two of his recent discoveries, and the boys stopped the show cold with their singing and playing. Gus then took his place at the piano and led the gang in singing many of his famous song successes. Herbert Rawlinson, who went across so big in the stage play "Dinner At Eight" and recently starred in "Universal's "Moonlight and Pretzels," told some of his grand stories.

The fun was kept fast and furious by the gifted Hal, his cracks and gags going over like a fish fry in Harlem. Walter Futter, Jack McKee, Charley Girard and other celebs. could not remain for the evening but managed to take a bow before leaving.

Film companies and novelty suppliers contributed generously with fine souvenirs, and the members carried home "Gold Diggers" and "Voltaire" souvenirs from Warner Brothers, "Scrappy" ties from Columbia, "Mickey Mouse" dolls from United Artists, Mysto puzzles from Charley Streamer, and aprons and caps from Oscar Kaufman.

Among those present: J. B. Reisman, Wm. B. Hill, Ed Burke, Herbert Rawlinson, Joe Rinzler, Ed Finney, Lou Hart, Ed Wallack, Ira Eschay, Gene Hoffman, Leon Lee, Monty Prosser, P. Mann, Murray Reisner, Tom Di Lorenzo, E. Patten, R. Mann, Ted Hodes, L. Morris, James Neville, Jack McKee, Ed Olmstead, Harry Milstein, B. Abrams, Roy Liebman, Sam Handler, Ben Reisner, C. I. Nathanson, Rudy Kuehn, Bill Depperman, Morris Rosenthal, Paul Binstock, Monroe Greenthal, M. J. Baranco, Joe Salmon, Ken Henry, Hal Horne, Walter Futter, Lou Rogers, Bob Goodfried, A. Margulies, Max Cooper, Ben Ostrow, Burt Hoffman, L. Scott, S. Frankenstein, Bert Jackson, Joe Eisenberg, Russ Moon, Paul Hamilton, D. Ardavny, Ben Friedman, Irving Silverman, Joe Reisner, Al Unger, Morris Kinsler, Gus Edwards and six-piece rumba band and three entertainers, Mort Greene, Fred Bartholdi, David Boxes, Jules Fields, Bill Erskine, Kay Kamen, Irving Kiritz, Walt Melvin, Harry Fuchs, Charles Carroll, Jimmy Vogel, Dick Reilly, S. Goldblatt, Murray Bracker, Bruce Gallup, Abe Cohen, Nyman Kessler, R. McGregor, Joe Weisler, Herb Schwartz, Murray Reisner, and many others.

Get a load of these high pressure managers putting over a beer and pretzel campaign at the Round Table party. Notice the air of seriousness with which the worthy members are attacking the food and drink. The boys all voted this a large evening, the stage and screen celebrities present helping with some grand entertainment. What a party!

TIE IN THEATRE "GREATER SEASON" CAMPAIGN TO LOCAL NRA DRIVE

Organized Community Activity To Inaugurate New Season's Product Suggested Sales Stimulator to Help Drive

Civic Authorities, Club Members, Merchants and Schools Can Cooperate With Theatre Manager for Better Business

It is natural to suppose that theatres should and will be among the first to get behind the big publicity drive to put over the NRA. In many cases it will be the theatre manager who will be responsible for any extra community activity. With the inauguration of the new season, your bookings can be tied in advantageously to your local NRA campaign, and smart showmen everywhere are hopping right to it.

In these columns, is listed a number of tried ideas that are and can be utilized to push along the progress of the movement, at the same time selling the theatre and your new pictures. If your community contemplates any such business drive, you no doubt will be invited to join. And if your local organizations have not as yet given it sufficient consideration, you should by all means campaign to enlist all local forces necessary to get things going.

How to tie in with the intent of the NRA; how to take advantage of its impetus in the coming season to hasten the upswing at the box office is a major topic at manager meetings, and the big problem concerning the independent operators.

Joe Salmon, manager of the Riverside Theatre, New York, voices a thought that deserves serious consideration. Joe's idea is that the New Deal is a happy one—that the folks, after all the depression are now looking forward to better times and happier days. The country at large feels better, the buying public wants to feel happier, and with the increase in employment and buying power, the theatre should be among the first to feel the effects of the uplift.

Therefore Salmon inclines to a campaign or drive emphasizing the "happiness" theme, to be called "Greater Happiness Season" or "Motion Picture Happy Show Season." There should be sufficient reasons to follow that advertising angle.

Picture circles are optimistic over the new season's product. From what we have seen and from what we gather, the latest productions strike a high average in box office appeal. That goes for all the producing companies. Film executives are now sold on the possibilities of old time exploitation to put over the product, and this last works right in with the manager's "season" campaign.

Many of you men are pretty well set for the drive; others are now contemplating plans. The following may be of some help, and though not necessarily original, some have been selected from various parts of the country as representative stunts being put on by managers in big towns and small.

Citywide Campaign

Endeavor to enlist the cooperation of your Mayor, other city officials, Chamber of Commerce, lunch clubs, merchant organizations, women's clubs, organized foreign groups, to put over a "Happiness Week." Call a meeting and with the most progressive of your citizenry, lay out a campaign that although centered around your coming product, nevertheless must have the support of your community.

Appoint committees to secure the cooperation of individuals, such as leading merchants, school officials, industry heads and with these committees, plan a series of events that might run a week or more, according to your situation.

Events could include: Inaugural Night at the theatre; "Happiness Season Sales"; special screenings for school children sponsored by educators and women's clubs; NRA stage show with local talent; "Happiness Rural Days," and group nights, among others.

Newspaper Cooperation

Your papers of course are expected to go along with these plans, as of necessity they will benefit by the big "week." Well in advance of the actual campaign starting day, stories should be planted concerning the citywide plans, the publicity of course concentrating on the theatre and product, emphasizing the advantagous results accruing to the community at large, and the necessity of wholehearted cooperation to attain these benefits.

Statements from the Mayor, exhibitor, manager and other well known citizens should accompany these stories, and if possible, pictures of local big shots as well as film stars.

These stories should run daily, whether long or short, but every effort should be made to keep up their continuity, so that when your campaign actually breaks, everyone is anticipatory and ready to join in the proceedings.

Theatre Advertising

Start even in advance of newspaper stories with "coming" trailers, or slides. Then when your stories break, trailer or slide should explain the coming campaign. Tie in with lobby posters, heralds and a few lines of advance in all your display ads. More than the usual posting, including the country districts, should help, and window cards for local stores should also be considered.

Word of Mouth

Your staff can be of great help in spreading the word in the theatre and outside. Ushers, doormen, cashier should have certain set words to say to patrons, such as "Watch for Greater Happiness Season, starting (date)." This can be followed up outside the theatre, through your employees' numerous friends and contacts.

Committeemen or women should inform their organizations fully of the plans and the part each individual is expected to take. Where the manager is a member of a lunch club, chamber of commerce or fraternal lodge, he should be sure to address his fellow members, urging their cooperation by spreading the word to all their clients and customers.

Merchant Cooperation

A series of sales events, called by some such name as "Greater Happiness Season Sales," should be put on by your local stores. All windows should be decorated with picture stuff, sales people should wear some sort of badge or ribbon, the store itself should be decorated and newspapers should put across special co-op pages or sections.

The co-op idea is still practical and in this case especially so, as it should contain optimistic statements as well as display ads from the various cooperating merchants, interviews from film executives, stars and directors that home office ad men should be glad to send along, if your local facilities are inadequate. Publicity star and production mats or cuts are also obtainable free of charge and these of course should go into the section. Plug your coming bookings strongly in this section, at all times selling the idea that with the new deal, your pictures will be bigger and better.

You might also consider the possibilities of a voting contest for the title of "King and Queen," the votes to be given by merchants with every sale, and your papers to print a free voting coupon in advance and during the "week." Whether or not votes should be given with every admission or not depends upon each situation, but whether or not you do so, promote some worthwhile prizes for the winners, and plug this in your publicity, on your screen and in the lobby.

Inaugural Night

Select a starting day on which you have some better picture booked, and put the campaign on with a special showing. This is being done in many spots with a midnight "hollywood" opening and highlight it with guests of honor, such as the Mayor, and other well known locals.

Decorate the theatre in whatever gala fashion your campaign allows, and if possible, break out a few big lamps in the lobby, red carpet or what have you to put it on big. Don't neglect the radio, and if you can't promote a real broadcast, have one of your local announcers speak on a

"mike" hooked onto a lobby loudspeaker.

There should be a committee of welcome circulating around, and stage proceedings should include a few four-minute speakers to "beat the drum" for the drive. Then your Mayor, or prominent club woman, inaugurates the "week" by pressing a button to the booth, or cutting a ribbon that will open the "traveler" and start the feature.

School Children Show

This might be a special screening for the kids sponsored by your clubs and schools, with a few talks from the stage by prominents, or it might be more elaborate with an "NRA stage show" in which the talented youngsters could do their stuff.

In either case, consider the possibilities of a street parade to the theatre, consisting of children from schools carrying banners and flags.

NRA Local Talent Show

The Capitol Theatre in New York put on a successful stage show called "The Spirit of NRA Revue," and you might be able to get something out of this with your local dramatic clubs and other local talent.

Happiness Rural Day

Your farmers and other rural patronage should be encouraged to take part, and this can be emphasized with a special "Rural Day" in which added features should be put on to pull them in from the surrounding territory. In addition to special rural sales at your stores, work on the "fair" idea, in which farmers would be invited to participate in various contests that could include stage appearances in the form of singing, dancing, quartettes, banjo players.

If your situation calls for it, perhaps you can make a deal with local merchants for specially priced tickets to be given only to rurals.

Group Nights

In towns where there are sufficient foreign groups, these should be included in the festivities, and from experience with these nationals they turn out amazingly well when invited to take part. Contacts should be made with their leaders, and by all means dig up native talent from among them. Announce this also in any foreign language papers, for, handled rightly, the response will be highly satisfactory.

The group night idea might be expanded to take in certain local organizations for each night, with special features for their entertainment. Chamber of Commerce, Rotary, Kiwanis and women's clubs nights, with programs by members of these organizations, well advertised, should certainly boost the box office.

These are but a few of the stunts that can be put on, but few or many, we encourage some sort of a "week," NRA or otherwise, to start off the new season. Not only will it help receipts, but it must build up the theatre prestige and good will.

Call it what you will, but plan it for a full week crammed to the top with stage attractions, merchants' sales, parades, contests, for in the movement for better business, the theatre by all means should be a prime mover.—A-MIKE VOGEL.

PRINTING EXPLAINED

Are you following the interesting and instructive series on printing by that keen craftsman, George Schutz? These started in the last issue of the Better Theatres Section of the Motion Picture Herald, and the second, "Printing Terms and Practices," is published in Better Theatres, out today, in which is discussed the processes by which the printer gets the theatre advertisement into type, how type is measured and classified, and other allied matters for the information of those who write and lay out theatre advertising.

Members agree this is one vital subject that can never be exhausted, and look forward with anticipation to the continuation of George's meaty articles. They start from the ABC's of type and type display, and therefore are of interest to the beginner as well as the experienced showman intrigued by the possibilities of word placing.

of the Crescent Theatre, out in Little Rock, Ark., to pull one at his house recently when he played "Cabin in the Cotton." The ad which we are reproducing herewith is self-explanatory.

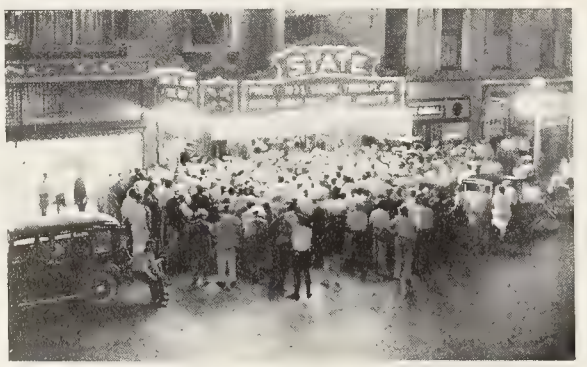
CROWD AT STATE!



The above photo shows the mob that congregated in front of M. H. Chakeres' State Theatre in Springfield, Ohio, when they gave away an Essex Terraplane. From what we can gather, they were very well satisfied with the results of the giveaway, as it created much good-will for the theatre.

BOTWICK PROMOTES BIG DISPLAY SPACE ON TWO CAMPAIGNS

Selling merchants that it was a good time to offer a "cavalcade of compelling values," Manager Harry Botwick, Paramount Theatre, Rutland (Vt.), got himself a nice page of free adds that sold "Cavalcade," including a center spread for the theatre. Stores also got up special windows to tie in with the co-op page.

Harry also sent out a personal endorsement letter to a special list of school teachers, the P.T.A., D.A.R., and the various local women's clubs. Theatre parties of high and normal school pupils from Rutland and nearby communities also attended the showing.

On "Gabriel Over the White House" Botwick repeated a newspaper ad idea that was put over successfully by Al Fowler, at the Strand, Portland (Me.). As the story of the picture hinged on the president's injury due to a tire blowing out, a local rubber company used this angle in selling tires, of course, mentioning the picture and theatre prominently in their ad.

WIRE HAIR TERRIER GIVEAWAY USED BY CALDWELL ON "PEG"

The gift of a swell pup—a real wire-hair terrier—for some fortunate Toledo, Ohio, boy or girl was the pleasant contest idea on "Peg o' My Heart," promoted with one of his papers by Wally Caldwell, who puts over plenty of sock there for the benefit of Loew's Valentine.

The purp, in a specially built home, was planted in the lobby, and seemed quite at home to judge from his expression. When the picture opened, the dog, kennel, et al., was transferred to the children's shoe department of a leading store, where a window display was made up inviting the folks to come in and see Towser. The contest ran in the paper for 10 days with plenty of art, but as Wally forgot to send along the contest details, we will have to wait until he repairs the omission.

Caldwell was one of the smart managers who capitalized on the beer possibilities of Jimmy Durante in "Hell Below," making a tieup with a local brewery for newspaper ads and heralds showing "Schnozzle" imbibing a stein of brew. Another telling stunt on this picture was a radio version of the story from a leading station.

Two of the highlights on the "Looking Forward" campaign were a special card with a message from the house ushers to the patrons on the merits of the picture, distributed on every break. Also hundreds of phone calls to residents, which isn't as expensive as it sounds, as there is no restriction on the number of calls in Toledo.

KNUDSEN STARTLES MADISON WITH YELL "DIGGERS" CAMPAIGN

Harold Knudsen, who stands Madison, Wis., on its ear with his money campaigns at the Capitol Theatre, turns in a broadside on "Gold Diggers" that tops anything he has done recently. Starting with the old Ford parade, Harold hooked in with the town's leading columnist to sponsor the gag, putting it on big by advertising for entries. The prize winners were retained to tour the city plugging the date.

A jig saw puzzle was planted in the town's biggest neighborhood paper with picture publicity in exchange for five passes, and a co-op stunt with 16 country papers assured story breaks in all these publications. An equally effective idea was the promoting of 20-inch ads across the bottoms of Sunday comic strips in return for guest tickets passes.

Three hundred menu covers were printed with front-page theatre ad with ads on back cover to pay for the entire job and distributed in all leading restaurants, and a co-op window strip landed stores of a grocery chain.

A national fraternity convention was sold on the idea of providing a theatre party for accompanying wives, and a poster advertising this was included in a front-page newspaper cut showing fraternity hotel headquarters.

Complete radio coverage, added newspaper space, plenty of art cuts and stories, and additional accessories helped to pile up a gross that, as Harold says, caused the exchange checker to grow dizzy when he saw the statement.

Can we keep the dollar, Harold?

HOCKEY TEAM PLUGS CANADIAN THEATRE FOR "STAN" McNEILL

Probably figuring that an account of his winter activities up there in the cold North would help us to keep cool in these warmish days, Manager "Stan" McNeill, Capitol

"Stan" and the Trophy

Theatre, Smith Falls, Ontario, sends us a delayed letter describing his tieup with a local hockey team.

Stan supplied complete playing outfits for a team in his local league—called it the "Capitol Theatre 6," and the boys advertised the theatre wherever they played within a radius of 35 miles. When the opposing teams came to town, Stan invited the players and their rooters to a special showing of shorts, after which coffee and sandwiches were served free of charge. It was swell build up publicity, as the visitors spread the word of their good time when they got back home, naturally giving the Capitol a nice word to their friends.

Outside of advertising the theatre, the team evidently was good enough to win the league cup, which you can see in the picture with Stan. But take off the overcoat, Mac, don't you know it's summer?

FOREIGN EXPLOITATION!

When it comes to street ballys, we can sit up and take notice of the swell way Budapest turns things out. Sorry we can't give proper credit where it is due, but if the man responsible for this excellent stunt will write and tell us who he is, we'll be glad to do the honors and hope he'll send us more.

BOB HICKS' BALLYHOO PUT OVER "GOLD DIGGERS" IN A BIG WAY

Robert Hicks, manager of the Empire Theatre in San Antonio, put over a very effective campaign in selling "Gold Diggers." Included in his exploitation campaign were two very effective window displays arranged in conjunction with a special feature story in one of the leading fan magazines. The displays, which were placed in two of the most important department stores, featured life-size cut-outs of the chorus.

In addition to the above Hicks planted the special "Gold Diggers" beauty contest in one of the local newspapers, where it ran for two full weeks. He also tied up with his local hotels to distribute small cards, which carried the following copy:

"History in the Making"

Never before in San Antonio has there been a motion picture that offered such Clean, Wholesome and Enjoyable entertainment that it required a run of three weeks to accommodate the huge crowds. But such a picture is

'Gold Diggers of 1933'"

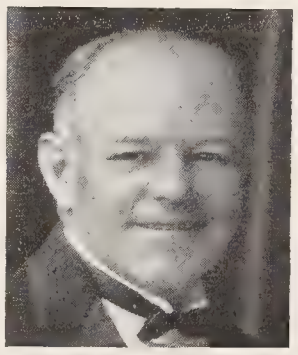
Now in its Third Week at the Empire Theatre.

In view of the above, the management of this hotel takes pleasure in calling this unusual attraction to your attention."

And Hicks didn't stop there, but contacted his local merchants for special Bargain Matinee tickets. According to the arrangement the merchants offered special half-rate tickets for matinee performances to all their customers, for which the store owners paid the difference in price. This helped build up the good will of the store, and at the same time bolstered up the matinee business.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

The theatre beckoned to George W. Foster at the age of 27 years and he singled out showbusiness as a means of livelihood because of the simple reason that it held a strong interest for him. Born in St. Louis, Mo., Foster was educated in the Blair School before he went with the South Side Amusement Company as singer and musician and he has been with the same outfit ever since in various capacities. At the Best and Cherokee Theatres he acted as singer and musician; at the Melba, as manager and musician; at the Park, musician; at the Lydell, manager; at the Ivory, musician and manager, and at the Virginia, where he now holds forth, as manager.



He tells us that he would again choose the theatre for a career if he had to start all over again. Round Tabler Foster is married and the father of five children.

SHOWMEN'S LOBBY LAFFS!

We're wondering if the Lobby Artist referred to is Don, himself?

SPECTACULAR CAMPAIGN AT STANLEY CAMDEN FOR "GOLD DIGGERS"

Joseph Murdoch, manager of the Stanley, Camden, N. J., made certain that his public could have no alibi when asked what was happening at his playhouse.

A picturesque set piece was placed in lobby prior to opening around and upon which were grouped a bevy of beautiful living models, costumed after the manner of the chorines of the picture.

For the two days preceding the opening, a monster float was placed on the streets, elaborately and gaily festooned. Here, too, a bevy of attractive costumed girls were employed, giving the natives an eyeful.

Opening day Camden woke up to find the Stanley front arrayed in gala attire, with the marquee, lobby and entire facade ablaze of many hued lights and electrical display. Sun-arcs and flood lights were turned loose in typical Hollywood fashion, while amplifiers brought to the street the proceedings in lobby and auditorium and the voices of arriving celebrities.

The American Legion Band and a 40-piece Harmonica Band brought every person within a range of many miles to the scene.

HUGE FAN LETTER EXPLOITS PICTURE FOR MGR. SCHLAIFER

A most unusual street stunt which at times threatened to block traffic was inaugurated by Charles Schlaifer, Paramount Theatre publicity man, Omaha.

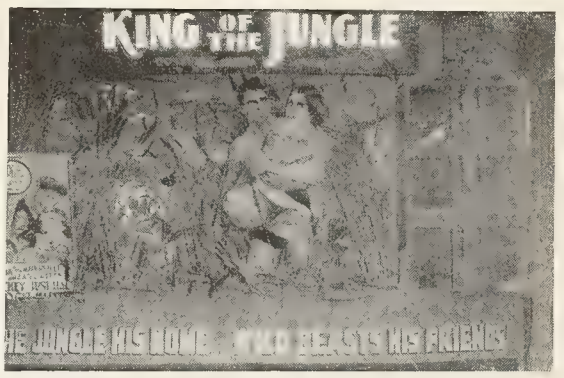
A congratulatory fan letter measuring four by six feet, addressed to the cast of "Gold Diggers" was placed on the busiest shopping corner of Omaha during the noon hours of the day previous to and the opening day of the picture. An attractive young lady, identified by a "Gold Digger" sash, invited all to autograph the letter. Before the stunt was over, every inch of available space was crowded with signatures and the letter detached from frame and forwarded to the Warner Bros. studios, Hollywood.

Bear this one in mind, boys. It can be tied in with other big pictures.

BINSTOCK'S FRONT ANIMATED DISPLAYS GATHER PASSERSBY

As the Republic Theatre is in the center of one of Brooklyn's busiest sections, Manager Paul Binstock pays a lot of attention to his fronts as he finds that "crowd-stoppers" mean extra admissions.

His lobby on "King of the Jungle," illustrated above, a combination of pictorial art cutouts, live animals and natural grass is a fine example of what it takes to gather the curious in that populous neighborhood. The cutout is from a regular six sheet and the animal figures in the background were taken from paper on other animal pictures.



Paul's Lobby

The caged live monkeys and birds were promoted from ar nearby pet store, and the natural grass was gathered from an outlying swamp. Title and catchline were cut out of transparent material and hidden colored spots heightened the effect. Paul says the cost was just $1.50.

ED HART CERTAINLY GETS INSPIRATIONS AS YOU WILL LEARN

Ed Hart, city manager at the Oxford Theatre in Plainfield, N. J., sure is on his toes as witness what he has recently pulled.

Learning that the Recreation Commissioner got a big thrill out of publicity and taking advantage of the fact that an operator at one of the theatres recently opened a studio of photography and with his equipment had a movie camera, he conceived the idea of providing the city with a local camera man known as Reade's Camera Man to take pictures of local activities particularly the recreation sports and outdoor swimming pool.

The only cost for this work to the theatres was a small item to the Pathe Film Company for the developing and 10 cents a foot for film.

He did not care to cheapen the theatres by selling screen advertising and in lieu of same took advantage of a new store opening in the neighborhood taking a picture of their front and giving them a box on the screen for advertising in the form of a welcome to a new neighbor and new enterprise in Plainfield for which he received the sum of $15 to pay for a good portion of the film cost so that he presented the swimming pool, kiddie showers, cricket, baseball and tennis activities on the screens of the three theatres for almost nothing in comparison of what the cost would be otherwise.

Keep this one in mind, boys. Isn't it worth trying out in your spots?

STARS ATTEND "GOLD DIGGERS" PREMIERE AT STANLEY, CAMDEN

Joe Murdoch, manager of the Stanley Theatre in Camden, N. J., staged a typical Hollywood opening with stage and screen stars as honored guests in conjunction with his showing of "Gold Diggers." It was one of the most successful picture openings ever pulled off in New New Jersey, as such celebrities as James Dunn, the Duncan Sisters, Ray Perkins and others appeared on the stage of the Stanley opening night. The local newspapers made a big fuss over the gala premiere devoting loads of free space to stories and pictures of the affair. Lights and a microphone were also placed in front of the theatre, as the stars addressed the huge throngs upon their arrival.

In addition to his gala premiere, Murdoch planted window strips in soda, ice cream and candy stores all over town. Another "Gold Diggers" stunt that created a stir in Camden was presenting every baby in the city with a gold spoon on opening day. This gag cracked the newspapers with stories and pictures of Murdoch making the presentations to the lucky babes.

JAKE ROSENTHAL

The Iowa meteor who skippers the Iowa in the tall corn state, sends along his regular load of chuckles. On "Elmer the Great" the gag was a cut-out paper monkey with copy to the effect that the picture would get laughs from the proverbial "brass monkey." Jake uses rhymes in his newspaper copy. Listen to this: "Happy days are here again; prosperity's no fake. Get the Iowa habit, where everything is Jake."

Late News Flashes - 10c-30c - First Show 7:30

Estes and Estes of the Maryland Theatre in Addison, Mich., were a trifle late in sending us the above, but the ad is so good, that we are reproducing it now to show you the brand of stuff they are turning out. We'd appreciate some samples of your more recent stuff boys, so shoot them along.

TOM MOULE HAD SPECIAL TABLOID GAG FOR "BABY FACE" AT STATE

Playing up the sensational angle of "Baby Face" Tom Moule, manager of the State Theatre in Detroit, created a lot of attention with his special four page tabloid on the picture which he used when it played his theatre. The tabloid opened with the headline screaming: "Mystery Woman Held in Bank Closing Scandal." The inside feature stories followed up the sensational angle, which provided plenty of reader interest. Stills and ads on the picture were also included in the throwaway.

Another feature of this "Baby Face" tabloid was the inserting of an essay contest for which theatre passes were used as prizes. The contest asked the readers to answer the following question: "If You Were Allowed to Select Your Sweetheart's or Husband's Stenographer. What 10 'Don'ts' Would You Specify, in Considering Feminine Applicants?"

The attractive manner of the tabloid's get-up and the inclusion of the contest insured the reading of the tabloid by all who received a copy. It proved one of the most successful tabloid throwaways ever distributed and helped increase receipts.

This is a particularly good gag, boys, because it can be used on other pictures as well, so file it away for future use.

UNDIE COOL POSTER LANDS NICE STORY FOR MANAGER LYNCH

That special poster Warner Bros. got up for theatres, showing a gal and her boy friend dressed in their undies watching a picture, with the headline, "You'll Feel As Cool As They," in The (Theatre Imprint), attracted a whale of a lot of attention in Bridgeport, Conn. Bob Lynch, manager of the Cameo, mounted one of the posters in the front of his theatre. A reporter for the Bridgeport Herald, spotted it and devoted a half column to it.

He said: "A theatre on State Street is displaying a poster that has the entire city talking. The poster is one of those 'Keep Cool' things that are supposed to let the public know that it is much cooler inside than it is on the street." The writer describes the poster in detail and then adds: "If you think the picture isn't a knockout, just take a walk down State Street, not far from Main Street, and you'll lose both your eyes when you get a glimpse of it. It's one of the most startling displays this writer has seen in Bridgeport in a long time."

Manager Lynch reports that the day this article appeared, business at the theatre jumped four hundred dollars over the previous day. The beauty about the poster, said Lynch, is the fact that it can be used right throughout the summer months, regardless of what picture is playing.

OUTBOARD MOTOR TIE-UP NETS EXCELLENT RESULTS FOR HY DORSEY

When Henry Dorsey at the Columbia Theatre in Hammond, La., played "Speed Demon" he didn't waste much time contacting the agents for an outboard motor company and permitted them to put on a display of a speed boat with one of their motors attached; a credit card was placed at the boat and in return the company ran an ad in the daily paper mentioning the picture and theatre.

They also brought a quantity of tickets at regular price (you're some salesman) which they gave away to potential customers and in addition sent out letters to their mailing list calling attention to the picture.

Hi, there Hy, don't keep yourself hidden so long, we're always glad to hear from you, so get out the old Corona and polish her up.

JACK PROMOTES TEN GRAND AUTO TO PUT OVER SWEET STUNT

A swell automobile and a female "looker" make an irresistible combination, and that was Jack Lykes' thought when he made them work for him on "It's Great to Be Alive," at Loew's Stillman, Cleveland, Ohio. It seems that one of the auto manufacturers turned out a few $10,000 special jobs, and as the local dealer did not have one on hand, Jack sold him on sending all the way to Baltimore for the expensive job.

The car, nicely bannered was used in advance and on the opening day the company furnishing a driver. Lykes provided a beautiful gal to ride in the car and to hand out teaser cards giving the theatre address only, that tied in with the title.

Good looking job?

Incidentally, the local dealer arranged short drives for some of Cleveland's leading citizens, and newspaper men also were given an opportunity to feel like millionaires, which resulted in a flock of good stories.

Jack says the stunt went over very big, and the cost was limited to the cards, car banners, and the girl's services. Her clothes for this occasion were promoted from a leading store. Nicely thought out and executed, Jack, but how come we don't hear from you more often?

BLACK'S INGENUITY CAME TO THE FORE AS CIRCUS HIT TOWN

When Harry Black, manager of the Rialto Theatre, Glens Falls, N. Y., started his campaign for "King of Jazz" he found that a prominent circus was to open in town date and date with the picture. Rather than sit back and take his chances on what might come in, Black decided to let the circus work for him. The circus parade had been well advertised and thousands of people came into town to see it, so he hired a large bus, placed head cut-outs from the six sheet in the windows and detailed several ushers to dress in clown costumes and accompany it. With the help of the local police he got them all IN the parade.

One of the clowns sat on top of the bus and threw out cards reading: Don't Be a Sucker—See King of Jazz—Rialto Now! A small lollypop was attached to each card. The stunt got plenty of attention and laffs.

The rest of Black's campaign featured the radio angle. He played up the air names big, tied-up with a local radio store to give away a radio every night during the run, induced the local station to broadcast the entire picture between 10 and 11 on Sunday night, and used the special ballyhoo record out front during the run and as an advance on local station twice daily. Extra newspaper space and wide billing of posters completed the campaign.

"GOLD DIGGERS" DAY GAVE MERCHANTS BEST BUSINESS IN 2 YEARS

A striking example of how a theatre can help business is contained in the stunt put over by Ben Wallerstein of the Warner Palace, Lorain, Ohio. He sold the Mayor of the city the idea of designating by proclamation a day as "Gold Diggers of 1933" Day. The cooperation of the merchants was secured and every one ran a "Gold Diggers" slug in their ads announcing their great value for the "Gold Digger" sale. Each ad gave the picture and theatre a great plug by offering two free tickets to the picture to the person making the largest purchase in each store. For the five largest purchases made in all the stores, a pass good for a month at the Palace theatre was given. Fifteen different merchants participated in the sales. Thus the entire stunt cost the theatre merely 30 passes and 5 passes good for the month.

So far as helping business, for the merchant, the Lorain Times Herald reported that the stores during "The Gold Diggers Day" did the best business they had had in two years.

OLD TIME SHOWMAN SAVES MONEY WITH WATER COLOR SIGNS

We are constantly on the alert for descriptions of labor and money saving theatre devices used by members, and we like the duco-ed water color permanent sign boards made up by Earl D. Smith, head man at the Tower, Salt Lake City (Utah).

For years Earl used sign painters' muslin, but as this was too expensive for four changes a week he tried bond paper in a frame and water color for lettering, also unsatisfactory because of cracking from the heat of the sun. Above you can see what he is now using.

Under the theatre arch are two signs with wood frames and glued joints. The backing is regular sign metal duco-ed in black. Light shades of regular water color paints are used for lettering, easily washed off with sponge and warm water. The six sheet frames to left and right of arch are made of 2x4's and red enameled, with wide bed sheeting for backing which is soaked with water from the rear by hose, making it easy to peel off the old paper.

Earl has been in the business since 1907, when he built his first theatre, and is still going strong in what he describes as the most fascinating game he ever played. Good enough, brother, and now that you have broken the ice, write us more often. We like your ideas.

POSTER ART WORK FOR THE THEATRE

The above poster was done by Don Amdorfer of the Stand Theatre, Whitewater, Wis. He tells us the illustration was painted in natural colors with a mottled background of purple, pink and pale green. Reflected light on faces was in a high tint of green-blue. Sounds mighty attractive, doesn't it?

COHEN'S RADIO AND NEWSPAPER CAMPAIGN GOES OVER VERY WELL

Concentrating on radio and newspapers, Herman Cohen, manager and Charles Leonard, publicity manager for the United Artists Theatre, San Francisco, put over a nice campaign on "The King of Jazz," and opened the picture to even better business than "Be Mine Tonight," a record breaker for the theatre and the city.

Time was arranged for over five broadcasting stations giving plenty of time to the songs from the picture and to mention of the theatre and playdates. Several local hotel orchestars also played courtesy numbers to Paul Whiteman and Bing Crosby, announcing the picture and the theatre. Several attractive full window displays were secured for the sheet music and records. Ben Westland, Universal exploiteer, assisted on the campaign.

STRANG'S SHOWMANSHIP!

Arden Strang, publicity, and Horton Kahn, manager of the RKO Palace Theatre in Columbus, Ohio, offered the Paramount exploiteer splendid cooperation when they opened "Papa Loves Mama." They put on a parade of bathing beauties from the stage show, floats plugged the pix, they even got out the Fife and Drum Corps. Thanks to Strang's assistance, these and a few lesser stunts were put across with success.

QUICK THINKING!

H. A. Larsen, manager of the Majestic Theatre in Oakland, Neb., is the first one to come through with this one. When he recently played "Gold Diggers" he got out a yellow Sale Bill on which he advertised the picture, play dates, etc., and at the bottom he imprinted "It is of vital importance that we have a good attendance on this, otherwise we will have the M. R. A. at a later date." In this instance, "M. R. A." stood for Majestic Recovery Act.

DICK AND KEN KEEP POT BOILIN' WITH CAMPAIGNS IN L. A.

Dick Moss, manager, and Kenneth McGaffey, publicity chief of RKO Hillstreet, Los Angeles, send along an armload of hot stuff on recent campaigns. Note below how they tied up with the new deal by setting up a scroll in the lobby on "Fighting President," inviting patrons to sign their names. Naturally, many went for it.

A well known Coast military academy presented their crack drill team on the stage twice a day, and between shows the cadets did their stuff in the lobby for a great "crowd-stopper." The president and cadet angles got plenty of free newspaper space, as did an acknowledgment of the scroll idea from a White House secretary.

"Why I Believe Katherine Hepburn Will Become a Great Star" was the radio contest put on with "Christopher Strong," for which 50 passes were awarded for the best replies, these being planted in the lobby. Apparel stores put out "Hepburn" windows, beauty shop displays were planted and movie fan magazine windows secured from leading stores.

Cosmetic manufacturer tied in on "Kiss Before the Mirror" with a lobby make-up analysis for the women with beauty lectures and models as well as free lipsticks. Leading beauty shop windows were secured as the result of this tieup. Newspaper "kiss" contest was also put over, with lipsticks and passes as the prizes.

We don't hear from these Angelenos as often as we would like, but when they do unlimber their guns, the campaigns come in thick and fast. Our regards, Dick and Ken, and come again soon.

Nathanson to England On Deal for Expansion

N. L. Nathanson, managing director of Famous Players Canadian, was scheduled to leave for London this week following a three-day convention of circuit managers in Toronto. In England Mr. Nathanson is expected to close a deal which will expand the company's activities.

It is understood that the director is seeking British financial aid in the expansion, and that he is in search of British stage attractions for tours in Canada. He will also look at film deemed suitable for Canadian exhibition. British Gaumont is said to be interested in exhibition arrangements with the Famous Players circuit.

Offers Medical Film Study

"The Motion Picture as a Professional Instrument," a monograph prepared by W. F. Kruse of the educational division of the Bell & Howell Company, Chicago equipment manufacturers, is being offered without charge to medical people interested in making medical or other scientific films.

Dropping of Statewide Theatres Leases OK'd

Approval of the referee in bankruptcy of Statewide Theatres, Inc., was given to the trustees' petition for abandonment of all leases on houses operated by the circuit, at a hearing of creditors in district court in Milwaukee. An offer of $400 by Investment Service Corporation for the lease on the Savoy, Milwaukee neighborhood theatre, also was approved.

Unsecured or general creditors of Statewide were assured a minimum of $5,900 for distribution. The hearing was adjourned until August 25.

F. & M. to Do Roxy Shows

Stock Exchange Rules On Paramount Bond Issue

The committee on securities of the New York Stock Exchange has ruled that, effective August 11, transactions in Paramount Famous Lasky Corporation 6 per cent bonds, due 1947, and Paramount-Publix Corporation 5½ per cent bonds, due 1950, may be made as follows: "Proof of claim filed: not filed by owner."

Bonds for which proof of claim has been filed, must be accompanied, in order to constitute a delivery, by an assignment of the claim bearing a notarial acknowledgment. Until further notice, bids and offers shall be considered as being for bonds "proof of claim not filed by owner" unless otherwise specified.

Goldberg, Futter Join Resolute

Joe Goldberg, former general sales manager for Columbia, and Walter Futter, short feature producer, have joined Resolute Pictures Corporation, Mr. Goldberg as vice-president in charge of sales and Mr. Futter as supervisor of four specials and shorts.

Herbert Ebenstein, head of Resolute, announced last week that Mr. Goldberg will organize the selling activities of the concern through affiliated exchanges. Which series of Futter shorts will be handled by the company has not yet been settled.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1933, unless otherwise specified.

The new Laurel Theatre, Long Beach, N. Y. Note how important a part the carpet plays in creating an atmosphere of beauty and luxury. The carpet is Alexander Smith Westminster, Pattern No. 715-C.

The difference between a half-filled house and S. R. O. isn't wholly a matter of the pictures you show. Comfortable, attractive surroundings play a big part —a very big part. More and more theatre owners are finding that out every day. Alexander Smith Carpet—richly colored, luxurious looking, soft under foot, long-wearing and moderately priced—will go a long way towards adding to the attractiveness of your theatre. Why not have a representative show you the unusually wide range of Alexander Smith carpets and tell you how little they cost? Write W. & J. VINDICATED!

THE above telegram tells you more about the performance of our new 309 FULL Range Reproducer than anything we could possibly say. Geo. W. Summer & Co. are recognized as one of the leading Theatre Sound Engineering Concerns in the country.

We were pioneers in the development and recommendation of the Cone type dynamic speaker for theatre use, and have fostered and constantly improved it for the past several years. Recent developments in the sound industry have fully vindicated our contention that this type of speaker would ultimately meet with universal approval of the theatre industry.

Model 309 Reproducer

Today, as a result of these years of research and engineering, we have a theatre reproducer that covers the full range of the latest types of recordings.

If you want to modernize your Sound equipment and bring it up to the latest standards, write for complete information.

Observations

¶ The truth—does it pay? "We'll say it does," replies a large New York department store which is now zealously applying the principle, "Truth in advertising," to its selling methods. It has bothered to send us a reprint from Retailing Executive Edition, in which is told something of the method and the results. The results, we are assured, are swell.

Now, has the business of selling theatrical entertainment, particularly motion pictures, anything to learn from this? Deeply rooted is the idea that there is only one purpose of motion picture theatre advertising: to "get them in" today! The time available in which to sell a bill is short, and the next program is regarded as another article entirely. Hence a certain amount of frenzy creeps into the theatre's merchandising efforts, a nervous insistence that each picture represents "the first time the screen has dared to speak so plainly," that its "beauty will awe you, its frankness thrill you," that "perhaps never again will so glorious a cast be assembled," and so on in an infinite variety. If that method pays, and pays better than any other method, then assuredly the motion picture theatre need interest itself little in the application of truth to advertising.

But who knows how well it pays, and whether, as a regular method, it pays better than another? Inasmuch as advertising is an activity of operation and management, we dare concern ourselves at least with its general principles. And we wonder if what the motion picture theatre sells is so exclusively a thing of today as the traditions of showmanship declare.

There is of course no reason why any part of store methods need be brought over into the theatre field. The difference between store wares and theatre wares is wide and obvious. The merchandising-advertising problems of the motion picture theatre are its own. However, we should not for merely that reason deny them points of similarity to those of other classes of business. And because the motion picture theatre, as a rule, is (like a representative store) a permanent community institution, a reputation for speaking something approaching the truth might have week-in-and-week-out value.

It would be absurd to believe that the theatre could interpret the truth about its goods in the same manner as that of the New York department store cited above. But we do think that it might be better not to fool our customers quite so consistently, for either we do fool them a great deal, or else they do not believe our advertising anyway, and advertising that is not convincing, emotionally as well as intellectually, is not all that is being paid for.

Repeating that we do not press the example of the New York department store too strongly (this question of more truth and fewer superlatives in theatre advertising is an old matter anyway), we yet observe in its new advertising excellent showmanship.

Consider a recent advertisement in which towels were offered: "They're good towels. With reasonable use they ought to last a year. If you want towels to last two years we recommend Gimbel's 'Westpoint,' made by Martex, for 49 cents." Well, that's refreshing candor! Inspires confidence. And is interestingly different. There is character to advertising conceived in that spirit. We emphatically are not among those who believe a motion picture could be compared with a towel, but we do believe that theatre advertising might effectively assert something that at least sounds like the truth.

¶ The installation of the new equipment capable of reproducing sound with truly life-like accuracy, has been going on rapidly during the past several months. This cannot help but mean a more effective motion picture, more convincing entertainment and a greater public for the screen.

At hand are reports from two of the manufacturers showing a number of installations considerably larger than one without this evidence would believe to be true. Erpi sends us six typewritten sheets solid with the names of theatres throughout the country now having the "wide range" equipment. From RCA is a thick sheaf of brief descriptions of recent "high fidelity" installations. Although we have not been supplied compiled reports by the other manufacturers, we are informed that they too are finding theatres anxious to improve thus their reproduction.

Becoming more and more general at a time when the nation is struggling out of the depression, extended frequency reproduction promises to be a factor in reviving life around the box office.—G. S.

CONSTRUCTING THEATRE ADVERTISING

2.—Printing Terms and Practices

How the copy becomes translated into metal—the second of a series on theatre advertising typography

By GEORGE SCHUTZ

HOW MUCH need those who prepare theatre advertising know about printing? One answer to this question is that many get along knowing practically nothing about it. The best answer probably is, Know enough to get the desired results as readily and as economically as possible. This means that one had better know of the existence of the various processes involved, their general nature and procedure and their language, so that instructions may be quickly given in a manner least likely to cause error. Such an acquaintance with printing and its allied crafts, moreover, will permit those preparing theatre advertising a certain facility that will make their work less laborious without sacrificing effectiveness. Some managers, of course, and others of the theatre have acquired a certain degree of familiarity with the physical side of advertising, but perhaps most have not.

Although newspapers and also commercial printing shops are usually organized to translate an advertising message into some typographical arrangement with no more instructions than those represented by the copy and perhaps a rough sketch, the advertiser will get what he wants more often, and get it more efficiently, if he has some grasp of the nature of the tools with which the printer has to work.

Much of what will be said later about type and layout, indeed, will require an acquaintance with certain fundamental terms and practices of printing and engraving, and in order to obviate the necessity of repeated explanations, these crafts, as applied to theatre advertising, will form the subjects of this and the next article, with printing terms and practices our present interest.

PUTTING COPY INTO TYPE

AS EVERYONE who has prepared copy for printing knows, the thoughts expressed in words and phrases must be lettered in metal before they can be impressed upon paper. While a portion of this rendering into metal is still done by hand, most of it today is effected by machinery. The act of putting these thoughts—the copy—into printing type is called composition, or setting. Except for the largest sizes of type, composition nowadays is usually by means of the linotype (also intertype) machine, or by the Ludlow machine, sometimes depending upon the size, sometimes upon the style of the type.

While there are certain distinctions between the Ludlow and linotype (or intertype) processes, the effect is the same—that is, in either case, the letters are freshly cast into metal at the time of setting, and not only the letters spelling a single word, but a number of words constitute one solid panel of metal. Hence the term line-o'-type. This panel of metal is commonly called a slug. When there is no further use for this slug, it is merely thrown into a hell-box as scrap metal, and in the routine of the print-shop, melted with other waste slugs and rehardened into a fresh supply of metal for further recasting into type.

When type is set by hand, such disposition of used lines of type is, of course, not economically possible. The printer has purchased cases of pre-cast letters for use over and over again, and when the set line is broken down, the letters themselves must be redistributed to their proper compartments in the case for future composition. Both in composition by hand and in general handling of hand-set type, a great deal more labor is involved than in the use of machine-cast lines of type, and hence hand-setting calls for more time and imposes a greater labor cost.

For machine-setting, the printer has purchased, not pre-cast letters, but mattes (or matrices), as they are called, which are molds into which the molten metal flows at the time of setting. These mattes are redistributed (by the machine) for future composition. The cast line of type itself becomes worthless after use except as a bit of lead alloy.

As between the use of Ludlow or linotype setting, the preparer of advertising matter need make no distinction. The printer will do that according to the organization of his shop. However, it might be well to be acquainted with the fact that commonly the Ludlow machine is used for the larger sizes of type, and the linotype for the smaller, although no such difference in purpose is at all necessary or even general in practice. Newspapers, for example, may use the linotype (or intertype) method for all of their machine-setting. Nevertheless, in general commercial printing the smaller sizes of type (under 18 points, or body type) will commonly be set on a linotype machine, while the larger sizes (above 14 points, or display type) will be set on a Ludlow machine. The only real importance this distinction has for the advertiser relates to speed. Ludlow setting is slower than linotype setting. Shop routine, moreover, is ordinarily such that changing from one method of setting to another considerably slows up the composition of a single piece of copy.

MEASUREMENT OF TYPE SIZES

EVERYONE who has had anything to do with printing has heard use of the term point in connection with type. It signifies the unit of measurement now employed for type measurement in the printing craft of the United States and to some extent elsewhere. Before the adoption of the point system almost 50 years ago, each size of type was indicated by a name, rather than by a numerical statement of units. For example, one instructed that copy be set in brevier, or bourgeois, or pica, thus indicating the size. Now we should specify 8 point, or 9 point, or 12 point. The new system was derived from the old (which had its origin in France), but to insist upon an exact computation of the new sizes in their relationship to the old would be to burden oneself with unnecessary complications. Adaptation of the conventional sizes to a logical mathematical system called for certain adjustments, and one point was designated as .0138 of an inch. However, for all practical intents and purposes one point may be considered as 1-72 of an inch.

That size of type corresponding to pica in the old system is 12 points high. Less accurately, but sufficiently for purposes of comparison, brevier is now 8 points high, bourgeois 9 points, while (to select terms still heard in printing and advertising circles) agate is 5½ points high, and nonpareil 6 points.

Of all the old terms, however, only three retain any significance today, and only one is used with reference to type size. Printers still refer frequently to pica type, meaning the 12-point size. Agate, however, is now entirely a unit by which advertising space is computed. That is, if your advertisement is 4 inches deep and one column wide, the newspaper will submit the amount of space as 56 agate lines, an inch of newspaper advertising being arbitrarily regarded as approximately equal to 14 lines of type one column wide set in agate type.

The other term retained, nonpareil, is now used (though only occasionally) to indicate spacing, as, for example, when two slugs are thought too close together. In such an instance the printer might be instructed, if six points of extra spacing were wanted, to insert a nonpareil (pronounced non-pah-rell, with the accent on the final syllable).

Type is available by fonts, a font being an assortment of characters (mattes or matrices in machine composition) of a certain size and face (face meaning style). Occasionally a character of one font gets into a line properly of another font, due to an error in distribution (redistribution as referred to above). Sometimes there is not a great deal of difference between the intruding character and the others, and if the advertiser is not aware of the possibility of this, and also of the fact that such an error can escape the vigilance of the printer's own proof-readers, he may find his advertisement printed with somewhat less than the fine appearance expected.

GENERAL TYPE CLASSES

THERE ARE two basic classes of type styles—roman and italic. This sentence, as are practically all those in the article, is set in roman type. But this sentence is set in italic. The one is pronouncedly vertical, while the other slants.

In addition, each of these basic classes are divided into broad subdivisions called light face and bold face. Not all type styles may be had in bold face, particularly in certain sizes. Thus if bold face type is wanted in a paragraph predominantly set in a style and size of type for which there is no bold face available, another (though harmonizing) style of type must be used. In such an instance, bold face is probably wanted for emphasis, and frequently italic serves that purpose as well.

The type face these words are set in has no corresponding bold characters. Therefore, for illustration, these words are set in vogue light face. And this sentence is set in vogue bold face. (It is worth noting that the vogue type, both bold and light face, could be set on the same machine. The regular type in which this article is set, however, is caslon, and was set on another machine. Therefore, the vogue slugs had to be mechanically fitted in by cutting the caslon slugs).

With the introduction of so-called modern type faces (usually referred to among typographers as sans-serif) one notes a tendency to divide type styles further into modern and old-style families. According to this distinction, old-style faces are those in which the characters have stem terminations (as may be observed in the type in which these words are set), particularly if these terminations sort of swerve out, in a broadening effect, from the rest of the letter. These terminations are called serifs. In so-called modern type (sans-serif, without-serifs) they are eliminated (see the type in which the title of this article is set, as well as the vogue type referred to above).

This differentiation, however, results in some confusion, inasmuch as a serif-type such as Bodoni has generally been classed as a modern face, while one of our largest as well as oldest families of type, the Gothic, has no serifs! Perplexing as this may seem, it is nevertheless subject to explanation, which will be more properly attempted when we come to a study of type itself. Other type classifications, having no direct bearing upon our present purpose, will also be discussed at that time.

MEASUREMENT OF SPACE

WHO TODAY has not heard of the em? Certainly no one who has done many cross-word puzzles! Probably those who nowadays are the least sure of the meaning of this tiny word are publishers and printers themselves. It is the general supposition, however, that an em is a pica (12 points) as applied to space in printing. Even printers are accepting that as at least one of its definitions.

Inasmuch as the word em is used again and again by those who speak in the language of the print-shop, it is a term worth mastering. Originally it stood solely for the square of whatever pointage in type size that happened to be involved in the task at hand. If you were referring to 8-point type, an em was a square with each side

PREPARING THE THEATRE FOR WINTER

By J. T. KNIGHT, JR.

Boiler cleaning and other preparations for heating, comprehensively considered in the fourth article of Mr. Knight's series

IN PREPARATION for successful operation during the coming winter, consideration should be given to the theatre heating plant. Careful and thorough study of the individual heating system followed by definite action now will assure a winter uninterrupted by emergency breakdowns. In addition the plant will be ready for operation on the first cool evening.

Heat may be necessary in the theatre any time after October 1. Preparation should be made without further delay. Work on the boiler and heating system can be done now more economically than after starting heating operations.

The first step is to assure a clean boiler. This means clean fire-box, clean tubes or flues and a clean internal surface of the boiler. The proper cleaning of a boiler does not necessarily require the services of a skilled mechanic, but it does require the services of one familiar with boilers, or unskilled labor working under the supervision of one who is familiar with boilers.

METHOD OF CLEANING BOILER

THE CLEANING OF boiler fire-boxes, flues and tubes requires extension lights, steel brushes adaptable for the particular make of boiler, and a good steel scraper. Generally two men make a better crew for cleaning a boiler than the use of but one man. One should hold the light at the rear clean-out doors while the other works at the front clean-out doors with brush and scraper. In this way it is possible to look through the boiler and see its condition and the results being accomplished during the cleaning process.

The importance of removing every bit of soot and scale from the inner surface of the boiler cannot be over-emphasized. A deposit of soot or scale 1/32 of an inch thick will cause a loss of 10% in the operating results of the boiler, while soot or scale 1/16 of an inch will cause a 25% loss.

After opening all clean-out doors and examining the inner surface of the boiler, thoroughly brush or scrape the surface the full length of the boiler until clean. Don't be satisfied with anything less than a 100% job. Now clean out the fire-box, remove the grates, and clean out the ash pit. Remove all the ashes from the ash pit right up to the rear and side walls. Don't forget the corners. Some managers are going to be surprised when they look into the boiler to see that ashes have laid on the grates and in the ash pit all summer long.

After removing the grate bars, brush and scrape them until clean. Examine them to see that they are straight and not warped or burned and that no lugs have been burned or broken from them. Upon replacing them make sure that they rock or tip properly when manipulated by the shaker arm or handle.

It is always a good protection to have an extra set of grate bars on hand at the beginning of a heating season. Sometimes with very old makes of boilers it requires several weeks to obtain a set in case of emergency. A broken grate bar not only wastes coal but causes a condition which prohibits efficient firing of the boiler.

Next clean out the uptake or breeching that connects the boiler to the chimney. There is usually a door provided for this. If there is no such door it is worth the few dollars expense to have one installed. A clean uptake is necessary for good and satisfactory draft.

Be sure to renew the fusible plugs. This is generally required by city or town ordinance and always by the insurance companies. During this process be sure to renew all broken parts on the boiler, such as: broken, cracked or leaky fittings; broken wheels on valve stems, and broken parts on fire and ash pit doors.

The exposed exterior metal portions of the boiler, the base and chimney connections, after being brushed with a steel wire brush should be given a coat of good boiler enamel, or you may use a heat resisting paint of graphite base.

The water glass, steam gauge and safety valve now should be looked over. If the water glass is cracked, leaky or very dirty it should be renewed. Whenever the water glass is renewed always use new packing washers. The steam gauge should be removed and cleaned. If there is any question about its accuracy it should be sent out to a shop for testing and calibrating. The safety valve should be removed and cleaned. It should be tested the first day that you fire your boiler. If it is old and badly corroded you should get the opinion of a boiler man as to its safe condition. Safety valves are not cheap but they are cheaper than a damaging explosion or a cracked section or tube.

Draw off the water in the boiler and refill with fresh water. Examine the boiler carefully for leaks. Leaks must be repaired.

THE CLEANING OF TUBULAR BOILERS

THE FOREGOING has been written primarily for a coal fired cast steel sectional boiler. An equal amount of care and attention to detail should be taken in cleaning a steel tubular boiler. The tubes should be scraped and the front flue sheet and doors vigorously brushed down. The ash pit, fire-box, combustion chamber, back connections and underside of the boiler should be scraped and brushed.

The brickwork base of steel boilers should be examined carefully for cracks and air leaks, inside and out. Such cracks and air leaks mean uncontrolled draft. The fire-brick lining of the fire-box must be carefully examined. Any cracks in this lining means that fire and intense heat are going to get at the foundation walls of the boiler.

After drawing off the water in steel boilers remove the man-hole and hand-hole plates, then with the aid of an ordinary ¾-inch hose flush out the inside of the boiler using as much water pressure as you can obtain. Scrape and paint the man-holes and hand-holes. In replacing plates use new gaskets covered with a mixture of graphite and oil.

MATTERS TO BE SPECIALLY CHECKED

EXAMINE THE uptakes and chimney connections of all boilers for air leaks. This is important if you want controlled draft. Many times such leaks can be located by using a lighted candle, for as the candle is moved about near the outside surface of the uptakes and flues the air leak will draw or blow the candle flame. Such leaks can be repaired by using fire cement. All such leaks reduce the amount of air that is drawn through the ash pit doors through or over the fire-box and thereby reduce the draft.

If the system has vacuum or condensation pumps they should be checked carefully. If there is no one in the theatre really familiar with pumps it is wise to have them checked by an outside pump man. Check particularly the receivers, the connections and the starting switches. The pump gland or inner valve should be repacked each year. The foundation bolts of all pumps should be tight. Don't attempt to do this yourself unless you have a proper level so that the tightening will be evenly done and the pump will be level and aligned.

Vacuum pumps are used on vacuum steam heating systems. Vacuum systems are the best and most economical for theatre operation. Unless the pump and radiator traps are in good working condition the system becomes inefficient and expensive and therefore unsatisfactory to operate. In such a system the returns are connected to a receiver which collects all the air and water in the system. These elements are pumped out by means of the vacuum pump, the air exhausted to the boiler room and the water returned to the boiler. By this action a vacuum is maintained in the return lines of the system.

By such a system any steam may be used in the radiators to operate the traps (or thermostatic valves) that are placed on the return end of the radiators to open them automatically when water or air is required to pass through and to close them when steam begins to pass. This prevents the return pipes from becoming filled with steam.

The vacuum permits steam to be used at a pressure below that of the atmosphere (15 lbs. per square inch) and therefore at temperatures as low as 140 degrees, the limit in temperature being fixed only by the capacity or setting of the pump to hold a necessary vacuum in the return pipes. Hence vacuum systems when properly operated are economical.

Oil burners are ideal sources of heat for theatre heating plants. They do not create dirt and there are no ashes to be removed. Oil burning in theatres is no cheaper but should not be any more expensive than coal provided the right type and size burner has been selected, and the proper grade of oil, with necessary preheaters, are used.

Oil burners where used should be cleaned very carefully. All parts should be washed in kerosene. Badly worn or broken parts should be replaced. Especially check the proper functioning of pilot, whether gas or electric. Where gas may be had at a reasonable rate the more positive gas pilot is considered very reliable and safe. Where the electric spark is used it should be of the repeating type so as to minimize the hazard of backfire. In a system not so equipped the oil burner pilot should be altered accordingly. If during last season there was any chronic mal-functioning of the oil burner, call for a service man of the company manufacturing, or the jobber distributing, that oil burner. Insist that they put it in proper condition.

ORGANIZING HEATING INSPECTION

ALL OF THE WORK outlined above will be done by or under the supervision of the engineer, superintendent or whoever cares for the heating system. It is excellent practice for the manager to question such employee in great detail about the condition of the heating plant. As a double check the manager should inspect the boiler before and after this work in order that he may be satisfied with conditions at the beginning of the season.

Post the following few paragraphs pertaining to boiler problems in the boiler room and analyze the difficulties. Most of them will fall under one of these headings:

1. Not enough heat. Caused by:
   (a) A poor grade of fuel.
   (b) Improper firing.
   (c) Insufficient draft.
   (d) Boiler not large enough.
   (e) Dirty boiler.
   (f) Not enough radiators.
   (g) Feed line pipes to radiators too small.
2. Water disappears from gauge glass. This may be due to:
   (a) Dirt and grease in boiler.
   (b) Valve closed in return line.
   (c) Water glass connected into a very active section of boiler.
   (d) One of two or more boilers connected in battery with unequal pressures—the boiler with high pressure pushes all the water into boiler with low pressure.
   (e) A too great difference in pressure between supply and return.
3. Water line unsteady. Due to:
   (a) Grease and dirt in boiler.
   (b) Boiler being over-fired, trying to make it generate more steam than it was designed to generate.
4. Dampers taking too long a time to affect boiler. Cause may be:
   (a) Leaks in uptake, breaching or chimney.
   (b) "Slaty" or "slaggy" fuel.
   (c) Poor firing.
   (d) A bed of ashes or clinkers on grates.
   (e) Insufficient capacity of boiler.
5. Water in steam supply lines. Cause:
   (a) Excessive rate in generating steam.
   (b) Too small volume of space in boiler for steam to form.
   (c) Water level too high.
6. Flue becoming dirty too frequently. This may be the result of:
   (a) Poor combustion.
   (b) Poor draft.
   (c) Slow combustion.
7. Smoking through fire-doors. The cause may be:
   (a) Poor draft conditions.
   (b) Incorrect damper settings.
   (c) Leaky breechings.
   (d) Clogged flues or very dirty flues.

THE WAY WE COOL OUR THEATRE

By L. W. CARROLL
MANAGER, FLYNN THEATRE, BURLINGTON, VT.

HAROLD B. FRANKLIN once said that 20 years ago an old showman remarked, "There are only three things to know about running a theatre: "How to get 'em in; how to get 'em out, and how to get 'em back again."

To get them in the first time is easy.

To get them out is easy.

It's gettting them back again that's not so easy.

Managers in towns of from 30,000 to 60,000 must meet conditions and problems almost unknown to managers of metropolitan theatres, and I believe brother managers in towns the size of Burlington that do not have a cooling system, may be interested in a method of cooling used here at the Flynn theatre. This method has been used for two years now and has proved very satisfactory, and if it is followed consistently day in and day out, theatres not equipped with cooling machinery may safely advertise "the coolest spot in town" and patrons will find truth in the statement.

This house is equipped with intake and exhaust fans with a capacity of 30,000 cubic feet of air for each fan. At the first sign of warm weather (and it is important that your patrons find the theatre cool on the first warm day) the janitor comes on duty at 3 a.m. The air at this time of the morning, even in extreme hot weather, is generally cool and fresh. First the intake and exhaust are run for about one half-hour to take out all the foul air. Then the exhaust fan is reversed and fresh air is pushed into the building through both fans. They are allowed to run for from an hour to an hour and a half, until the house temperature is around 66°. During the day care is taken to see that no doors are kept open to admit the hot air from the street. During the matinee the fans are not run at all, unless there are enough patrons to fill about half the house, and even then the air is only recirculated through the house through the plenum chamber, and no hot air from outside is brought in. With the average matinee crowd the air will remain cool and fresh, and I have seen the outside temperature rise in the afternoon to 88° and 90°, and still our house temperature would not rise to more than 70° or 72°.

In the evening both fans are run as intake fans, and the air is exhausted through the lobby. We have a 90-foot lobby, and this gives everyone walking through the lobby into the theatre a breeze blowing in the face, with its resultant suggestion of coolness. Most of our patrons believe that we have a real cooling plant.

I hope that this method of cooling will be tried by brother managers, and I feel sure that it will receive favorable comment from their patrons.

The Grand in Shanghai

THE GRAND is a theatre strikingly modern enough to belong in Berlin, but it is located in Shanghai, China. Shanghai is not particularly Chinese, having a large population of Europeans. It is a treaty port, and therefore one of China's principal points of contact with the outside world—and also one of the principal channels through which that unfortunate nation is commercially exploited. The population of Shanghai proper is about 950,000, but with its suburbs, the population swells to approximately two million. It is proud of its motion picture "palace," the Grand, and of its Occidental origins.

The Grand theatre was recently completed by the United Theatres Corporation, which had no fear of the extremely modern in architectural schemes. It seats a little over 2,000.

The exterior is boldly modernistic, with metal panels, both horizontal and vertical, as the dominant motifs. Harmonizing with this geometric mass is a rectangular tower of glass. This glass is repeated in the marquee, and in both cases is illuminated from behind.

The tower rises 120 feet above the street and carries the name of the theatre, repeated on three sides in a unique modernistic stylization.

The interior similarly follows modern patterns worked out in modern materials. The color scheme is of pale gold, green of various shades, buff and black. At both sides of the main foyer are long stairways extending to a mezzanine corridor. Parts of these stairways are laid with Belgian marble. Doors are of black lacquer inlaid with designs executed in aluminum. There are three illuminated fountains.

The auditorium has two seating levels. There is little decoration. The walls are surfaced in acoustic tiles cemented to the concrete retaining walls, and except for parallel metal bands extending from the proscenium to the rear, these surfaces are unadorned. The ceiling consists in a series of stylized plaster recesses rimmed with lighting coves. The stage extends forward to a considerable distance in a broad circular apron.

Information comes meagerly, but it is learned that the equipment is complete and modern, with air conditioning of the plenum type, four projectors, and RCA "high fidelity" sound reproduction.

The theatre operates on a straight-picture policy. A gala opening was held, at which a souvenir program was issued. The foreword said, in part:

"Years ago the West recognized the popularity and importance of the motion picture and built for it auditoriums magnificent and costly—some of them showplaces of the modern world. The East alone lagged behind in the creation of the cinema house beautiful. With the advent of the Grand theatre, however, Shanghai now has an edifice that takes its place among the best of its kind in the great cities of America and Europe."

By this spectacular Shanghai gesture, if not before, the East and the West have assuredly met.

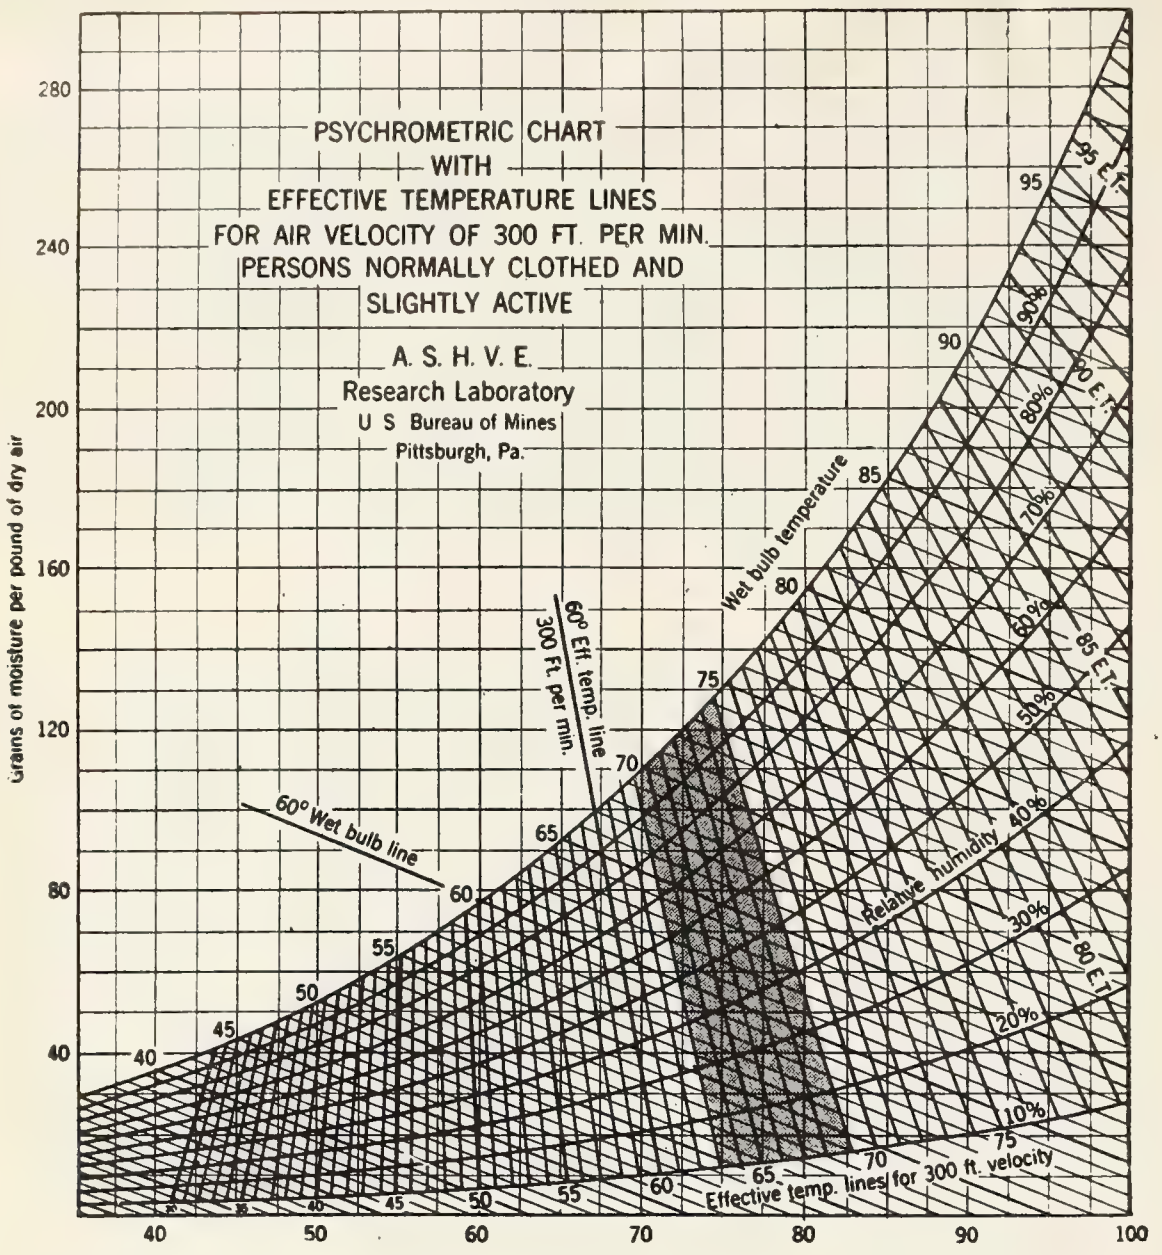
AIR CONDITIONING GUIDE SHEET NO. 3



PSYCHROMETRIC CHART: EFFECTIVE TEMPERATURE, AIR VELOCITY 300 F. P. M.

[The third of four charts applied to theatre air conditioning.]

The greatest benefit may be derived in following this discussion and interpretation of this chart from comparison with the chart described in the last issue (July 29) of Better Theatres. With last month's chart, representing still air conditions at hand, compare the chart reproduced on this page.

It will be noted that the definition and designation of the various groups of lines representing the same element on each chart are approximately in the same location and extend in the same directions on both charts.

Note carefully these differences. The small figures on the uppermost sweeping curved line from lower left to upper right indicate WET BULB TEMPERATURES, in degrees Fahrenheit. These same numbers do not indicate effective temperatures. Effective temperatures are indicated on the lowest of the sweeping curved lines. The figures indicating effective temperatures are noted along this line from 30 on up to 75 in multiples of 5; after 75 the remaining lines are indicated by every fifth line being marked 80 E.T., 85 E.T., 90 E.T. and 95 E.T. These markings come just inside the righthand edge of the chart, from bottom to top.

Air motion produces a cooling effect upon the human body, therefore, it becomes an important and determining factor in establishing the comfort of patrons in a theatre. How can this cooling effect be determined? By using the chart published in the last issue and by using the chart reproduced here.

For example: the condition within the theatre is represented by a dry bulb reading of 85°, and wet bulb of 75°. How much cooler would it feel if you could adjust the fans to give an air motion of 300 feet velocity? On the chart published last month for "still air conditions," 85° dry bulb, and 75° wet bulb produce an effective temperature of 79½°. The same conditions, by referring to the chart reproduced here, represent an effective temperature of 76 1/3°. The cooling effect is consequently 79½°—76 1/3°, or 3 1/6°.

Now refer to the comfort chart described in the July 1st issue of Better Theatres. An effective temperature of 79½° falls outside of the summer comfort zone, while an effective temperature of 76 1/3° falls within the summer comfort zone and represents a condition that is 30 per cent comfortable. Briefly, by fan adjustment only the temperature within the theatre has been greatly improved.

A velocity of 300 feet per minute is not the maximum velocity obtainable. A velocity of 600 feet per minute would give you a more pronounced cooling effect.

This chart definitely illustrates the great importance of air motion in the creating of comfortable air conditions within the theatre. The three charts so far reproduced in Better Theatres positively point out the three basic factors in comfortable ventilation. Temperature (dry-bulb), humidity (wet-bulb), and air motion combine to create effective sensations of heat or cold, which within certain ranges as shown by these charts represent comfortable or uncomfortable conditions in the theatre.

DETERMINING AIR VELOCITY

Air motion within a theatre auditorium is generally expressed in minutes for each complete air change. This is arrived at by taking the cubic volume of the auditorium and dividing it by the cubic feet of air delivered into the auditorium each minute.

For example: an auditorium 65 feet wide, 100 feet long with the average or mean ceiling height 45 feet has 292,500 cubic feet of air space in it. Assume that the fans deliver 40,000 cubic feet per minute:— $\frac{292,500}{40,000}$ = 7.31 minutes, or it requires 7 1/3 minutes to completely change the air in the auditorium. This is commonly expressed as a 7 1/3-minute air change.

To determine quantity of air delivered into the auditorium, borrow an instrument known as an anamometer. This instrument, held in front of each point of entry of air, and moved slowly over the area of the grille will determine the velocity of the air being delivered through that opening. This velocity, multiplied by the square foot area of that opening, will give the quantity in cubic feet per minute of the air delivered at that point. Repeat this procedure at every point of delivery of air. Then total the results obtained at the various delivery points and that summation will represent the cubic feet of air per minute delivered into the auditorium.

RECONDITIONING AT TODAY'S LOWER COST

By S. CHARLES LEE

Prices are increasing rapidly—but the dollar can still buy improvement that will cost two or three

THE EFFORTS of the government and business to increase prices and wages are already having their effect, and one can scarcely quote a price today without expecting it to be higher tomorrow. Therefore those who would take advantage of the greater buying power which the depression (with no kindness intended!) bestowed upon the dollar, had better act as quickly as possible. Certainly the depression left few theatres without need of some reconditioning, while many are the houses which now face a new season poorly equipped indeed to meet the demands of a revived interest. Their managements cannot help but profit by undertaking immediate rectification of at least the outstanding faults.

In the two previous articles I discussed effective methods and current costs of remodeling the exterior and interior. In this, the concluding article, I shall indicate as well as present market conditions permit, what it would cost to rehabilitate the run-down theatre in various classes of equipment and furnishings. In general, I think it safe to say that if you can get your job underway within 30 days, you stand to save about 30% over the prices likely to be in effect three months hence. Let us now see what your dollar will buy today.

STAGE CURTAINS

A main curtain, such as that shown in Figure 1, formerly sold at $500 or more. Today's quotation, subject to textile and sales taxes, is $300. Title curtains of the type shown in Figure 2 can be bought for $200, and simpler ones for as low as $75. They used to cost as high as $400. As every showman knows, the curtain is an important factor in the appearance of the theatre, and to change it occasionally is to improve the auditorium at one of the noticeable points.

SCREENS

Check up on your screen for sound and for light reflection. One of the most widely used screens formerly cost $1 a square foot. It can now be purchased for half that amount. Another well known make of screen is now 75c a square foot, which price is about 25% under the former charge.

If you are making corrections in your sight lines or stage equipment, it might be well to consider the value of a magnascopic screen to your theatre. One may be purchased which is laced to a frame that flies, carrying the horns out of the way as well as the screen to clear the stage for presentations. The price is $1,500 for the first 30 feet, and $15 a foot for additional footage.

CARPETS

You will have to hurry if you want to buy suitable theatre carpeting at reduced prices. A grade which I have recommended for theatres and which will last about five years under hard usage, may be purchased for $2.64 a yard, while still another grade of reasonable durability was recently priced at $1.60 a yard. In each case, the price represents substantial reductions.

CHAIRS

There hasn't been the decrease in prices for theatre chairs as for many other classes of equipment, but even so substantial savings are possible. One well designed type of chair, with a full-upholstered back in figured velour and imitation leather spring edge seat, may be bought for $7.13, while a loge chair that formerly sold at $22.50 may be purchased for $15.

SOUND WIRING

Plenty of reproduction equipment wiring in theatres today is in bad condition, I have noted, and now is the time to make the correction, for you can rewire a 1,000-seat house for about $130.

VENTILATION

Many systems of various sizes and degrees of completeness may be purchased, but a 1,000-seat theatre may have at least a system which will change the air every four minutes at a cost of about $800. . . . Incidentally, if your acoustics are bad, you certainly should correct them at the earliest possible moment. Many materials are available, and prices vary accordingly. However, for the purpose of estimating the cost, you can apply a rate of 20c a square foot of wall treatment.

LIGHTING FIXTURES

Lighting fixtures are still relatively inexpensive, and many bargains are yet available. I recently purchased four special fixtures 4 feet in diameter for $25 each, while

RIGHTS OF PARTIES TO LABOR DISPUTES

By LEO T. PARKER

Analyzing the attitude of the courts toward collective action of employees, with reviews of recent cases

THE LEGAL questions arising from labor disputes have many times been before the courts for solution. However, because litigations of this nature involve so many intricate details of economic and social life, with the fundamental rights inherent in both contesting parties at stake, it is obvious that these tribunals have difficulty in arriving at decisions.

Notwithstanding the complications usually present in each case involving labor disputes, the courts have adopted the elementary rule that picketing a theatre by union employes is not unlawful unless the evidence shows either disorder, coercion, intimidation, violence, boycott; or threats or acts looking to the same end, no matter how those forces may be set in motion or brought to bear on the parties.

In other words, unless physical violence, fear, or molestation, or breach of the peace follow, or are likely to follow the acts complained of, or property rights are unlawfully damaged, the courts have always refused to act or render verdicts against labor.

Generally speaking, the difficulty in such cases does not lie in any uncertainty in the pertinent and well known rules of law, but in their application to the exigencies of the particular case. Since the courts must decide these questions, each decision must be based upon a careful balancing of facts, measured by the legal rights of the parties, to the end that the full exercise of a basic privilege by one shall not encroach upon an equally inherent right of the other.

UNIONS CALLED SOCIAL NECESSITY

IT IS universally recognized that it is a lawful right of labor to organize for mutual aid and protection to better their condition, in the matter of wages and other incidental benefits. For example, the court in a leading case (page 176 of 287 Pa.) said:

"Labor unions are therefore not only legitimate, but because their aim and purpose is to better the living conditions of a large part of the body politic, they are a necessary part of the social structure."

Therefore, it is apparent that, if the courts are to maintain an even balance between Labor and Capital, the courts should interfere only when rights and conduct incidental to good government are infringed by either party. When this course is departed from and an arbitrary attitude is assumed in favor of either of the parties, the courts then destroy their usefulness in maintaining law and order, and more especially as the arbiters in matters where justice alone should prevail. Moreover, property rights would rest on insecure foundations, and legal decisions would so circumscribe the objects of one of the parties, as to make its existence useless as a factor in social life tending to better "the living conditions of a large part of the body politic," or as a very much needed agency for employment.

It is for these various reasons that before rendering a decision, the courts are very careful to earnestly investigate all testimony and evidence to determine whether or not acts on the part of union members, in performing their picketing work and distribution of circulars, are likely to control or distort the minds of theatre patrons by presentation of untruthful facts.

CIRCULARS ARE LAWFUL

NUMEROUS COURTS have held that distribution of circulars is lawful when it is shown that the matter printed on such circulars is truthful and not in any manner intimidating. Moreover, use of music, as that of a band, by labor unions to attract the attention of a crowd is not illegal, provided the crowd does not in any way interfere with the usual public travel. The latest higher court case involving these important points of the law is Oxford Theatre vs. Adler (166 Atl. 566, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania).

CASE:

In this case it was shown that previously the Oxford theatre in Philadelphia had employed union stage hands, operators, musicians and bill posters. However, the theatre officials felt that they could no longer afford to pay the union wage scale to its stage hands and requested them to accept a reduction. This was refused, and as a result the stage hands were dismissed from the service of the theatre with two weeks' notice.

Soon afterward various activities were begun under the direction of the union of stage employees and motion picture operators, known as Local No. 8. An automobile equipped with a radio for music, such as is daily employed to advertise current attractions in the local theatres of Philadelphia, circulated in the vicinity of the theatre, passing before it at intervals of from five to ten minutes. On the sides of the automobile were placards with the following inscription: "Lest You Forget! To Our Thousands Of Friends and Members of Organized Labor—This is to remind you that the Oxford Theatre does not employ members of Organized Labor and we respectfully urge you as our friends not to patronize the above theatre—Theatrical Stage Employes and Moving Picture Operators, Members of American Federation of Labor, Pennsylvania State Federation of Labor, Central Labor Bodies of Philadelphia."

Also, cards were distributed by hand in the neighborhood of the theatre bearing the same notice, and three or four members of the union handed similar cards on several occasions to patrons attending the theatre.

During the trial, in support of the charge of intimidation and coercion of the patrons of the theatre, the manager and cashier testified that "many people" had complained, and they missed some regular patrons, but they could not say how many complained or the reason they or others did not attend the theatre. However, no testimony was introduced which proved that at any time any of the theatre patrons had been intimidated or threatened, or that any violent acts had been performed by any of the union members.

In this important case, the lower court granted an injunction against the theatre employees operating any music-producing automobile referring in any manner to the theatre, from distributing any cards referring in any manner to the theatre, and from placing pickets in or about the theatre. However, the higher court carefully reviewed all of the testimony and reversed this decision stating the very important law, as follows:

DECISION:

"There is absolutely no evidence or inference of intimidation or coercion that can be drawn from the evidence. The movement of the automobile through the streets was perfectly lawful in the circumstances here shown, and the music produced from it was not a nuisance. There was not a particle of evidence of hostile feeling shown toward the people who went into the theatre. The mere distribution of the cards was not evidence of it; they were passed out like thousands of store or other similar circulars are today. The defendants (union employees) had the right of communication, or persuasion, provided their appeals were not abusive, libelous or threatening, and that the manner of approach to persons visiting the theatre was orderly. . . . If one has a legal right to do a particular thing, the law will not inquire into his motive for doing it. . . . The controlling factor must be: Do the methods used involve intimidation or coercion in any form?"

PICKETING IS LEGAL

THE TERM picketing has particular reference to a strike, boycott or some other industrial dispute. The courts have defined a boycott as being a "combination" of many persons whose sole purpose is to cause loss to some other person by coercing others to withhold their business or trade.

As previously explained, theatre employees have a legal right to decide upon the amount of their wages when they are not under contract with the theatre owner. Moreover, members of a labor organization may, without liability, peacefully persuade other theatre employees not to work except on payment of a certain amount of wages.

In other words, the members of a labor organization may perform picketing and other acts which are peacefully accomplished without threats, force, violence, false statements, insulting language, obstruction of traffic, or the like. An illustration of this law is found in the late case of Paramount vs. Mitchell (140 So. 328, Miami, Florida).

CASE:

The facts of this case are that members of a union picketed in front of a theatre building and displayed signs which explained to the theatre-going public that the theatre owner had refused to employ union operators. Obviously, the wording on these placards was intended to injure the theatre business, but in no instance was coercion, force or intimidation resorted to.

The theatre owner filed suit requesting the court to grant an injunction restraining members of the labor organization from picketing the theatre. However, the higher court refused to grant the injunction, and said:

DECISION:

"To congregate about the entrance of one's place of business and there use force, malice, or coercion to drive away its patronage or discredit its business is not free competition and is a form of malevolence that may be legally repressed. . . . The law recognizes the right of the trades, crafts, guilds, and arts, whether composed of skilled or unskilled workmen, to organize and invite others to join them. When organized, they may use the organization to promote their social, civic, and economic betterment, among other things, that of securing as much as they can."

WHAT IS INTIMIDATION?

WHILE IT IS well established law that peaceful persuasion to induce the public not to patronize a theatre is lawful, yet frequently intimidation may be and is accomplished by the mere presence of large numbers of union members, by demeanor and acts and without a spoken word. This is unlawful. However, the theatre owner who files suit is bound to prove by testimony of reliable witnesses that his patrons actually were intimidated, that his patrons actually were intimidated.

CASE:

For example, in the leading case of Theatres vs. Philadelphia Union (50 F. [2d] 189), it was shown that a theatre owner refused to employ a union operator, and the union members performed three distinct acts, as follows: (1) Sent postal cards to a very large number of theatre patrons which stated that the theatre owner did not employ union operators and "does not pay regular wages" or "an American living wage"; (2) drove an automobile in the neighborhood of the theatre which bore large printed signs and placards containing messages similar to those appearing on the postal cards and, also, had music to attract attention; (3) employed men to walk up and down in front of the theatre bearing printed signs which stated that the theatre "is unfair to organized labor."

The theatre owner filed suit and requested the court to grant an injunction against practice of these acts by members of the union. The higher court considered all testimony and refused, saying:

DECISION:

"None of the messages . . . contain any threat of injury or inconvenience of any kind to persons who patronize the theatre, nor do they contain any matter which is abusive or libelous. . . . In general, the picketing has been carried out without physical violence and without any threat, menace, insult, or annoyance to patrons of the theatre."

REGISTRATION OF OWNERSHIP

By M. MARVIN BERGER
MEMBER NEW YORK BAR

THEATRE OWNERS are not as a rule familiar with the wide-spread regulation dealing with the privilege of conducting a business under a name other than their own.

Assume for example that John Smith owns a theatre known as "The Palace Theatre." The theatre bears no part of the owner's name, as for example, "J. Smith's Palace Theatre," and the advertising, letterheads, telephone listing, etc., speak not of John Smith but of "The Palace Theatre." In short, we have a situation in which Smith is conducting the business of running a theatre not under his own name, but under the assumed name of "The Palace Theatre."

In such a situation as I have described, to enable the public—particularly creditors or potential creditors of a business—to discover the identity of the persons responsible for its management and obligations, and with the object of affording protection to the public against fraud and deceit, a majority of the states have enacted certain laws known as "assumed name statutes." These laws require a person or partnership doing business under a name other than the names of the persons interested in the enterprise, to file with some local official, usually the county clerk or the clerk of the county court, a certificate stating the assumed name of the business, together with the proper names and post office addresses of those owning the business.

These statutes generally define an assumed name as a name which does not fairly disclose the true name of the individual or each partner in the business, as the case may be. These laws usually refer to a business being conducted by an individual or partnership, and do not apply where the enterprise is owned by a corporation.

For failure to file an assumed name certificate, various penalties are provided. In a number of states, including Connecticut, New York, Louisiana, New Jersey, Michigan, Kansas, Indiana, North Carolina, Kentucky, Missouri, Massachusetts and Texas, the omission to file such a certificate is punishable by fine or imprisonment.

In other states it is provided that persons doing business under an assumed name will not be permitted to sue another party in the courts of the state before filing a certificate.

In still other states, in addition to the penalties already noted, there are provisions that the failure to file a certificate shall be some evidence of fraud in obtaining credit.

While generally the failure to comply with the assumed name laws has not been strictly punished, and the civil penalties such as denying the privilege of commencing suit have been relaxed, the statutes still remain on the books. Failure to file the certificate required by law gives rise to the possibility of expense and embarrassment if the omission is brought to light by someone interested in having the statute enforced.

It is therefore advisable, where an individual or partnership is operating a theatre under an assumed name in a state where an assumed name statute is in force, that the required certificate be filed.

PROJECTION ROUTINE AND INSPECTION

By AARON NADELL

Recommending procedures and schedules for proper operation and maintenance of equipment

THE VARIETY of projection room problems is so great that intelligence and a sense of responsibility, however adequate, are always in urgent need of the help that only systematic procedure can give them. Certainly projection room operation can never become wholly mechanical; but the necessity and value of routine lie in the fact that it prevents anything of importance being overlooked, regardless of momentary distractions.

Among projection room matters that cannot safely be neglected are: (1) The precision of every step involved in the operation of the show; (2) condition of equipment (this covers a wide area of ground, since there are almost innumerable ways in which equipment can go wrong, or threaten to go wrong); (3) condition of film; (4) condition of power supply; (5) availability of spare parts.

With regard to operation, the possibility of such momentary carelessness or forgetfulness, as may upon occasion overcome even the most conscientious projectionist, is best held in check by a routine of operating procedure that covers every step from switching on in the morning to switching off at night. The condition of equipment, film, power supply and spare parts is most easily maintained by a series of routine inspections, part but not all of which may and should be incorporated into the daily operating program.

METHOD IN OPERATION AND DAILY INSPECTION

IF SOME degree of daily inspection is to be part of the process of daily operation, it is logical to begin the day with a preliminary check-up of film and equipment. Precisely how much can be done in that connection will depend largely upon local rules of operation. In many of the larger theatres projectionists begin work an hour before the show starts; this preliminary hour being devoted to inspection, greasing, oiling, minor adjustments of all kinds, and especially to supervision of the condition of the film. Wherever a similar program can be followed, these preliminary processes may be conveniently listed on a daily inspection report form. Subsequently submitted to the manager, this form helps the projectionist by clearing him of any imputation of neglect should things go wrong. In his own hands, before submission to the manager, it helps him by reminding him of every least step he ought to remember at that time.

The details of such preliminary inspection will vary widely according to individual conditions, but its general outline will be more or less the same everywhere.

It may begin with inspection of the condition of the film, if that has not been left over from the day before. Thereafter the film is carefully put away into numbered bins, or otherwise stored, according to the facilities provided, in such a way as will minimize the possibility of threading the wrong reel. Precisely what precautions can be taken in this connection will depend upon local conditions, but under all conditions the maximum possible safeguard should be provided. If there is no precaution except the watchfulness of the projectionist sooner or later there will be mistakes in this connection. Nobody is always watchful.

The film having been disposed of, attention may be given to the equipment and the power supply. The latter will be of importance only in those locations where the voltage is subject to wide variation—in such circumstances adjustment of the voltage control device (if there is one) will be the logical preliminary to inspection of the equipment.

Projection room equipment needs lubrication, cleaning and other attentions, and if these are all listed upon the morning inspection form, they will all be attended to quite naturally as the inspection proceeds, and none will be overlooked.

The items of morning inspection and adjustment are almost innumerable, and the details will differ according to local conditions. A survey of each projection room will indicate what items should be listed in every individual case. The following may be regarded as the general requirements of pre-show inspection and adjustment.

PRE-SHOW INSPECTION

CLEAN INTERIOR of lamps and contacts, reflectors, condensers and objective lenses; examine arc leads for corrosion and test connections for tightness. Check operation of automatic arc feed motor; check condition of its brushes and lubrication. Check operation and lubrication of arc feed mechanism. This applies both to projectors and to spot and effect machines.

Lubricate projectors and run them for several minutes, checking for speed. Examine and lubricate projection drive motors. Clean film trap, sprockets and fire rollers. Wipe excess oil from bearings. Examine operation of take-up. Check film tension pads, fire valves and film trap.

Test focus of exciting lamp, examine lamp itself for discoloration or sagging of filament.

Examine operation of arc supply motor-generator, and any other motors or generators necessary to the operation of the show, including sound current supply generators, if these exist.

If there is no audience in the theatre a picture may be projected and examined for focus, masking, steadiness, travel ghost, etc.; if effect machines are used these also may be tested for adjustment.

Sound, if there is no audience present, may be tested through the stage speakers.

Such theatre tests can readily be made if the auditorium is opened to the public, say, half an hour before the beginning of the show, while the projection staff arrives an hour in advance. Where this is not the case these valuable precautions must of necessity be omitted.

Sound equipment is thoroughly examined especially as to all meter readings, signal lamp indications and vacuum tube filaments. Stage speakers may be checked with a click test to determine that all of them are working. Rheostats, switches, volume controls, etc., are tested for noise and cleaned and readjusted as necessary. Where storage batteries are used, their state of charge, cleanliness and need of water are to be checked during this pre-show routine.

There are thus, according to local conditions, perhaps a hundred or a hundred and fifty separate items of inspection and adjustment which, where possible, should be attended to prior to the show. Where this is not possible, these items should be covered in the course of show time. That, however, is not the safest procedure.

THE SHOW AND AFTERWARD

THE SHOW itself follows a pre-arranged routine, every step of which has been planned in advance and has become habitual. Wherever there are more than one projectionist the routine includes procedure for them to check upon each other, especially in matters of threading up and preparing each projector for operation. Each inspects the other's work before the next reel is shown on the screen.

A number of items of inspection occur in the course of the show: for example, how well the storage batteries are holding their charge; how well the exciting lamp is maintaining its adjustment, etc. There are a number of such items, which will vary not only from theatre to theatre, but from time to time, as this or that portion of the equipment wears or weakens.

Film should be examined during each re-winding for loose splices, scratches and oil.

Where there are more than one projectionist (and the personal relationship between them is such that hard feelings cannot result), they may observe and criticize each other's projection, the steadiness and sharpness of the picture, the smoothness of the changeover, maintenance of sound at proper volume and so on. Local conditions will readily suggest other points that are properly to be considered parts of the daily routine.

The routine closing of the day involves such work after the show as may be necessary to repair any faults developed or discovered in the course of the day's operation, as well as leaving a written reminder of any condition that may need attention the morning following.

Of the above, the details of the morning inspection should be recorded on a typed, mimeographed or printed inspection form. The balance of the day's routine should be typed and kept on the bulletin board until the projectionists find it habitual with them to follow precisely that procedure. Even then the written program should be left on the bulletin board for the benefit of any relief projectionist who may be called to that theatre to replace one of the regular men ill or on vacation.

The details of the procedure are built up with the help of instructions from the manufacturers of the equipment, especially lubrication charts and similar aids to routine maintenance.

PERIODICAL INSPECTIONS AND ADJUSTMENTS

ALL NECESSARY inspections and adjustments are not included in the daily routine. In fact, this daily procedure must be varied slightly according to the day of the week, to allow for those things that are to be done every other day, or every third day. Quite frequently some item of lubrication or cleaning will need attention only every second or third day. Confusion is best avoided, and proper attention insured if each such item is assigned to a definite day or days of the week, and the daily routine procedure modified by addition of an appendix for Monday, an appendix for Tuesday, and so forth.

WEEKLY INSPECTION

WEEKLY, monthly and semi-annual adjustments and inspections are preferably conducted according to prepared and pre-typed schedules. Where overtime for these inspections is impossible, the weekly inspection may be broken up into six or seven parts, which are added to the daily routine's appendix for Monday, appendix for Tuesday, and so on.

Items of weekly inspection and adjustment largely include more careful and thorough cleaning than is possible in the course of the daily procedure. Lamp houses should be very thoroughly gone over. Vacuum tubes should be lifted from their sockets, and the contacts cleaned, or burnished with a rubber eraser. Commutators and brushes may have more detailed attention during this inspection. Storage batteries should be thoroughly cleaned, all B and C batteries checked for voltage and for noise, fire extinguishers refilled, etc Spare parts also may be cared for during the weekly inspection.

Wear on film tracks and the guide rollers, sprocket teeth and sound gate are among the most important items of weekly inspection.

The weekly inspection is also a good time to check upon new parts that have arrived during the week. These should not be put in the spare parts cabinet, and trusted to be of use in an emergency, unless they have been carefully examined. There are other reasons for careful testing of such parts, especially to see that they are as represented.

The weekly inspection also provides a good suitable occasion for making up records of the life of parts in use. These life records are important to economical purchasing; without detailed knowledge of how long vacuum tubes of different makes, for example, last in service, comparative prices and manufacturers' claims mean very little. During the weekly inspection these records may be brought up to date, and notes made during the week of changes in equipment may be transcribed to permanent record forms.

MONTHLY AND SEMI-ANNUAL CHECK-UP

THE MONTHLY inspection is reduced in extent according to the thoroughness of the weekly routine, and will normally include such items as do not need weekly inspection but cannot safely be disregarded for half a year—condition of the screen, optical line-up of the projection systerm, condition of wear in gear parts that do not wear very rapidly—it is impossible to list items accurately in theory, or to distinguish rigidly between weekly and monthly items of attention. For example, the possible rotting of rubber pads or insulation by spattered oil may be an item of monthly check-up, but if this condition is unusually dangerous, in any given theatre, it may be checked weekly or in critical cases even oftener.

The semi-annual inspection, on the contrary, is not a matter of a few items not checked at other times, but should be extremely thorough. Everything that can possibly go wrong in the projection room should be looked into at least twice a year: this includes every soldered connection, every gear or bearing subject to wear, every obscure part that normally is not examined because it is reasonably safe or because it is hidden under other equipment. If suitable equipment is available or can be borrowed, illuminometer tests of the screen and gain runs of the sound should be made at this time. (In the larger theatres these tests will be made monthly, instead of semi-annually.) The half-yearly inspection also should be used to summarize statistical information covering the useful life of equipment, as compared with its cost; these summaries being of vital importance to future buying. Without them intelligently economical buying is not possible.

THE IMPORTANCE OF WRITTEN GUIDES

ALTHOUGH the foregoing is only a brief and inadequate outline of the nature of projection room routine and problems—and in view of individual variations cannot possibly be anything else—it at least reveals that projection room work and necessities cover a very wide scope, with plenty of room for important matters to be forgotten or overlooked, no matter how conscientious and experienced the projectionist in charge. The only precaution against oversight lies in the preparation of typed or printed forms that will serve as guides for a routine flexible enough to meet the unexpected, but rigid enough to prevent unintentional neglect. And, of course, even the most carefully prepared typed or printed forms will sooner or later be shown to be inadequate on some point and in need of revision. In the course of several such revisions, based upon care in the first place and experience thereafter, routines may be laid down that will be found to be moderately satisfactory. Once a theatre is in possession of such tested routines of procedure, their advantage, as compared with trusting entirely to action based on the spur of the moment, will be so obvious that no trouble taken in preparing them will seem to have been too great.

VARIETY OF GUIDE FORMS

Useful forms for the projection room include the following:

1. Daily routine inspection.
2. Daily routine operating guide.
3. Weekly routine inspection.
4. Monthly routine inspection.
5. Semi-annual routine inspection.
6. Lubrication guides. (Used in making up inspection forms.)
7. Meter charts. (Showing allowable minimum and maximum readings of all indicating meters.)
8. Spare parts list. (Showing number of spares of each part to be kept on hand.)
9. Installation charts. (Showing when each part was installed, as a guide to how long it is likely to give safe service.)
10. Service records of each part used. (As a guide to purchasing.)

This list is not exclusive, of course, and local experience will readily suggest other forms (a record of troubles, for example) that may usefully be added.

I recall having once paid $100 apiece for fixtures not as good.

COSMETIC ROOMS

Special rooms for women where they may apply cosmetics before leaving the theatre for the street are well appreciated by the feminine patron and worth their cost to theatres able to have them. You can create a room along the lines of that shown in Figure 3 for as little as $160, including painting, but not including carpeting.

SEAT LIGHTS

In a previous article we noted the desirability of substituting cement floors for wooden floors. This can be done for 15c a square foot, and while the floor is up you can wire for seat lights at a cost of about $4 per outlet.

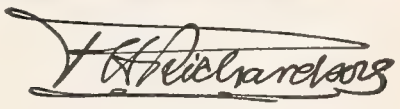
TOILET ROOMS

Toilet rooms are departments of the theatre which are most frequently neglected, and ones which should be most carefully equipped and maintained in a semi-public building of the character of the motion picture theatre. New tile walls can be installed for 75c a square foot, while tile or terrazzo floors can be laid for 65c a square foot. New valves can be placed in the basins for $1 each. New basins are now priced at $15 each.

Due to unavoidable delay in the completion of the article by Francis M. Falge scheduled for this issue, it was necessary to postpone it until the next.

F. H. RICHARDSON'S COMMENT

• • AND ANSWERS TO INQUIRIES •



THESE ARE NO TIMES FOR CARELESS PROJECTION

RECENTLY I visited the projection room of a large Broadway theatre in New York City after watching a performance therein. The visit was inspired by two projectional outrages in one production. The projectionist had permitted the trailer of one reel to show on the screen for at least one second (24 frames), and had permitted the picture to run sufficiently out of frame to show a narrow strip of frame line at the top intermittently for at least 100 feet of film.

Years ago such things were tolerated—indeed, more or less expected! Today no projectionist having any respect either for himself or for his profession would permit such totally unnecessary projection errors to appear in view of an audience. If by some accident he did so, he would feel very thoroughly ashamed of it, especially when two such glaring evidences of carelessness had appeared in one production.

Having ascertained which of the two men was in charge of the projector when the faults appeared, I stated very clearly my opinion that such faults in projection today are inexcusable and that it was the union's duty to see that its membership did not include men who permitted them. The reply was:

"Aw, what's eatin' yuh, Rich. Such things are bound to happen once in a while. The boss has not raised any kick. Anyhow, what has that got to do with the union? I pay my dues and don't see where it is entitled to any yell."

That, in substance, was the answer. The boss had not kicked, and poor or mediocre work was none of the union's business! With both points I find myself totally out of agreement. If such things occur on a theatre screen and the manager makes no protest, then certainly the theatre stands in urgent need of another and better manager. The manager who permits such careless work is more of a mis-manager than anything else.

As to such things being no business of the union, if we accept that as true, then it automatically follows that the union ties up the labor market insofar as applies to projection, forces certain standards of pay and in return permits its members to do just as they please about giving service. Could any man in his right senses agree with such a one-sided proposition as that?

My view is that it is entirely necessary, right and proper that unions, within reasonable limits, establish wages and working conditions. All past experience has proved that left to himself, the employer, as is more or less natural will pay only what he must pay, and the must pay almost always is far below a figure best for all concerned, including, in the end, the employer himself.

Having tied up the labor market, however, and established minimum wages and proper working conditions, the union certainly should see to it that the men it supplies deliver projection in workmanlike form, and that carelessness and the resultant sloppy work such as I saw that day, be penalized. Most certainly such poor work is the business of the union. It should do everything possible to force its members to "deliver the goods."

The real projectionist very seldom, or never, has such things happen. He is on the job in the fullest sense of the term every moment he is on duty. True, once in a while something may happen even to the most careful man, but a frame line showing on the screen for at least one hundred feet of film represents nothing but inattention to the business of projection. It should not be tolerated in the smallest village theatre, much less in a deluxe theatre where audiences pay relatively high prices.

It is extremely unpleasant for me to write in this wise. I do hope I won't have to do so again for a long, long while to come. We should be well past the Sloppy Ann days of projection. When you are on duty, be on duty. In the one-man room, the projectionist may have some legitimate excuse for such things once in a while, but there can be none in the two-man room.

PERFORATED VERSUS SOLID SCREENS

RICHARD KUESTER, a projectionist who has long done creditable work in one of the New York City picture palaces, discusses perforated and solid screens as follows:

"I liked the paper you read recently before the joint meeting of the New York Section of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers and the Projection Practice Committee of the same body, in which you discussed perforated versus solid screens. It seems our engineers are careful to work very hard to improve everything relating to projection right up to the last notch—except its visual elements.

"I doubt the possibility—or should I perhaps say probability, of getting very far in the matter of eliminating perforated screens, however, until such time as our engineers have developed a new and rather radically different type of speaking unit. Present loudspeakers are too bulky. They require a great deal of space and are difficult to handle. [Kuester works in a very large theatre where stage presentations form a good part of the bill. He forgets that only a relatively small percentage of theatres, viewed as a whole, use presentations, hence in them there is no necessity for moving the loudspeakers.—F. H. R.]

"If a small, compact loudspeaker, such as the dynamic speaker, could be developed so that results would equal the present rather huge affairs, I am sure it would not be at all difficult to convince exhibitors that perforated screens are too inefficient to justify their being displaced by solid surface ones.

"However, there is a secondary difficulty. Many of our largest and finest theatres use the "magnascope" picture, which fills practically the entire stage opening. The huge screen remains in place during the entire show, being, as every one knows, masked down for the regular-sized picture. There would be little room around it for loudspeakers, hence they would be located at its rear."

Freely granting the fact that there are rough spots that must be ironed out, what of it? Almost every improvement calls for more or less "ironing out" of difficult points. Also granting that perforated screens are really necessary in the relatively few theatres where seating conditions are themselves in violation of good practice for motion picture theatres, still the "ironing out" can and by all means should be done. That is what we have high-priced engineers for. If they can't take care of such matters, let them spend a few moments explaining the why and wherefore of their high salaries! The elimination of the perforated screen in all theatres where there is no real justification for its presence, will not only greatly improve visual results, which sound men now calmly ignore, but also will prevent waste which exhibitors, especially nowadays, can ill afford.

As to magnascope, what Brother Kuester says is quite true, yet I believe it possible that in most cases even that handicap might be overcome were a real, honest effort made to do it. As I see it, the real trouble is that sound engineers now having things pretty much their own way, are not sufficiently interested in visual projection to make any very real effort to work out methods and equipment to effect the change from perforated screens to solid ones. That sounds a bit rough, perhaps, but I believe it is about time some one informed those very estimable gentlemen where they disembark. I am with them in everything that is right and proper. However, I most emphatically am not with them in the matter of foisting screens containing a matter of thirty holes per square inch (4,320 per square foot) of surface, merely to gain some slight improvement in sound results, remembering that in the great majority of cases the "perhaps" should be in large capital, black-face type. It is only true that real gain for sound is effected by placing loudspeakers at the rear of a perforated screen when a considerable proportion of an audience sits at a relatively large angle to the screen surface, and then the benefit is only to the portion of the audience so seated. For such patrons there is some gain in sound, but loss in visual effect. For the rest of the audience there is loss in visual effect and no noticeable gain in sound, if any at all. I am thoroughly convinced that the perforated screen may be dispensed with to advantage, everything considered, in at least three-fourths of our theatres—perhaps in even more.

FUSING PORT FIRE SHUTTERS

MANY TIMES I have directed attention to the futility, verging upon foolishness, of placing dependence for quick action on port fire shutters fused with metallic fuses located near the ceiling, insofar as has to do with prevention of panic hazards. Many authorities permit, or even demand, that, the location of such fuses be many feet away from the various potential sources of film fire, usually near the projection room ceiling, on the theory that since heat rises this is the best place to get quick action.

It is of course very true that heat rises, and the plan would be all right but for two things: First, if the fire be confined to a closed projector magazine there will be but little heat generated, at least for a considerable space of time, though great volumes of smoke will be emitted. Under this condition, certainly a fuse so located would not let go for many seconds, if it did at all. Second, to be really effective in the prevention of panic, the shutters must fall almost the instant a film fire starts. Common sense plus a little consideration should tell any official that this is true, since once the audience sees blaze or smoke, the damage, insofar as has to do with panic is done. There will be one or there will not, according to whether the audience consists of excitable persons.

It then follows that to be really effective, port shutter fuses must be of such composition, and be so located, that they will let go immediately a fire starts, and the State of Pennsylvania, so far as I know, is up to this time the only state that has adopted a really sensible, quick acting fuse system, which I shall now, through the kindness of the Department of Labor and Industry of that state, lay before you for consideration.

First of all, as I have many times said, to avoid the threat of a panic, it is essential that all gases generated by fire be removed from the projection room to outer air as fast as they are formed. Otherwise smoke may and probably will escape into the auditorium and alarm the audience. In Figure 1 we may see just how this matter is taken care of in Pennsylvania by regulations promulgated by the Department of Labor and Industry. Notice that the motor must be connected to an exit (emergency) light circuit, which is of course never dead while an audience is in the theatre. This, however, is qualified by the requirement that this may only be done in case the emergency light circuit carries constant voltage. Otherwise it must have an independent circuit of its own.

I have here a possible criticism of this plan, and in that I am possibly in error. It is that it would seem the fan air inlet might better be located inside the projection room. The effect would be the same with regard to suction in the main pipe, and the air fed to the fan would add much to the exhaust capacity.

In Figure 2 we have a view of the general plan of fusing, with various detail diagrams. The "automatic switch" is attached to the shutter master cord in such manner that when the master cord is slackened the fan is instantly given its full power. This also, it will be observed, happens if the shutters be dropped by hand, as may be done by pulling ring off hook G located beside the entrance door.

Observe detail C, in which the film loop shown in detail E extends through a slot cut in the base of the upper magazine, where it is held in place by a suitable metal binder—say, a round bolt of some size. The inner end of the film loop would thus be held, of course, immediately over the upper loop of the film as it passes through the projector, and would be struck by flame and severed almost instantly a fire started at the projector aperture, thus dropping all fire shutters in, at most, from one to two seconds. The film fuse over the rewinder would act with equal certainty and promptness. One may also be installed over the film cabinet, or anywhere else it may seem advisable.

I have but one criticism of the Pennsylvania regulations: They compel the use of either this system of fusing or "some other equally efficient." Sounds all right, but provides room for argument and for talking an inspector into approving some other system which really may be far less efficient. Again I say that in the matter of efficiency, we are in this matter dealing with split seconds and the complete prevention of audiences from having knowledge that there is a fire in progress. My compliments, however, to the Department of Labor and Industry of the State of Pennsylvania. In this matter it has done exceedingly well. Other states and cities should adopt the system.

lector lens, I think it is called) breaking. Sometimes a lens won't last an hour before it cracks. Can you suggest any remedy?"

Such breakage may be caused by so many different things, or by a combination of so many things, that no specific remedy could be offered without a personal examination. However, here are some of the points you might carefully investigate:

(A) Have your lamphouses all the ventilation they can stand without disturbing the light sources? Possibly the vent holes are stopped up, or partly so, which would of course mean abnormal lamphouse temperature and unnecessarily hot collector lens. (B) Has your arc (I assume it is an arc) a long tail flame. If so, and the flame extends out rather vertically, it would tend to heat one point at the top of the collector very fast when the arc is struck, and that would of course induce quick breakage. (C) Examine the lens mounting. If iron touches the lens edge at intermittent points it would probably induce breakage. In such case I would obtain some thin sheet asbestos and separate the glass and metal with it. (D) Possibly you have your arc too close to the lens. Improbable but possible, by reason of a too-short focal length condenser.

If you have a plano-convex condenser, use a 6.5-inch focal length collector and a converging lens of sufficient focal length to establish the right distance light source to collector lens. I cannot tell you what the right distance is, not knowing anything about your amperage or anything else, except just that your collectors break too often.

TO CLEAN SOUND APERTURE

JOHN L. CRANSON of New Orleans, La., writes, "The Western Electric book at one point says, 'When using film pickup, after running each reel, wipe off with a rag the light aperture in the aperture plate and tension pad of the film reproducing attachment so as to guard against possibility of dirt accumulating and obstructing the light beam.' This seems to me to be very poorly worded, and as it reads, incorrect. How about it?"

If you have correctly quoted the paragraph it certainly could not have been much worse as to wording; also, it is a very poor instruction. The meaning is fairly evident, but it should have been expressed something like this:

When using film pickup, after projecting each reel of film, be sure to clean the sound gate aperture. One way is to wipe same with a soft, lintless cloth, afterward blowing sharply against aperture to make sure bits of wax, dirt or lint have not lodged therein; also, make sure that nothing adheres to the tension shoes. The projectionist cannot be too careful about this.

Most of the Western Electric instructions are carefully prepared and well worded, but occasionally, as in this case, a balk occurs. Western Electric, however, has no copyright on "balks." We all do it more or less.

The big fault in this particular instruction lies in the fact that the projectionist is merely instructed to wipe with a "rag," without any caution as to the said "rag" being clean and without an accumulation of lint. It is not sufficient to assume the man will know enough to do that. Instructions in such matters should be explicit. They should cover all points necessary to completeness. The use of the term "rag" is suggestive of sloppy work, and certainly sloppy work won't do at all in this particular matter.

PROJECTION IN BALTIMORE

RECENTLY friend daughter treked off down Maryland way for a visit to friends in Baltimore. At my suggestion she called upon Brother Nicholas J. Ropka, business representative of Local No. 181, to get the low-down on projection activities in that great city. I had not heard from 181 in quite some while and was wondering if it and all its members were asleep. Friend daughter assures me they are not. Quite the contrary, things seem to look pretty darned good. Here is friend daughter's story:

"A phone call brought Business Representative Ropka from the comfort of his Sunday fireside out into the cold of a disagreeable day, to the end that my dad's daughter be shown true southern courtesy. After a brief chat concerning things in general, a call was made at Keith's show shop, where Joseph E. Dougherty, John Bedfore, George Despeaux and Frank Schmitz shoot animated shadows at the screen in two shifts (the men, not the shadows) and in good form. One of those well known up-an-iron-ladder projection room entrances, which same looked a bit precarious, discouraged a visit to the room itself. However, standing on tip-toe I was able to glimpse what seemed to be a small, but very clean, neat room.

"Next on the list was Loew's Stanley theatre. Having first climbed what seemed half-way to Heaven, we reached a decidedly clean, well equipped projection room, on the staff of which were Samuel Isaacon, president, and Carroll Bayne, recording secretary of Local 181, F. P. Perry and Daniel Lane were the other two men.

"The equipment consists of three Simplex projectors equipped with Hall and Connolly H. I. lamps, two Brenkert spots, and one Brenkert effects projector. I was told the projection angle is only 18 degrees, but it certainly looks to be more. The theatre, Baltimore's largest, seats 3,700. Its projection distance is (get this!) 198 feet. Looking through the observation port one gets the idea the light rays should be provided with airplanes with which to reach the screen. The projection room is itself of ample size and seemed to be well ventilated. While I did not inspect the battery and other rooms, I was assured they were in keeping and in the same state of immaculate cleanliness as was the main room and its equipment.

"Incidentally, to the credit of Baltimore exhibitors every theatre in that city has two projectionists on duty each shift, which we all very well know makes for better work and a higher safety factor. It certainly is up to Local 181 to see to it that its members deliver maximum results under these conditions, and I believe from what I saw they are doing that little thing, too.

"After a short but most pleasant visit to the Stanley, we went over to Loew's Century theatre, where I viewed an adequate projection room, though not quite so large as the one at the Stanley. Both the room and equipment were clean as a new pin. At the rear was the rewind room, wash room, etc. I was privileged to meet two of the four projectionists, Lawrence Griffin and James McGinn. Those on the opposite shift are Fred L. Gibson and Everett Hoxter.

"Leaving the Century we entered a hoist-me-quick and shot upward to the beautiful little Valencia, located immediately above the Century. Manager Jack met us in the charming little lobby and did the honors. The Valencia is most comfortable and, if I may say so, homelike.

"In the projection room I shook hands with Irvin Whitehill and Harry Frazier who, together with David Silverman and W. Schilk, make up the projection staff of the theatre. The room was spotlessly clean. There were three Hall and Connolly equipped Simplex projectors and one spot. A clean, well ventilated battery room adjoined, as also did a well appointed rewind room.

"Manager Huwig was apparently almost as much interested in the work of projection as were the men themselves. 'I regard the projection room,' said he, 'as the one most important place in the entire theatre. It therefore is one I should have all possible knowledge of.' He tells me they have just recently completely reconditioned their projectors, with very decidedly improved results. Manager and projectionists seemed to be in perfect accord, in the matter of all working for the good of the entire show.

"In all theatres visited I could not but notice the cleanliness and well cared for appearance of both the rooms and the equipment therein contained. The men gave me the impression that they were real motion picture-sound projectionists and genuinely proud of that fact. They seemed to be alert and very much on the job. Remembering the last visit Dad and I made to Baltimore some years ago, I could but note the improvement.

"I spoke to Business Representative Ropka about this. He said, 'Miss Richardson, that is because of the fact that I insist upon our men being up to date and on the job. I will not send any member out on any job unless I am sure he can and will make good. He has to know his business. Not only that, but also he must attend strictly to it. As a result of this policy the men make it their business to visit other theatres in their spare time and familiarize themselves with the various sorts of equipment they may be called upon to handle. They study. They know they are expected to deliver the goods and therefore prepare themselves to do it. Every man, from those in the smallest house out in the subur-

"Mr. Ropka impressed me as being very much of a live-wire. He is, I believe, a business representative who will stand by what he believes to be right, and from what I saw in Baltimore theatres, his ideas of right come close to what I would myself call right. The manifest improvement in local affairs and the conditions he has managed to maintain in these very difficult times provides ample proof that he has the real interests of the men, of the local, and of projection (and therefore the exhibitor as well) at heart, and is working hard for and in the best interests of all concerned.

"I wish to thank Mr. Ropka most sincerely and all the theatre folk who were so courteous and kind to me. I shall hope to be able to visit Baltimore again and to have my dad along, for I just know he would enjoy those clean, well kept equipments, and would enjoy a visit with you all, too.

"Incidentally, in the Stanley I met Manager Steinback, who only a short while since was assistant to our good friend Jerry DeRosa, manager of our own charming Loew Paradise theatre here in New York City. He seems to be doing a good job and to be well liked—but we would expect that of any one who learned or worked under Mr. DeRosa."

AUTOMATIC CHANGEOVERS

I AM JUST in receipt of a typewritten description with blue print of wiring diagram of a new automatic changeover. An examination shows it as designed to start the projector motor and effect the changeover by means of an elaborate exciter lamp and optical circuit consisting of the usual lens, slit and p.e. cell. The effect is secured by a short sound track impression on the side of the film opposite from the regular sound track, outside sprocket holes.

There is just now a rush of inventors seeking to effect automatic changeover. And somehow I cannot convince myself that it is especially desirable.

First of all, I believe, it may be granted as at least desirable that the projectionist remain beside his projector while the show is in progress. That may be conceded as necessary to safety and best results. You admit that, do you not? All right, if the projectionist is beside his projector, where he should be, in the name of all the saints why does he need an automatic changeover? Make the projector too automatic and some of the aw-that's-good-enough gentlemen will hardly glance at it at all, except when they are compelled to put in a carbon and thread up. Maybe we might get that done automatically, too, though, and save them the trouble!

The fact of the matter is, however, no one has yet attempted, so far as I know, to light and adjust the light source automatically, hence it would be possible with some of these do-it-automatically gadgets that the changeover might happen without the light being lighted. And that would be real nice, wouldn't it!

The one I just examined has, as I said, its signals on the outside of the sprocket holes. Now if by some accident a bit of injury be done to that edge of the film it would seem that, so far as I am able to tell from the description and blueprint, we might have a changeover occurring most any time. I may be all wet on that, though. The description is not very clear. We seem, for example, to have a motion picture projector referred to under three or four widely different terms, provided they all refer to the same thing, as presumably they do. However, why call a motion picture projector a projector in one place, a "machine" in another, a "projection machine" in still another, and something else elsewhere.

This particular invention will work all right so long as everything is in first-class condition. But what is going to happen while producers are introducing such a marking into their product—assuming they will all do so? For a very considerable period we would have some prints automatic and some non-automatic, which certainly would tend to bring about many a blank screen.

My own reaction to such things is that we may well let the projectionist attend to his own changeovers, though every production should carry a competent motor start and changeover signal mark.

20,000-VOLT STORAGE BATTERIES

RECENTLY in compiling some matter with relation to battery cells, I communicated with the Electric Storage Battery Company, asking certain questions, one of which was how high it would be possible, from both the theoretic and practical viewpoints, to raise voltage and amperage with dry cell connections.

Theoretically, of course, there is no limit to either. Practically, however, I do not believe voltage could be raised very high before the whole thing would short and burn up. Maybe I am in error. I would like to hear from battery experts on this.

The company replied that it did not like to answer the question, as it had no information regarding voltage having been built up very high with ordinary dry cells. The answer then continues, "We handle only secondary or 'storage' batteries. Storage batteries have been installed for experimental service in laboratories for voltage as high as 20,000. We have one installation made about nineteen years ago which was designed to operate at 5,000 volts and to deliver 400 amperes."

Some considerable battery, if you would ask this individual. I had no idea it was possible to do such a thing. I think it will probably make quite a few of you gasp.

PLANNING THE THEATRE

A SERVICE CONDUCTED BY PETER M. HULSKEN, A. I. A.

The Question:

I OWN a theatre that was built about 10 years ago. Since then sound was installed, but the results were poor. Although the building is now closed I intend to open it up in a short time. I intend to make some changes if it will improve the sound. I shall describe the building to you and perhaps you will be able to tell me the faults:

It is 115 feet in length, 30 feet wide, and about 20 feet high in the back, with a slope giving it about 4 feet more to the front. The building is made of brick and tile with plaster covering the tile. The floor is concrete. The lobby is 15 feet deep, and the stage 25 feet deep, which leaves a seating space of 75 feet. There are three good-sized air ventilators in the ceiling. I had the back wall completely covered with beaver board and several large panels put on each side wall.

Will covering the complete floor with a carpet, and replacing the wood seats with cushioned seats, help? Any suggestion you can make will be appreciated very much. Thanking you in advance.—J. J. R.

The Answer:

I DO NOT think that covering the entire auditorium floor with carpets and replacing the wood seats with cushioned seats will eliminate entirely the acoustical troubles you are now experiencing in your theatre. This does not mean that changing the seats will not be an improvement as far as sound is concerned, but it will not be of enough importance for improvement unless the walls and ceilings are treated.

While covering the entire floor with carpet is certainly desirable, it is not absolutely necessary acoustically. For the ceiling and wall treatment I can suggest three inexpensive methods.

First, there are several makes of good absorbing tiles on the market, and with the beveled edge treatment one can make an interesting design for the ceiling. If these tiles are properly installed and blind-nailed, the ceiling does not even have to be decorated. I advise you to apply these tiles on furring strips to obtain the best results. One can obtain these tiles in two or three different shades of color.

Second, remove the finish coat of plaster from ceiling, and side and rear walls, and apply a coat of acoustical plaster. If the plaster is properly applied very good results may be obtained. If you do not care to go to the expense of treating the side walls, apply some decorative hangings or banners. While this may not give just as good results as the plaster, a great improvement may be noted.

Third, strip ceiling and rear wall with furring strips, apply plaster boards with a metal spring clip. This will eliminate all vibration. These clips are rather new and as ethics do not allow me to name this product I believe that any metal lath dealer can give you the name of the manufacturer. The spring in this clip stops any sound conductance to the walls or ceiling joists. However, it requires that the walls and ceiling be replastered, and that makes this treatment more expensive than the other ones named above.

NOTE:

IN THIS department Better Theatres will be glad to answer questions pertaining to the preliminary consideration involved in the planning of a new theatre or in the remodeling of an existing one. Only requests for ideas will be answered, since this department cannot assume the practical functions of an architect. All communications intended for this department should be addressed to "Better Theatres," 1790 Broadway, New York. They will be answered in this department. None will be answered by mail. Although only initials will be used in isgnin gthe questions published, it is a requirement that all letters bear the signature and address of their writers. The replies will be prepared personally by Mr. Hulsken, who is a practical architect and a member of the American Institute of Architects.

The Question:

WHILE VISITING the Chicago Fair I noticed several good effects obtained by the use of inexpensive wallboards and while the color effect struck me as overdone, I think this is a matter of personal taste. Now I am wondering if I could not use such material for the remodeling of my auditorium.

My theatre is of the old type and needs redecorating very badly, but on account of financial reasons I have put it off too long so that it has to be done right away, but unfortunately my means are very limited, so I have to do it as cheaply as possible. That is the reason why I am asking you if this material will do, as the prices which I obtained seem to be within reason.

The side walls are pierced with windows which are draped with hangings and the spaces between them are paneled with plaster mouldings, and no two panels are of the same size. If I remove these panels and brick up the windows I will have to replaster the entire side walls, as most of the plaster is in a bad shape anyway, so do you not think this would be the cheapest way out? The ceiling has a twenty-foot dome with an old-fashioned light fixture in the center, and the rim is studded with electric light bulbs. Will you be kind enough to tell me how to feature this dome, as it is an eyesore now.

The only thing that is troubling me now is that I am afraid that the side walls will be too plain, and applying ornamental plaster decorations would cost too much, so please give me your advice.—G. F. S.

The Answer:

A FAIR always has a tendency to establish unique ideas. I can not see any reason why you should not use this material for remodeling your auditorium, but do not try to imitate the color scheme.

For the interior of the auditorium use nerve-soothing colors. Remember the persons who patronize you want to be entertained, to relax and not be shocked. There are several kinds of materials you speak of on the market. Some even come in the natural wood finishes, which I think are really nice. You should use natural wood for mouldings as this would show off better in the panel effect.

There is now a small plane obtainable which can cut V-shaped grooves in these boards, and by proper use of them one can make quite an interesting design and eliminate the plainness of which you are afraid. Do not use ornamental plaster with this type of wall covering. To break up the plain wall surface I suggest you box out for a cornice and treat the exit doors with some built-out features. Consult your architect and let him design this interior for you, as he can make a very attractive interior. The money spent for this purpose will be small compared with the results obtained.

Why not build a cornice at the bottom of the dome, with a space for concealed reflectors, either for lamps or neon tubes? Arrange this for three or four different color effects and you can make quite a feature out of this dome. Have these lights controlled by a dimmer.

AUTOMATIC FOUNTAINS

● Photoelectric drinking fountains, operating automatically by means of a light beam and p. e. cell, have been installed in theatres here and there for several years, but not extensively. Now, however, it is to be noted that this novel piece of equipment, which in itself is quite theatrical, is attracting an increasing amount of interest. The G-M Laboratories of Chicago has installed several in buildings of the World's Fair, and has supplied a description of their design and operation and of the methods of applying the innovation to the theatre.

According to the account of G-M Laboratory engineers, the photoelectric control of drinking fountains is extremely simple in general conception. Primarily the equipment functions through the medium of a beam of light, usually invisible, which passes over the fountain and back at points approximately 6 and 12 inches above the bubbler, being finally focused on a photoelectric cell. Each time this beam of light is interrupted by the head of the person wishing a drink, water flows from the fountain. When this person then raises his head, he ceases to interrupt the light beam and the flow of water stops. In operation, the light beam controls the flow of water because the presence or absence of light on the photoelectric cell either permits or prevents current flowing through the "foto-switch" (photoelectric relay). The current from the foto-switch actuates an electrically operated water valve, which in turn controls the flow of water in the fountain. All handles are removed from photoelectric drinking fountains.

Photoelectric control can be installed on the majority of existing fountains. The principal equipment as supplied by G-M Laboratories normally consists of a lamp for projecting a concentrated beam of light, a photoelectric cell and amplifier, and an electromagnetic water valve. The usual arrangement is as follows:

Light source: Mounted on one side of the fountain, furnishing a beam of light of the proper concentration and intensity. This light beam is normally made invisible by means of a special light filter inserted into the lens system of the light source.

Adjustable mirror: A mirror is used on the opposite side of the fountain to reflect the light on to the photoelectric cell mounted beneath the light source. This provides a double beam of light which is so positioned that the top beam passes 12 inches above the fountain, and the lower beam 6 inches above the fountain.

Photoelectric cell and housing: The housing, in which the photoelectric cell is mounted, is normally placed below the light source.

Photoelectric amplifier: This takes the current released by the photoelectric cell and amplifies it sufficiently so it is strong enough to operate the electro-magnetic water valve. The amplifier need not be mounted with the photoelectric cell, although it should be not more than 6 or 8 feet away. It is often mounted in back of the fountain, on the other side of the wall, or else within the wall behind a decorative removable face plate.

Magnetic water valve: This valve is mounted in the best location in the plumbing system, ahead of the fountain.

Water filter: Always used with the water valve to keep sediment and rust from affecting the operation of the valve. This filter should be ahead of the water valve.

The above suggestions as to the location

THE USE OF ULTRA-VIOLET RAYS IN STAGE EFFECTS

THE DISCONNECTED hands, arms and legs that danced around on the darkened stage of the Radio City Music Hall in New York during a recent presentation is the result of new developments in the use of Stroblite and ultra-violet lighting in stage production.

In phosphorescent form these paints have been used on the stage before. In the present application they are fluorescent. The fluosescent ultra-violet colors are specially prepared colors that glow permanently in the dark as long as the ultra-violet lights are thrown on them. In the case of the Music Hall number various parts of the dancers were painted—in one case an arm, another a leg, and so on. When the footlights went out they were replaced by ultra-volet flood lights. The painted portions of the dancers were plainly visible. The rest of their bodies were invisible to the house. The result was a weird ensemble of stray arms and legs cavorting about the stage. Sometimes two or more of the dancers were grouped together so as to make two complete pairs of arms and legs with the heads and bodies invisible. At times they were grouped across the stage in a rehearsed chorus.

New as this recent art is, its uses have already been capitalized in other fields. Ultra-violet colors and lighting are being used for changing advertising signs at the World's Fair. They are being adapted to changing the complexion of a room under different lighting—a new angle to interior decorating. They are being prepared in home sets for the nursery and kindergarten.

The luminous paints, after a few seconds' exposure to light, will glow in complete darkness for several minutes and can be renewed indefinitely. The ultra-violet colors will glow in the ultra-violet light that hides everything else in blackness. There is a luminous makeup for hands and faces. In addition there is an invisible ultra-violet paint that cannot be detected after it has been applied until the ultra-violet light beams on it when it shows up a green. And finally different lights—ultra-violet violet, ultra-violet blue and infra-red—through spot or floodlights, can produce a constantly changing cyclorama of colors. The change necessary is the substitution of ultra-violet bulbs or filters in the light source.

At the convention of the Independent Theatre Supply Dealers Association in Chicago—Aaron Saperstein, head of the Allied States unit in Chicago and an exhibitor leader of the Midwest, with H. C. Dusman, secretary of the association. of the various units are applicable to wall-type fountains and fountains recessed into the walls, but are subject to considerable variation where occasion demands. For wall-type fountains (see illustration) it is inexpensive to construct attractive side-pillars on either side of the fountain. One pillar houses the mirror, the other the light source and cell housing, with holes in each pillar through which the light beam passes. In other cases, where the fountains are located in semi-circular niches or in corners, the mirror, light source, cell housing and amplifier unit are often mounted in the wall with removable face plates to provide access to the equipment. As in the previous case, holes are provided for the light beam.

In all installations there is one primary precaution to be observed; namely, that there be no protruding wires, nuts, bolts or screws—nothing which the public can turn, pull or twist. Everything must be out of reach or the public's curiosity will cause damage.

In point of service there are only three parts which need attention, the lamp, the amplifier tube and the photoelectric cell.

DEALERS CONVENE

● The third annual convention and exhibit of the Independent Theatre Supply Dealers Association in Chicago demonstrated the progress that has been made by that organization since its inception. Both from the standpoint of attendance and from character of exhibits which it enlisted from manufacturers from all parts of the country, the meeting held at the Stevens hotel July 28 to August 1, stamps the affair as the most successful get-together of dealers and manufacturers since the big conclave in Milwaukee a number of years ago.

Last year a small room sufficed to accommodate the exhibits of manufacturers, while at the last session a section of the regular exhibit quarters in the Stevens basement was necessary for the display. The new enthusiasm among dealers and manufacturers as evidenced by the large turnout is an acknowledgement of the efforts of J. E. Robin, president; H. C. Dusman, secretary-treasurer; and L. G. Dolliver, vice-president. Dealers showed their approval of their work by re-electing them.

One of the major developments of the Chicago meeting was the formation by theatre equipment manufacturers of their own organization to work in co-operation with the supply dealers. The new manufacturers organization, called the Theatre Equipment and Supply Manufacturers Association, elected E. A. Williford of National Carbon Company as president. O. F. Spahr, head of Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company, was named vice-president, and Oscar F. Neu of Neumade Product Corporation, secretary-treasurer.

measuring 8 points. (And an en, a term little, if ever, used today, was one-half this square, or an area, with reference to 8-point type, 8 points high and four points wide.) But this reference to the size of the type is no longer necessary to a determination of the value of the em. One is sure of being understood by the printer if one uses it not as the square of any pointage, but merely as a unit of space measurement 12 points wide.

Now the printer will understand you if you use the unit em as a space 12 points wide, but he will also understand that you want a space 12 points wide if you use the term pica. Generally, however, the em is used with reference to the length of a line of type, while the pica (still meaning a space 12 points, or 1/6 of an inch, wide) is employed with reference to dimensions other than those of the line (or slug) of type. That is, if you want type set in a line of a certain width, then you indicate that width as so many ems; but if you wish a certain amount of space between an illustration, for example, and a border, you indicate the width of that space in picas.

If this is confusing, it is so only because the two terms have become confused by people using the services of the printer without competent knowledge of his processes, and since they got along in confusion (with the generous aid of the printer himself), those preparing theatre advertising need seek no more enlightenment than has been given here. They need know only that an em is a space 12 points (1/6 of an inch) wide used to indicate how long a line of type should be; and that a pica is a space 12 points wide used to indicate how far apart some element of the advertisement should be from another. Indeed, if preferred, the em can be used exclusively to indicate any space 12 points wide, and the pica can be forgotten.

Because a certain kind of type suggests it, or for other reasons, it is sometimes desirable to have extra space between lines. Unless otherwise instructed, the compositor will set a paragraph of type solid—that is, if 10-point type is ordered, he will set the lines on 10-point slugs, and the lines will be as close together as the style of type allows. Now if extra space is desired between lines at the outset, the printer can be instructed to set on a slug of extra thickness. If the type wanted is 10-point, then two points extra space can be assured between lines by ordering composition on 12-point slugs. But if the extra spacing does not suggest itself until after the type has been set solid, then the department which makes up the various elements of the advertisement into a finished product can insert a lead between each line.

This process of placing extra spacing between lines is called leading. One lead is equal to a thickness of two points (1/36 of an inch). A smaller space possible is a card, which is one-half a lead, or 1 point (thickness of a business card). Greater spacing can be ordered in terms of leads, or by naming in ems or picas the total depth desired for the aggregate number of lines, with equal spacing specified between each line.

With respect to leading, it is well to bear in mind that some styles of type set more solidly than others. This is because of the differences in the length of the stems (called descenders and ascenders, according to whether they rise above or below the central portion of the letter, the letter "p" having a descender, the letter "h" an ascender). The style in which this article is set has "short" characters, and although the slugs carrying these lines are solidly together, they appear to be leaded. This is because the stems do not come as near to the upper and lower edges of the slug as those of some other styles of type. Styles of type with "long" characters look better when leaded, particularly if set in the wider measures.

We shall have occasion in future to refer to rules. These are strips, usually of metal, which imprint a line, such as might be drawn by a stroke of the pen. They are used for indicating typographical divisions, for ornamentation, for borders and so on. The thinnest rule is called a hairline rule. The column rules of newspapers are hairlines. After that the thickness is measured in points, there being 1-point rules, 2-point, 3-point, 4-point, 6-point, pica (12-point) and so on. They may be combined to make two or more parellel lines of varying heaviness, and for some combinations several lines are cast on a single strip of metal.

Other phases of printing processes and their terms that those preparing theatre advertising may well wish to know, will be explained as the need arises in the course of subsequent discussions on type and layout.

[In the September 23d issue will be discussed the processes of engraving generally applicable to theatre advertising, and also a method being used more and more by which the newspaper receives the advertisement completely cast in a solid metal plate.]

water has not been treated, particularly in a brand new installation scale, grease and sediment accumulate in the boiler. This accumulation reduces the efficiency and thereby runs up fuel bills. This condition can only be eliminated by thorough cleaning. This cleaning is done by a method known as "blowing off."

GETTING RID OF GREASE AND DIRT

A CHEAP and satisfactory method is to close all radiator supply valves and remove all thermostatic members of radiator return traps where used or, if it is not necessary to clean the whole system, close the large valves on the supply and return pipes.

Examine the boiler carefully. There is generally a blow-off tap near the water line. Connect a pipe to this blow-off opening with a gate valve in it. Then run this pipe (or a heavy hose connected to the pipe) to the nearest sewer.

Now fire the boiler to about five pounds gauge pressure—then open the gate valve in the blow-off tap pipe. Repeat this several times. In this way you will remove all of the grease or oil that is floating on top of the water.

Now remove the safety valve (generally on top of the boiler) and pour into the boiler about four gallons of ordinary acid vinegar. Replace the safety valve and operate your plant as usual for a whole day.

Blowing off should be done during the night or in the early morning when the theatre is empty.

After a day's operation with the vinegar in the system raise a pressure of about 10 pounds in the boiler. Open the blow-off valve, letting the water and steam pass on through the blow-off line and to the sewer.

Keep up the pressure in the boiler between 5 and 10 pounds. After this operation is started carefully adjust the valve on the fresh water boiler feed line so as to constantly keep the water glass filled to the top. Continue this for not less than 3 hours.

The person conducting the blow-off must not, under any conditions, leave the immediate vicinity of the boiler during this time.

During the last hour permit the boiler to fill with water, and allow the hot water to flow out the blow-off connection into the sewer.

At the end of 3 hours close the feed water valve and permit the steam or hot water to flow from the blow-off connection until the water level in the boiler is about at the top of the gauge glass. Close the gate valve in the blow-off connection and with 10 pounds pressure pull the fire or shut off the oil burner and entirely drain the boiler through the boiler drain valve (at the bottom of the boiler).

If the whole system has been included in the cleaning process while the boiler is cooling, replace the thermostatic members in the traps of the radiator return lines and open the radiator supply valves. Remove the pipe connection from the blow-off tap and replace the plug. Close the bottom boiler drain and when the boiler is thoroughly cool refill to the proper level with fresh water.

If there is no water level blow-off tap provided, the safety valve on the top of the boiler may be used for the blow-off connection.

When systems using vacuum, condensation or boiler feed pumps are to be cleaned, it is good practice to close off the valve on the condensation returns to the pumps and permit all condensation to flow into the sewer for several days or a week prior to blowing down the boiler. Under such circumstances it of course is necessary to "crack" the valve in the feed water line sufficiently to compensate for the water lost from the boiler by diverting the returns into the sewer.

TESTING WATER IN THE BOILER

HERE IS A good test to determine generally the quality of water in the boiler. Draw off a sample of the water from the gauge cocks in a quart glass mason preserving jar. Have the water only about three or four inches deep in the jar. Boil this jar over a gas hot plate vigorously. If there is oil present and the water is strongly alkali the boiling will cause it to foam, sometimes in extreme cases it will overflow the jar. If the water is clear and free from oil or grease and alkali one can always see the top of the water emitting bubbles of steam. The water, however, will not be foaming.

Here is the way to clean a water gauge glass on a steam boiler without removing it:

1. Pour at least a tablespoon of raw muriatic acid into a cupful of hot water which may be drawn from the boiler.
2. Close both water gauge valves.
3. Open the top water gauge valve and also the petcock at bottom and blow the water out of the glass. Then immediately close the top valve and submerge the end of the petcock into the cup of hot acid solution. A vacuum is at once created in the gauge glass which causes the solution in the cut to be sucked up into the gauge glass.
4. Keep the petcock immersed and operate the top valve slightly and very carefully, opening and closing, alternately expelling and drawing in the solution until all the grease, oil, or other matter adhering to the inside of the glass is cut out. Then close the petcock and open both water gauge valves.
5. It is necessary to have about one pound of pressure of steam or more on the boiler before commencing this operation, which need not occupy more than 10 minutes. The result is a clean glass without the risk of breakage and the probable renewal of gauge glass gaskets, which is frequently the case when removing the glass for cleaning. . . . The total cost: 15 minutes in time and 15c. for acid—cheap for the protection it gives you.

Among Contributors to This Issue:

¶ The article, "Printing Terms and Practices," the second of a series on the physical structure of theatre advertising, is being written by the editor of Better Theatres in association with typographers and theatre advertising artists. The present and ensuing articles are preliminary to the main body of the series, in which the actual layout of theatre advertising, and the styles and psychology of type, will be discussed.

¶ J. T. Knight, Jr., (Preparing the Theatre for Winter) is a former manager and for many years a maintenance engineer in charge of large numbers of theatres. His present contribution is one of a series. Mr. Knight has been in the service of Publix for a long period, and is now in charge of theatre maintenance for the circuit.

¶ Leo T. Parker (Rights of Parties to Labor Disputes) is a Cincinnati attorney and a regular contributor to Better Theatres.

¶ Aaron Nadell (Projection Routine and Inspection) has been active in projection and sound for many years, in the employ of both manufacturers and theatre circuits. He has contributed to Better Theatres on a number of previous occasions, and will be recalled for his series "What the Manager Should Know About Sound." He is also the author of a published book on sound.

"This business needs a rebirth of the Barnum technique. . . . . .

We are not dealing with humdrum necessities—or even ego-satisfying luxuries. We're selling gay, glittering, exaggerated, improbable and sometimes idiotic unrealities. Why try to hand this kind of merchandise like you would shoes, ships or sealing wax?

SEATS AND SALES

WE hardly more than feel the slightly quickening pulse of upturn than the home offices up and down Broadway begin to murmur and whisper about a somewhat concerted increase of admission prices.

Naturally and properly the wish is always there. But it would seem more than evident, considering the number of dark houses and the extremely ample supply of seats available in those in operation, that this would be a time to make haste slowly.

It may be pointed out that it is not only the likely result but also the definite purpose of the National Recovery Administration to spread the purchasing power over a large number of individuals more than it is to increase the earnings of those now employed and adequately remunerated persons. The result, if any, is not to make each patron so much more able to pay for the motion picture but to enable more persons to patronize the box office. A few millions more employed, at even minimum wages, can mean a great deal to the box office by increased volume, but not necessarily much for increased unit seat sale prices. We shall have more buyers, rather than bigger buyers.

The very large exhibition plant of the motion picture with its millions of seats is thus presented with a volume of opportunity—but not an opportunity bespangled with the carefree spending of the boom-before-the-crash period, which was the period, let us observe, in which the exhibition plant grew so large and grandiose.

The people just getting back to work today have been through the ordeal and experience in limited buying and measuring of values. True the public has a short memory, when it has any, but it will be yet quite a while before spending is generally as casual as in 1928 and '29.

Assuming, too, success in the movement to spread the work over more individual workers and to shorten the working hours, the increased idle time can benefit the motion picture box office only as that box office meets the greatly increased competition which has arisen for the motion picture. Through the years of the depression the radio has gone star-wise and vastly increased its showmanship. The motor car has tremendously improved in performance and luxury at amazing reductions in unit price in relation to performance. Meanwhile all and sundry agencies are to work to get more money and more labor to spend on roads to ride upon. The daily and periodical press, which for three decades has been becoming less of journalism and more of vaudeville on paper, is doing an even cheaper and more effective job.

The motion picture sprang up and grew rich when it was practically without competition in the field of low priced amusement. It now has plenty of competition and it is not going to have less. The motion picture was made on volume, low initial production cost, low production and low exhibition cost, in relation to the gross market. It gave a big public of low unit buying power a great bargain.

The motion picture can still do it—and better than ever.

THE SHOW COLOR

VERY possibly just by way of getting on the band wagon with the Administration, the Department of Commerce down in super-heated Washington,' announces a consumer test which resulted in the finding that blue is the preferred color for packages. It seems a test was made in behalf of the drug trade. The announcement puts red—the preferred color of the show poster—down in the middle of the list, and asserts that it is approved and preferred mostly by children.

Mrs. Roosevelt's favorite color, according to the Fifth Avenue fashion propagandists, is blue, and General Johnsor has given us a navy blue emblem. But a blue eagle is biologically in the same category as a purple cow.

We protest that the Department of Commerce had better stay off the grass of the Bureau of Standards in the first place and that it is talking through the holes in its old panama hat, in the second place.

Blue may be the color for drug store packages, a color for the bilious, the unhappy and headache stricken, the bromo-seltzer sippers. But not until panties and scanties turn azure, will we believe the Department of Commerce on color. Meanwhile give us red, the rich ruddy color of good blood and good likker—the color of action for the show business.

WE do not, you might say, yield to anyone whomsoever, for precedence in appreciation of the best of Britain in everything from Bond Street to rhetoric. And we are true, in our fashion, to our admiration of Wardour Street in London, too, and so we are, after a manner of speaking—a very bad manner—given furiously to think, no end, by certain expressions coming from that most worthy and most British editor of the Daily Film Renter, located at numbers 89-91 of the same Wardour Street, W.1, none other than Mr. Ernest W. Fredman, who writes in a recent issue using words as follows: " . . . colour . . . which he took considerable pains to assure me was going to be the cat's whiskers. . . . Well, apparently he ain't so hot on it now. . . . " He continues elsewhere: " . . . Went over with 'Bo' Dowling, a great buddy of his. . . . " In the course of the morning in Wardour Street at Mr. Fredman's office someone "blew in" and also someone told him that " . . . Solly is putting his own dough down. . . . " Mr. Fredman was in New York only last year. It must have been something in the water.

WANING CYCLE

With the sound premise that "the public does not want to be educated in the theatre, it wants to be entertained," Principal Pictures' Sol Lesser sees the market for authentic adventure films limited, will whittle last year's total of 18 of the type to a mere six, which will "adequately take care of the demand." Within three or four years, Producer Lesser foresees a new adventure cycle, but for the present, locales have been exhausted, from the jungle to the polar seas, while "too much footage showing outdoor backgrounds and tribal customs makes the audience feel that you're trying to shove education down its throat." From freelance cameramen for the most part comes Principal's foreign footage, with studio stories later wrapped around it. As in dress so in pictures, fashions change, but history often repeats itself. . . .

THEATRE'S OPERA

Spreading in the New York sector, following the success of an original idea, is the strange turn of theatrical events which finds grand opera, long king of the "class" entertainment, housed within the walls of the motion picture theatre. To New York's elderly, once famed Hippodrome, past its prime and its glory by many a day, early this year came the result of inspiration in entertainment promotion, the introduction of grand opera, box officed for the popular purse, and a large success. Closed for a few weeks, the Hippodrome next week will resume. To New York's Bronx Borough, and the Willis theatre, has the idea spread, via the formation of a new company, International Opera Stars, while shortly to open are similar situations in Newark, Philadelphia. Large stages would seem a requisite for planned film theatres, some day, perhaps, to perform no less than grand opera. Obvious is the new competition. . . .

HUNTING CENSORS

Sternly aiming to become a law enforcement body, the Kansas film censor board has undertaken to wage a decisive war against film "bootleggers," in which distributors are cooperating, the state attorney general in the background. Ready is Chief Censor Hazel Myers to deputize hundreds of state inspectors, to impound unapproved film brought into the state, shown there. Chief offenders are "jackrabbit" circuits, bounding from town to town, mostly where theatres are lacking, setting up one night stands. On the basis of Kansas farmers' good harvest of late, jackrabbits are eating heavily. Not necessarily are bootleg films objectionable in content, merely unapproved. . . .

FLYING SALESMEN

Perhaps from fast and far flying Arthur Loew, MGM foreign chieftain and airplane enthusiast of the first water, the company has derived its plan, now under consideration, for a company plane, company pilot, to be at the disposal of foreign sales representatives traveling abroad. Quicker transportation, the saving of time, money are stressed as advantages. Cited is the trip from India to England, 26 days via water, a flashing two and one-half days' flight by plane service. Quick to grasp mechanical opportunity is the motion picture industry, today itself an art-industry built considerably on technical achievement. . . .

WARNER PLANNING

Seen is the possibility of the Brothers Warner, entrepreneurs of the screen, bringing to New York, in legitimate form, musical comedies featuring Warner players of note from the Coast studio, in the imminent purchase of property backing the Hollywood theatre on Broadway. Not yet decided is the directorate on the suggestion to enlarge the house, use it to stage musicals. Free was theatre executive Joseph Bernhard to admit the company was dallying with the notion. . . .

REFLECTIONS

True to the screen as to the stage of which he spoke are the reflections which last week fell from the still agile lips of Daniel Frohman, dean of the American theatre, celebrating his 82nd birthday quietly in his studio atop the Lyceum theatre. Said he: "There is never a bad season for a good play. Audiences are more sophisticated now than they were then (1880-90) . . . Drama reflects human nature in every age. Human nature is always the same—it is only the customs, costumes and social conditions which change. . . . Plays must appeal to the emotions, and they must appeal to the multitude. Women like emotion, men like character, and the masses like movement. If these three elements are combined you get a good play." Or a good picture. . . .

GERMAN DECREE

Yet may American newsreel cameramen, shooting down on many a German spectacle, find themselves in trouble, perhaps pursued by vigilant, fast moving police scouting planes under orders of Aviation Minister Hermann Wilhelm Goering. From the Ministry last week came a sharp decree, in keeping with many another prohibitory declaration, requiring that passengers surrender cameras during airplane flights over Germany. Reports of an unidentified plane, recently in flight over Berlin, dropping "insulting" handbills directed at the government, resulted in the decree. Not unlikely is the expansion of the prohibition to include motion picture cameras, mounted on planes. Certain it is that such planes will find police scouts hot on their trail, seeking their identity, their reason for invading the Hitlerian skies without express permission. . . .

CHILDREN'S SLEEP

To the ranks of the scientists studying the effects of the motion picture on the immature child mind were last week added three authors of "Children's Sleep": Samuel Renshaw, Ohio State; Vernon L. Miller, Bowdoin; Dorothy P. Marquis, Yale. One part, apparently, is this study, of the larger investigations, fostered by the Payne Fund of New York. Traveling, to the lay mind certainly, in virtually a circle, the three report: seeing some films (type not specified) does induce a disturbance of relaxed, recuperative sleep in children. . . . "On the other hand, certain films may have an instructive and sedative effect that is good. . . . There is a distinct need for careful . . . study on individual children's reaction to movies, observed over a longer time. . . ." A not overwhelming contribution, perhaps. . . .

FOX TO SELL MANAGERS TO PUBLIC AS PART OF DECENTRALIZATION PLAN

New Campaign in Midwest to Effect "Genuine" Revival of Managers' Independence Will Involve 100 Theatres

Managers Will Be Permitted Selection and Dating of Product; Ads To Be Personalized; Wider Latitude Granted

by AL FINESTONE
Kansas City Correspondent

The process of decentralizing the nation's large circuit holdings from New York home office interference, begun in earnest late last year, was extended to the very doors of the theatres last week when a "declaration of independence" was signed, sealed and delivered to approximately 100 house managers of the Fox midwest circuit, by Elmer C. Rhoden, division executive. Mr. Rhoden's declaration, sounded at the circuit's annual convention, at Kansas City, virtually establishes localized operation to the extreme in this large division of midwest theatres, beginning immediately with the opening of the new fall show season.

Probably one of the most important phases of the new plans of the Fox management to effect complete localized operation will be an extensive campaign to sell each manager, personally, to his neighborhood patrons. In this manner, the executives hope to re-establish the old intimate relationship which existed before highly centralized operation, some several years ago.

Operation to be Individualized

Decentralization activities of the large circuits to date have principally revolved around the breaking-up of large blocks of properties into smaller divisions, either through receiverships, partnership sales, and the like, but these activities have not extended to any appreciable extent to actual local operation.

Mr. Rhoden told the managers that local operation is to be individualized with the new season, and as one of their new functions, the managers will be permitted selection and dating of product, to be cleared through the booking offices in Kansas City. Advertising is to be personalized and wider latitude is to be granted managers in local tie-ups. As far as the impression on the public is concerned, theatre operation will be on a par with the independently owned houses, the managers were told.

In announcing the new policy, Mr. Rhoden affirmed the belief that theatre management with few restraints and shorn of outside interference reflects itself in grosses.

Managers can now more closely accede to the wishes of their patrons in the matter of pictures and "you can listen to them and profit by their help without one ear cocked to New York, Los Angeles or some other seaport," the managers were informed.

New product and selling campaigns were discussed in detail during the two-day meeting, which concluded with a banquet, attended by Herbert V. Jones, Fox theatres receiver; Elliott H. Jones, attorney for the receiver, and exchange managers from Kansas City. All theatre managers from Kansas, Missouri, Iowa, Illinois and Nebraska were present at the session.

An intensive campaign will be launched by the 100 theatres in the Fox midwest division to inform the public of "the new freedom" granted managers in operation. The campaign, to begin early in September, will be built around personalities, the theatre manager and stars, with the manager's independence from outside influence as the theme.

Campaign material will be subject to adaptations and all will be localized, offering the manager more opportunity to express his personality and individuality.

Advertising is to be personalized, selling the manager as well as the theatre and program. Life-size photo enlargements of managers have been made for each house, which lend themselves to a variety of uses, particularly for lobby displays putting over special messages, such as personal endorsements. Trailers, booklets and newspaper advertising will carry out the same idea.

"You have a big story to tell," say the district managers in the campaign manual, "and it will mean money at the box office if your public is made to feel that they can call you up and make suggestions."

Advertising will stress that the manager can choose his own product and dictate policies and will be guided to a greater degree by the wishes of the local public.

In its determination to gain thousands of new patrons by stressing that through the new system of "personal selection" allowed managers, they will be free to satisfy local demands, the circuit will issue to the public a 16-page booklet explaining the "new deal" and describing forthcoming product, but emphasizing star personalities. The pamphlets bear a likeness of the manager on the cover and are replete with photos of featured players. The main idea is to get the booklets in the hands of those not now regular patrons.

"You should hear about the 'revolution' in theatre operation," the booklet informs patrons. "The motion picture industry has learned another lesson. Recent years have proved that theatres cannot be operated like automats; they cannot be links in a chain."

Brochure Has Personal Message

In line with the purpose of the brochure "to bring back old patrons and inspire new ones," a "personal message" over each manager's signature is presented on the back cover. The message urges stay-at-homes to "resume the movie habit."

"Back to Barnum" is the slogan of Fox Midwest theatres for the new season. A revival of old-time showmanship was ordered by Mr. Rhoden as a part of the plan allowing greater freedom to managers. Mr. Rhoden said: "This business needs a rebirth of the Barnum technique: We've converted the show game into the dignified 'theatre business.' We have discarded the flamboyancy, the color, the exaggeration of previous days. We take ourselves too seriously.

"Formerly the local theatre man was looked upon as 'different.' There was a glamour about him that set him apart from the dignified banker. Today in Rotary meetings you can't tell the two apart. And the business has lost something in this change. It has lost something that was precious . . . something that fascinated the public. Today's dignity causes us to shun such words as 'greatest,' 'colossal,' 'tremendous,' but I notice Ringlings still use them and they're not such bad showmen!

"The trouble lies in the foolish supposition that people buy entertainment with the same mental process that they use in buying cars, refrigerators or diamonds. But that's a fallacy.

"We're not dealing with humdrum necessities—or even ego-satisfying luxuries. We're selling gay, glittering, exaggerated, improbable and sometimes idiotic unrealities. Why try to handle this kind of merchandise like you would shoes, ships or sealing wax?

"The greatest of all showmen dress differently, talk differently, think differently and behave differently from the average individual.

Urges Picturesque Color

"I'm not suggesting that you buy a suit with half-inch checks, a doeskin vest and a ten-pound watch chain; nor am I suggesting that you have a gland operation to change your personality. But let's throw a little glamour around our operation. Let's not be afraid of a little exaggeration, a little picturesque color; let's lay our dignity on the shelf for a while; let's jazz things up a bit—let's bring back a bit of Barnum.

"The elephant is considered the most intelligent of all beasts. Circus men say he is 'almost human,' and in some respects he is. Men familiar with this great animal have learned it is not necessary to drive the restraining pins deeply into the ground. It is only necessary to make the elephant think he is securely fastened. As he feels the shackle around his leg and sees the pin in the ground, he doesn't make a try for liberty.

"Under the new policy of operation, I hope no manager for Midwest Theatres will be like the elephant. We have done everything possible to give you freedom of action. If you insist on remaining tied, it's your fault, not ours.

"In accepting this new freedom, we know you won't behave like certain crazy elephants and 'go on a rampage.' But we would even prefer that you do that than not to take advantage of this opportunity.

"Only through individual effort, enthusiasm and initiative can your theatre become a success.

"There are no shackles around your leg. You are free to chart your own course. If you ever felt restrained in the past, forget it. Join with me in bringing about a genuine revival in managers' independence."

The World Market and the American Picture

by MARTIN QUIGLEY

Mr. Quigley, somewhat more in the mood of one sauntering Europe than as one ardently pursuing journalistic missions, has come back from an excursion abroad with observations which are the more optimistically encouraging for the industry because they were made and recorded without fervor.

The exhibitor, both here and abroad, will be interested quite as much as the producer, because of the large influence which the existence of the world market has ever exerted on the box office wares.

It is made clear, one finds, that the motion picture industry appears certain to continue a world industry despite the intervention of sounds and the complications of the languages. Mr. Quigley's well considered observations put the minor and transient crises and problems into a perspective which recognizes the evolutionary forces which so inevitably control the industry, let men and factions and patriots do what they will.

—THE EDITOR

AN EXAMINATION OF EUROPEAN film conditions at this time clearly demonstrates that the alarums sounded with the coming of the talking picture have not been justified. The possibilities of the American picture abroad have been somewhat curtailed but with right handling vast possibilities still remain. Motion picture production is not going to become distinctly a national activity, as was predicted. The boundary lines of language remain, but thanks to better methods in dubbing, these lines are no longer barriers.

The American picture is pre-eminent the world over, and with the exception of England no country at this time is making pictures which satisfy even their own people, aside from contending in the international market.

Insofar as Hollywood makes a wise choice of subjects, with careful study as to their acceptability in the various foreign markets, the American picture will go on to greater effectiveness in the European markets. These markets will be restored to totals vastly exceeding the pre-talking picture days, provided only there is a fortunate escape from arbitrary governmental interference.

American companies should plan their European market activities in keeping with these possibilities. Great care should be devoted to the selection of foreign representatives because each of these must necessarily be an ambassador of good will as well as a merchant.

THE AMERICAN PICTURE CONTINUES a highly successful career in the English market. The better American pictures are exceedingly well-liked. There is of course much criticism of the American pictures in England just as there is criticism of the American pictures in America. But the better ones enjoy a fine reputation with the British public. They continue to outrank substantially the product of the home studio, but out of the home studio has been coming an increasingly larger number of pictures which are satisfying to the British public. It is perhaps unfortunate that at least some of these are considered as satisfying as they seem to be because any impartial judgment would pronounce them of absurdly low quality.

There is an exceedingly interesting and, we believe, exceedingly dangerous situation in this matter of the acceptance being given to a certain type of English picture by the English theatre-goer. The picture in question is one which some of the English studios turn out to serve the domestic market without any hope of exhibition elsewhere. The fact that it is cheaply done is not so significant as the fact that it is badly done. Yet the devotion of the public to the cinema is such that these pictures actually make money. The fact that they make money is explainable on the ground that the public has a natural preference for the British picture and these pictures are thoroughly British even though thoroughly unrepresentative of the quality usually associated with British manufacture.

These home consumption British pictures are regarded by some experts in the trade as a safe and sure means of upbuilding the British film industry. In their viewpoint they involve small risk and because of public acceptance they return fair profits. But it seems to us that these pictures are a threat upon the security of the British industry. They represent nothing in the way of product progress, and while the public may for a time accept them there remains the risk of an almost inevitable revulsion on the part of the public which may some day discover that it is being cheated in not being given the best that could be given.

In addition to this there is an altogether different class of effort being made in the British studio which is the same effort constantly being made in the Hollywood studio. This is to make out of the given subject the best possible attraction, expecting for it the limit of distribution the world over. In this category several highly important attractions have been accomplished and there will be many more. It may now be acknowledged that the leading British studios, out of the great and earnest effort of recent years, have developed an expertness in motion picture production which enables them to compete in their principal productions against the best made anywhere else in the world.

During the past two or three years an increasingly larger number of British pictures have been creeping quietly into the American market. They have been under two severe disadvantages: first, the existing recollection of earlier British pictures which were lacking in entertainment values, and, secondly, the lack of the necessary promotion. Several very impressive subjects are in prospect for the coming season. These should do well in this market and if they fail it will be due to no lack of merit, but rather to the lack of effort to impress the American trade with the fact that the principal British pictures now coming over stand in a different classification from that of pictures of previous years and that England has finally made well-qualified entries in the world market.

A distinct handicap of the American industry in the English market at this time is due to too many pictures dealing dangerously with subjects destructive to the home, marriage and, indirectly the state. Of course the American industry is laboring under the same handicap in its home market but here the tendency does not receive the check which is promptly administered to it in England. In England a greater number of American pictures would do better if they contained more the American viewpoint and less the Hollywood viewpoint.

IN THE PROFOUND POLITICAL UPheaval which has taken place in Germany the motion picture business, together with virtually all other commercial activities, finds itself at this time sailing an uncharted course. Exactly where it is tending remains to be seen. In the meantime the struggle is a desperate one.

The motion picture business has not and cannot escape the forces and effects of the revolution. Politics, in a sense, has become the main business of the whole of the people. There is abroad in Germany a spirit of exaltation although it is not quite clear what the exaltation is all about. Of course a great people have been suffering a bitter privation—first in the spirit of sacrifice in order to win the war, and latterly, willingly or unwillingly, by virtue of the necessities imposed upon it. Quite naturally it has been a fertile field for the leader who had what appeared to the populace as a Message. Adolf Hitler apparently told the people what they wanted to hear. At any rate he has become for millions among the German people a symbol of regeneration, a leader who will be able to conduct them back to a lost greatness. He has put into the people a fervor of the intensity of a religious campaign which finds expression in every activity, including business.

The motion picture, while the Hitler regime lasts, will probably be used as an important instrument of propaganda, subjected to all of the inevitable incidental curbs and limitations. It is not an atmosphere which promises either artistic progress or commercial success. There is, of course, very little now in Germany in the way of freedom of speech and action such as we know in the United States. The heavy hand of the state is being laid upon production and while the resultant pictures may serve the purposes of the state they are not likely to contribute much in the way of cinematic progress. Another factor, of course, which contributes importantly to this end is the ruthless persecution of a large number of the best creative minds of the German industry. Erich Pommer, for instance, one of the really able producers in or out of Germany, has transferred his activities across the borderline into France, where he is now producing for the Fox Film corporation.

German production is severely handicapped through lack of adequate finance, a condition serious enough even without the added limitations. But there is a responsive motion picture public. Whether its responsiveness to propaganda films will be all that is desired remains to be seen.

The Hollywood picture in Germany requires only the right of fair competition. It is true that the public cordially approve the occasional nationalistic production which has some special appeal to their instinct of patriotism, but the general run of German-made productions simply have not the qualities of entertainment possessed by the subjects compounded out of the resources, experience and unusual talent of the American producer. The American picture to be successful in Germany needs only an opportunity to do so, unhampered and unfettered by governmental restrictions. The outcome in that regard hinges on many factors not determinable at this time, including how long the hectic fever of the present days will continue in Germany and how long it will be before this regime or its successor succeeds in returning to the Reich a condition of social and economic normalcy.

IN THE WHOLE OF THE FOREIGN language market and more especially in France and Italy there has been gradually taking place a development of great significance to the American industry. The national producers, after much trial and tribulation, have rather completely demonstrated their inability to make good motion pictures. Although they have had the advantages of government support and encouragement and although the publics have not only been receptive to but genuinely anxious for national production, the uniformly low quality of the product has finally robbed the publics of their enthusiasm and has turned them back in the direction of American pictures.

Hand in hand with this there has been a remarkable improvement in the results to be had out of the dubbing process. Starting with the fine production values of the American picture including staging, acting and story, it has become possible to substitute dialogue in the language of the country in a manner which makes the resultant picture entirely satisfactory to the public of the country. Of course not all subjects lend themselves to this treatment, but in actual experience it is now being found that when a well-chosen subject is effectively dubbed with the advanced methods now employed, the public either does not know that their language has been substituted for the original or else it no longer cares about the matter.

In various places abroad expert and experienced companies of dubbing performers have assembled. They are taking their voice representations of American players very seriously and are assisting importantly in attaining remarkable results. Among these dubbing performers local fame is obtained by the man who is Wallace Beery's voice and the girl who gives the vocal representation of Janet Gaynor, etc.

In Italy production has been limping for some time and it is now virtually at a standstill. Despite substantial government support it has been able to get nowhere. To Premier Mussolini the subject of motion picture production must be an extremely unpleasant one. Despite the encouragement which he has extended he has received in return nothing but disappointment. The product itself has been indifferent or bad and the costs have been high—so high, in fact, in at least one important instance in which government funds were employed that the principals of the company, one of whom was closely associated with the premier in the first days of the Facist regime, were subjected a few months ago to imprisonment.

Under the law no pictures may be shown in Italy except those in the Italian language. One exception, we believe, was recently made in the case of Columbia's "Mussolini Speaks"—an exception not difficult to understand. But in the violent spirit of nationalism which pervades Italy nothing is wanted except that which tends to advance the ideals of the state. Despite this, the American motion picture is now enjoying what might be considered unusual good fortune. Of course such is not any generous gift of the state; it is rather a situation incidental to the failure of the national producer together with the uniformly high quality of American pictures as compared with that of the rest of the world.

Here again the prospect for the American picture is decidedly good provided it is given a fair opportunity to compete.

THE FRENCH PRODUCER HAS BEEN rather more successful than his colleague across the Alps, but such success as he has had has been spotty and the results on the whole have been unimportant. French production merits no criticism beyond that which is regularly given in its own newspapers and magazines. We avoid a repetition of this criticism because it might appear unfriendly in a foreign publication. It is enough to record that the French have said and continue to say almost everything that could be said in disappointment and disgust over their pictures.

While the urge of nationalism in France is only slightly less than that in Italy, the French have a tradition of liberality with respect to things of an artistic and creative character. This probably contributes to the welcome which American pictures are receiving from the French public. However, the tradition of liberality is being held quite safely in check by the officialdom of the Republic. In only five theatres in Paris, and a like number in the provinces, are pictures in the English language permitted. But here again skillful dubbing of quality Hollywood pictures over-rides the nationalistic inclination, aided, of course, by the fact that no real competition in an entertainment sense is afforded by the output of the studios of the country.

The American industry faces a future of expanding possibilities in France provided only that it is given a fair chance to compete. But the threat of governmental interference constantly hangs over the French situation. From time to time violently restrictive measures are agitated, to which the government lends an attentive ear, apparently unmindful of the millions of dollars' worth of French merchandise which is received annually in the United States. So many varying factors come into play from time to time in respect to this phase of the matter that even the immediate future cannot be judged with any certainty whatsoever.

FELD, CHATKIN, KATZ LAUNCH NEW CIRCUIT

Monarch Theatres Officially Starts with Five Properties; James C. Bolger and Samuel Spring Are Executives

The formation of what promises to develop into one of the motion picture industry's important nationwide theatre circuits was formally announced in New York on Monday afternoon, in the form of Monarch Theatres, Inc., of which the owners, operators and officers are: Milton H. Feld, president; Dave Chatkin, vice president; Harry Katz, secretary-treasurer; James C. Bolger, head accountant; Samuel Spring, general counsel. Sam Katz is reputedly chief Monarch financier.

Mr. Feld and Mr. Chatkin, who for weeks have been laying the foundation for the new movement, were formerly in charge of Publix operations under Sam Katz, resigning in December, 1932, shortly after Mr. Katz abruptly left the corporation.

Harry Katz, a brother of Sam, was also in charge of certain Publix properties under the old regime, while Mr. Bolger, a former vice president of the United Cigar Stores Company, was head of Paramount Publix real estate activities in 1932. Mr. Gennett, too, was for many years a Paramount Publix official, having been identified with its accounting department, an assignment which he accepted following an association with the Bush Terminal interests, where he held the post of chief auditor. Samuel Spring is a noted motion picture attorney.

Headquarters in New York

The Monarch circuit will be in complete operation before the weekend, with executive activities centered in New York, where headquarters have been established on the 18th floor of the building at 501 Madison Avenue.

Of interest to exhibitors in cities where Monarch will operate in competition is the decision of executives to include vaudeville with the pictures, in most cases, and the intention of the corporation to acquire existing properties, instead of building new ones.

The Feld-Chatkin-Katz combination started to assume circuit proportions over the week-end when it acquired the Circle and Indiana theatres in Indianapolis, as the fourth and fifth links in its chain. Previously purchased were the Palace, Akron; Paramount, Steubenville, and Palace, Youngstown, all in Ohio. There has been no limit set on the number of proposed acquisitions.

Monarch's basic theory of operation is identical with that of decentralization. In this connection Mr. Feld said: "We are committed to the idea that the future of this business lies in concentrated, individual, expert operation. We realize that theatres cannot be run from a desk in New York. We have selected and will continue to select our theatres carefully, and we will concentrate our training and experience on a limited number of houses.

"Only the confidence of theatre landlords in our experience and ability to operate theatres on a profitable basis enables us to obtain such outstanding theatre properties," concluded Mr. Feld. Apparently, then, the Monarch deals with landlords are for operation.

Monarch theatres will, in the main, have combination vaudeville-motion picture policies. Each house will be booked individually through Lawrence Goldier, of the William Morris office, with acts selected on the basis of the needs of each particular week. It is assumed this means that Monarch properties will not operate under a set number of acts to fulfill its vaudeville requirements, but will expand or contract its program according to booking needs.

Mr. Chatkin has established headquarters in Cleveland for the supervision of Monarch theatres in Ohio. The Akron Palace opened Tuesday, under a policy of pictures and a "new type" of vaudeville in which standard acts are welded into a local production. The theatre, which seats 2,200, was built for RKO six years ago at a cost of $1,480,000, and is said to be thoroughly modern with a complete refrigeration system. The product of United Artists, Paramount, Radio and Columbia will be available for the theatre. Jack Roth, former district manager of theatres in Des Moines, Cedar Rapids and Sioux City, will manage the house and Wesley Eddy has been named musical director and master of ceremonies.

The Palace, Youngstown, will operate under the same policy, and has the same modern equipment. It seats 2,400, and was likewise built for RKO six years ago. The theatre opens Friday, with Ed C. Prinser, former district manager for a large group of theatres in Ohio, as manager. Bobby Gillette will be master of ceremonies.

Sammy Gluck and Felicia Sorel have been signed to stage the presentations at both Akron and Youngstown.

The Paramount, Steubenville, has been in operation for Monarch since August 1, with average grosses already up more than 30 per cent, according to the company. The theatre opened one and a half years ago and seats 1,600. United Artists, Paramount, Radio and Columbia pictures have been contracted for. Maurice Baker, former district manager for the Walter Reade circuit in New Jersey, will manage the theatre, which will be on a straight picture policy.

Making Industrial Surveys

Mr. Feld pointed out that industrial surveys are being made in all towns where the company considers operation. The Akron tire factories are operating on 24-hour schedule; Youngstown's steel mills are working at 90 per cent capacity, and the Steubenville steel mills have a weekly payroll of $1,500,000, said Mr. Feld.

Mr. Feld will personally operate the two Indianapolis theatres, and will leave New York shortly to supervise the opening of the Indiana, on Friday night.

The Circle Theatre in Indianapolis, which was one of the first deluxe theatres in the country and celebrates its 17th anniversary this week, was taken over by Monarch last Friday. The theatre seats 2,400, and will be operated under a "deluxe" straight-sound policy with first-run pictures.

Stage presentations and pictures will be featured at the Indiana, which was built in 1926 by the town's leading business men, headed by the late Robert Lieber, then president of First National Pictures.

Ace Berry will act as city manager for Indianapolis, and will operate the Circle. A. W. Baker, former manager of the Texas theatre in San Antonio, will be house manager.

Ed J. Weisfeld, for many years an executive with Saxe Brothers in Milwaukee and for the past four years in charge of presentations in the Michigan and Fisher theatres, Detroit, will direct the Indiana, with Holden Swiden, former manager of deluxe houses in Kansas City, Denver and Chicago, as manager. Lou Forbes, featured conductor in many deluxe houses, including the Palace, Dallas; the Saenger, New Orleans, and the Michigan, Detroit, will be conductor of the Indiana concert orchestra, with Merle Clark as feature organist.

As president of the new company, Mr. Feld has more than 20 years of theatre background. He first entered the business in 1909, when he became interested in a group of neighborhood theatres in Kansas City, Mo. In 1913 he established a mutual friendship with Frank L. Newman, then opening the Royal theatre in Kansas City, one of the first buildings to be constructed in the United States for motion picture exhibition. After four years as branch and later district manager for Universal in Kansas City, Mr. Feld became actively associated with Mr. Newman in the operation of the Royal, Regent and 12th St. theatres, and in the construction and opening of the Newman. When these houses were sold to Paramount in June, 1925, the contract brought Mr. Feld to Paramount.

Until his resignation, in December, 1932, he was in charge of extensive theatre operations from coast to coast, and was considered one of the outstanding specialists in deluxe theatre operation. For Publix he was in charge of theatres in Chicago, Detroit, Denver, Kansas City, Boston, Buffalo, Los Angeles, Dallas, New Orleans, Atlanta, Omaha, Birmingham, St. Paul, Minneapolis, Salt Lake City, and the major operations of the New York and Brooklyn Paramounts and the other Publix Broadway houses. In addition, theatres in the smaller towns surrounding the key cities were under his supervision.

Mr. Chatkin has been in the show business for 20 years. He joined Paramount in 1926, when he was general sales manager for Educational. For Publix he operated theatres on the Atlantic seaboard, New England, the Southeast district and the Reade and Comerford circuits.

Harry Katz was part owner of the Fitzpatrick, McElroy, and Wolf and Young circuits when Publix bought a half interest. He was supervising Illinois, Indiana and Ohio operations at the time of his resignation from Paramount Publix last year.

Zukor to Coast On Real Estate Readjustments

Adolph Zukor, the president of Paramount Publix, is enroute to California to inspect the company's extensive real estate holdings on the Pacific Coast, and to discuss possible adjustments on some portions of this property.

Paramount's West Coast real estate interests include the Hollywood studio of the company and other Hollywood property; theatre and exchange holdings in the principal cities of the Pacific Coast; and a large ranch in Southern California where many exterior motion picture sequences are filmed.

On the eve of his departure on Wednesday, Mr. Zukor issued the following statement:

"As an important part of the reorganization of Paramount we feel that certain adjustments of our West Coast real estate mortgages are necessary. While in California I shall make a careful study of the entire situation with a view to making possible recommendations for changes in these obligations whch will be of great benefit to Paramount and to the various owners of these commitments."

Mr. Zukor was accompanied on his trip by John C. Flinn.

ADVISORY BOARDS NAMED TO HEAR CODE DIFFERENCES WITH ROSENBLATT

Assisting Groups in Formation; E. N. Hurley and R. H. Cochrane Represent Industry on Picture and Laboratory Pacts

by FRANCIS L. BURT
Washington Correspondent

Recovery codes for the various divisions of the motion picture industry and allied fields, are rapidly progressing through the machinery of the National Recovery Administration, with the probability that they will be in operation before the end of September. Members of Congress have already begun making inquiries about certain clauses in the film code.

With the stage set for the public hearing on the code for motion picture laboratories, which begins before Deputy Administrator Sol A. Rosenblatt on August 31, study of the two codes submitted August 23 for the motion picture producers, distributors and exhibitors is well under way, and a code for dealers in motion picture and theatrical supplies and equipment was filed August 29.

During the hearing on the motion picture laboratories code, Mr. Rosenblatt will be assisted by a group of advisors representing the industry, labor and the consumer. R. H. Cochrane, of Universal, will be the industrial advisor.

For the motion picture industry code, Edward N. Hurley will be industrial advisor. Other advisors will be named next week.

In addition to Mr. Cochrane, advisers for the laboratory code will include: H. F. Fraser, of the NRA consumers' advisory board; L. M. Wicklein, of the NRA labor advisory board; William P. Farnsworth, of the administration's legal division; Donald K. Wallace, of the NRA research and planning division, and Emanuel J. Rosenberg, as special advisor.

Following submission of the two codes—one for the producers and distributors and the other for the exhibitors—a week ago, Mr. Rosenblatt immediately immersed himself in an exhaustive study of the material presented, with a view to coordinating the various provisions of the two proposed agreements, if possible.

Battle Impends Over Codes

The two codes contained provisions on which it was evident battle would be waged before any agreement could be reached.

Within the past week, the deputy administrator has received, at Washington, a large number of letters and telegrams from senators and members of Congress, many of whom appear to be taking a deep interest in those provisions of the exhibitors' code relating to block booking and other vital matters of which the independent theater owners have long complained.

This correspondence, however, also shows that considerable propaganda work has been done by the independent poster concerns which face extinction under the producer-distributor code.

The past week, so far as can be learned in Washington, has seen little progress toward settlement of the differences between the two groups in the industry. Indications now are that there will be a long fight over many provisions of the code when the public hearing is held September 12, and the probability is that several days will be required to hear the argument of all interests.

The situation in the film industry parallels that in the oil industry, whose code becomes effective this week, where the several branches of the industry were so badly divided that agreement appeared impossible and a code was written for them by General Hugh S. Johnson, head of the recovery administration.

In the oil industry, after several hearings, committees representing the various branches were unable to reach an agreement. Whether a continued split in the motion picture industry would result in similar drastic action is now being speculated upon at Washington, but it is believed that under the generalship of Mr. Rosenblatt a code will be developed which, if not entirely satisfactory, will at least be acceptable to all interests.

Possibilities that the so-called "domination" of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers over the music-using industries may be broken were seen this week, when it became known at Washington that the National Association of Broadcasters, now preparing their own code, will seek to bring up the question of license fees when the code for the music publishing industry is presented.

The broadcasters said they are operating under an "extortionate" tariff, which includes a sustaining fee and a percentage of their net revenues, beginning at three and running as high as five per cent.

It is the claim of the broadcasters that the fees are out of all proportion to the value of the music, since both sustaining fee and percentage may be imposed even though a station may use but one piece of copyrighted music a year. They point out also that orchestras playing copyrighted music over their stations are required to take out licenses, but this is denied by the ASCAP.

The exhibitors, it is expected, will watch the attack on music fees with interest and may take a hand in the fight. Meanwhile, the broadcasters have asked the Department of Justice to prosecute the music association under the antitrust laws, and agents of the department for some time have been engaged in a quiet investigation of the organization's methods. (The music tax situation in its relation to motion picture theatres is discussed in this issue, page 16.)

Meanwhile, Mr. E. C. Mills, general manager of the American Society, denied in New York this week that the broadcasters have a just complaint. They pay a price, he said, that was agreed upon at a meeting with the National Association of Broadcasters. With regards the Department of Justice investigation, Mr. Mills said, "If we are operating illegally, we would like to know it as well as the broadcasters. We welcome a test of that issue."

Supply Dealers Outlaw Practices

The code for dealers in motion picture and theatrical supplies and equipment, on which no hearing has yet been set, provides for minimum wages for employes on monthly, weekly and hourly bases of $65 per month, $15 per week and 40 cents per hour, respectively.

The maximum working week is fixed at 40 hours, except for traveling salesmen, emergency repair men and service men.

In addition to hours and wages, the code deals with a number of trade practices which are to be outlawed. Discounts are to be limited to a schedule to be set up by an administrative board, as are allowances. Among the practices to be prohibited are price cutting, sales below cost, false advertising, rebates, and the like.

The code was signed by the National Theatrical Supply Company and the Independent Theatrical Supply Dealers Association.

In an attempt to iron out the many differences between the MPTOA and Allied, Mr. Ed Kuykendall, MPTOA president, went to Chicago late last week to conduct a joint meeting of representatives of the two exhibitor bodies. Settlement of their difficulties, in order to present a united front, was expected to be accomplished before the public hearing, according to Mr. Kuykendall.

Meanwhile exhibitor organizations were meeting this week throughout the nation to discuss the codes and lay plans for arguments to be presented to the deputy administrator on September 12. Five or six of the clauses in the codes submitted last Wednesday have been the subject of bitter dispute among members of the various code drafting committees since the session began in New York three weeks ago.

The two motion picture code coordinators, Sidney R. Kent and Charles L. O'Reilly, departed from Washington shortly after their presentation of the first drafts. Mr. Kent left immediately for Hollywood; Mr. O'Reilly departed for his Long Island home to rest.

NRA officials declared there were many clauses which could be summarily disposed of through changes in phraseology, but that there were also a few which appeared to be irreconcilable between the warring exhibitor-distribu-

15,000,000 NEW FANS DUE TO NRA

Approximately 15,000,000 new motion picture patrons will be added to the present total of the nation's film fans as a result of the national recovery program, Major Albert Warner, vice president of Warner Brothers, said Monday.

"These 15,000,000 that will be added to the nation's present fans, before January 1, have been unable to go to the movies because of lack of wherewithal," he said. "Already over two million of these have returned to work and with all of them able once more to take the various members of their families to the pictures, it is entirely reasonable to figure that motion pictures will have this number of new potential customers. Furthermore," Major Warner asserted, "it is up to us in this business to make sure that these reborn fans have their interest kept alive by giving them the greatest motion picture entertainment ever to come out of the industry."

MILLS, MYERS AND THE MUSIC TAX

E. C. Mills, of ASCAP, Defends Proposed Increase in Seat Tax, Which Abram Myers Challenges

Mr. Abram F. Myers, chairman of the board of directors and general counsel for the Allied States Association of Exhibitors, has forwarded to Motion Picture Herald a copy of a letter which he had sent to the leading executives of the producing companies, regarding an announcement made on July 29th in the editorial pages of the Herald, as to the intention of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers to increase the seat tax which the ASCAP charges exhibitors for license to perform musical compositions copyrighted by the members of that organization.

Mr. Myers' communication to the producers is reproduced below, together with a lengthy answer and further explanation of the music tax situation by Mr. E. C. Mills, general manager of the American Society.

Mr. Myers sets forth a plan which he proposes would take the music taxing process out of the hands of ASCAP. "Once the industry adopted this general policy," he said, "it would have no trouble making fair contracts for such music as it desired." Radio broadcasters are also becoming actively hostile.

In defense, Mr. Mills explains that the proposed increase in music seat taxes will not affect the small theatre owner, but is intended as a means of equalizing the present system whereby large, de luxe houses pay the same tax percentage as do theatres which use comparatively little music. —The Editor.

MR. MYERS' LETTER TO THE PRODUCERS

"The American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers has announced its determination to demand a substantial increase in the royalties for copyrighted music recorded by the producers and reproduced by the exhibitors of motion pictures.

"Music is used less and less in the motion picture theatres and there is absolutely no justification for any increase in these royalties.

"The Society says that the theatres and the radio have ruined the market for sheet music and that, therefore, they must pay for this in increased royalties. This may be true as to the radio. Certainly the free entertainment afforded by the radio has greatly affected attendance at the theatres. If the Society's position is correct that the industry responsible for such loss should be taxed, then let the radio be taxed for the benefit of both the Society and the movies.

"This, of course, is nonsense and exposes the fallacy of the position taken by the Society. The composers have suffered from the depression in common with all others. The question is whether the motion picture industry is going to allow itself to be gouged in order that the composers may be rescued from the common fate of all businesses and professions. The industry has allowed millions to be drained off by the electrical companies without organized opposition. Will it now allow the American Society to extort from it increased royalties for a diminishing use of copyrighted music?

"The industry has the power to end this threat effectively and permanently. Two kinds of music are synchronized with the pictures—incidental music and music written expressly for the particular production. So far as the first class is concerned the public domain embraces suitable melodies for every situation or emotion. So far as the latter is concerned, the producer shall own the copyright and not require a royalty either to record or reproduce the same.

"This would wipe out the exorbitant recording and reproducing charges for the infinitesimal fraction of the total repertoire of the Society used by the industry in the making and playing of pictures. It would leave it to the choice of the individual theatre owner whether, if he has an orchestra or organ, he will play copyrighted music and pay for it or confine himself to music in the public domain and such 'motion picture music' as the producers may arrange for him to play.

"It is right that the industry as a whole, and each unit thereof, should pay for such of the property of the Society as it employs. It is not right that the industry should go on paying the Society for all of its music while using but a trifling part thereof. It is equally unfair that the small movie house, whose only music come from the screen, should pay the Society proportionately as much as the 4,000-seat de lux house that employs vaudeville and therefore makes a very full use of the Society's property.

"The picture business now has reached bed rock and no longer has great reserves of money to be tapped at will by supply industries. Certainly the theatre cannot afford to make a further contribution to the support of the Society and its members to enable them to escape the depression which still has its grip on the motion picture business.

"This situation affords a fine opportunity for the 'industry cooperation' that is so much advocated and so little practiced. This proposed gouge should meet the same opposition as the various tax proposals by the State and Federal legislature. Any action on your part to avert this danger will be greatly appreciated by the independent theatre owners."

Yours very truly,
(Signed) ABRAM F. MYERS.

MR. MILLS' ANSWER TO ABRAM F. MYERS

"Unfortunately, Mr. Myers seems rather confused in his understanding of the situation.

"The first paragraph of his letter states that we have announced a 'determination to demand a substantial increase in the royalties for copyrighted music recorded by the producers and reproduced by the exhibitors of motion pictures.' Mr. Myers apparently does not know that the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers has nothing whatever to do with such royalties and has made no proposals whatever in connection therewith.

"The royalties payable by producers for the right to record copyrighted music in their films are not paid in any part to the Society, and the Society has nothing whatever to do with them. They are paid by the producers to the copyright owners through a trustee and are in payment for license to record the music. The payment is not inclusive of license to perform the music.

"The rights of the Society and the claims it makes are limited strictly and solely to the issuance of a license to perform the music, whether by means of sound films, phonograph records, mechanical organs or human musicians.

"Mr. Myers has therefore of course fundamentally started from a completely erroneous premise.

"In the second paragraph of his letter, Mr. Myers says that 'music is used less and less in the motion picture theatres * * *.' Mr. Myers is entirely wrong, for, as a matter of fact, music is now used more in motion picture theatres than ever before. Hundreds of theatres whose musical fare was extremely inadequate prior to the advent of sound pictures now have and regularly present to their patrons a greatly increased musical fare.

"In the third paragraph of his letter Mr. Myers attributes to the Society the statement 'the theatres and the radio have ruined the market for sheet music * * *.' I do not think Mr. Myers can show us one single instance in which anyone connected with our organization has made the statement that the theatres have ruined the market for sheet music.

"Certainly radio has—but the theatres have never been coupled with radio in connection with this statement; and it does not seem just fair for him to so couple them and attribute the statement to us.

"In the fourth paragraph of his letter, Mr. Myers makes the statement that 'the industry (motion pictures) has allowed millions to be drained off by the electrical companies without organized opposition.' It seems immaterial from the standpoint of an argument regarding the right to collect fees for the use of copyrighted music in public performances for profit, as to what has happened in respect to the activities of electrical companies.

"In the fifth paragraph of his letter, Mr. Myers says that 'Two kinds of music are synchronized with the pictures—incidental music and music written expressly for the particular production'. Of course there are several other kinds of music used—very notably that used in hundreds of 'shorts,' by bands and orchestras, in the cartoons and in various other classes of pictures.

"Mr. Myers states that as far as incidental music is concerned, 'the public domain embraces suitable melodies for every situation or emotion.' Unfortunately, Mr. Myers is entirely wrong. The public domain does not contain one single composition suitable, for example, to indicate to an audience viewing a picture of troops marching down the street the thought that these troops are en route to a war in Europe—but out of the field of copyrighted music comes one composition—'Over There'—that with just one flare of its music tells the whole story to the audience in an effective and dramatic manner that could hardly be equalled by a hundred feet of film. Hundreds of other similar instances could be cited.

"As to 'music written expressly for the particular production,' the proposal of the Society to advance its rates has no connection.

"In the sixth paragraph of his letter, Mr. Myers refers to 'exorbitant recording and reproducing charges'. As has been pointed out, the Society has nothing whatever to do with this item.

"In the seventh paragraph of his letter, I

Omaha Plan to Merge MPTOA, Allied Fails

An effort to merge the MPTOA and Allied units in the Omaha territory, sponsored by Lester F. Martin, president of the Iowa and Nebraska Allied unit, was unsuccessful at a joint meeting held last week in Omaha. Regional problems created by the industry code were discussed.

A finance committee was named to carry out plans to assess every exhibitor in the territory $5 to cover the expense of sending a representative of the territory to Washington for the code hearing September 12. The committee will also name a group to formulate recommendations for the territory to the NRA.

Invite Press Agents To Join Coast Academy

Press agents have been invited to establish a branch of their own as a part of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences on the Coast. Though discussions have been under way for some time, a formal invitation has just been extended.

Agents met with the Academy early this week on changes in the tentative codes. Nothing was decided, but several recognized agents are falling in line with the proposed agents' code incorporated in their new constitution. Statements approving the Academy code have been sent out.

Ohio Tax Continues; Exemptions Lowered

The Ohio admission tax, which went into effect a few weeks ago, with exemptions at 41 cents, is to be continued, with exemptions lowered to 11 cents.

The revenue which would have been derived with the exemption at 41 cents would be practically nil, a special session of the House and the Senate reported recently. The 11-cent figure was proposed by the governor and was agreed upon finally as a compromise figure.

COLUMBIA LAUNCHES BRITISH PRODUCTION

First Picture Must Make Grade If Company Is to Continue Experiment, Says Harry Cohn; Unit Expanding

by BERNARD CHARMAN
of London Correspondent Staff

Columbia is under full draft with its projected British picture at Boreham Wood, Elstree, where stand the three sound stages of British & Dominions, which leased floor space to Harry Cohn's unit for this one production.

Titled—this isn't strictly news—"The Lady Is Willing," the picture gives a starring lead to Leslie Howard, and he is backed by Cedric Hardwicke, top-grade London stage actor and known film player. He was in "Rome Express"—sat and chewed his nails—you remember the feller? The feminine lead was apportioned to Binnie Barnes. And at the megaphone is Gilbert Miller.

"The Lady Is Willing" has got to make the grade in America if Columbia is to continue with the experiment of British pictures, Harry Cohn said. Now that his company is launching out as an individual renting unit here, it will be obliged to handle a percentage of English-made product to meet the Quota rule, but Mr. Cohn figures that it would be easier to buy independently produced pictures for the purpose than to establish an expensive unit of his own for the mere purpose of keeping Quota requirements.

Distributing Unit Forming

Natürlich, we hope this side that the experiment will have a favorable result. We have still a lot to do before we can get America sold on the proposition that Britain has the facilities for making pictures to rank with the highest grade of product. That we already have those facilities doesn't enter into the question; Americans are still unconvinced.

However, to return to Columbia. Formation of the company's distributing end is proceeding apace, one bit of evidence being the vacating of the offices in Film House, Wardour Street, shared with United Artists, to take possession of an extensive suite in the recently-built Warner House about a block along the same thoroughfare.

The personnel side also is being well attended to. Under Joe Friedman, general manager, have been appointed Angus N. Trimmer, as first assistant, and Max Thorpe, general sales manager. Division staffs also are being completed.

Ask Better Quota Films

CEA decided to send a picked deputation to the president of the Board of Trade to ask alterations in the Quota Act, with a view to effecting improvement in the quality of films made specially for the purpose of complying with the law. This action is the outcome of a complaint, voiced by exhibitors in various parts of the United Kingdom, that small independent theatre men experienced difficulty in obtaining suitable British product for Quota purposes. They argue that the big circuits, associated with the major British production concerns, have first choice on all the best home-made product, leaving very little for the small exhibitor.

As playing of inferior British pictures has had a terrible effect on box-office takings in many cases, showmen feel that now is the time to get doing something about it.

Another bug that has been biting exhibitors is the question of rentals. Following the lead of its Birmingham branch, other sections of the CEA have passed solemn resolutions that rentals above 40 per cent shall not be tolerated.

Where have we heard that story before?

Stars for B.I.P.

British and International!

Looks as if they will have to put a few stars in the righthand corner of the old Union Jack—with London filling up with American stars and directors for British International pictures. Yes, International!

At a mass press reception in a West End hotel were Thelma Todd, Bebe Daniels, Ben Lyon (and Bebe's baby), Allan Dwan, Paul Stein, Constance Cummings, and the English-cum-Hollywood Capt. Reggie Berkeley in his "Cavalcade" dress suit.

The Americans provided the accents and the English the cocktails, which (some said) was not as bad as it might have been if the other way round!

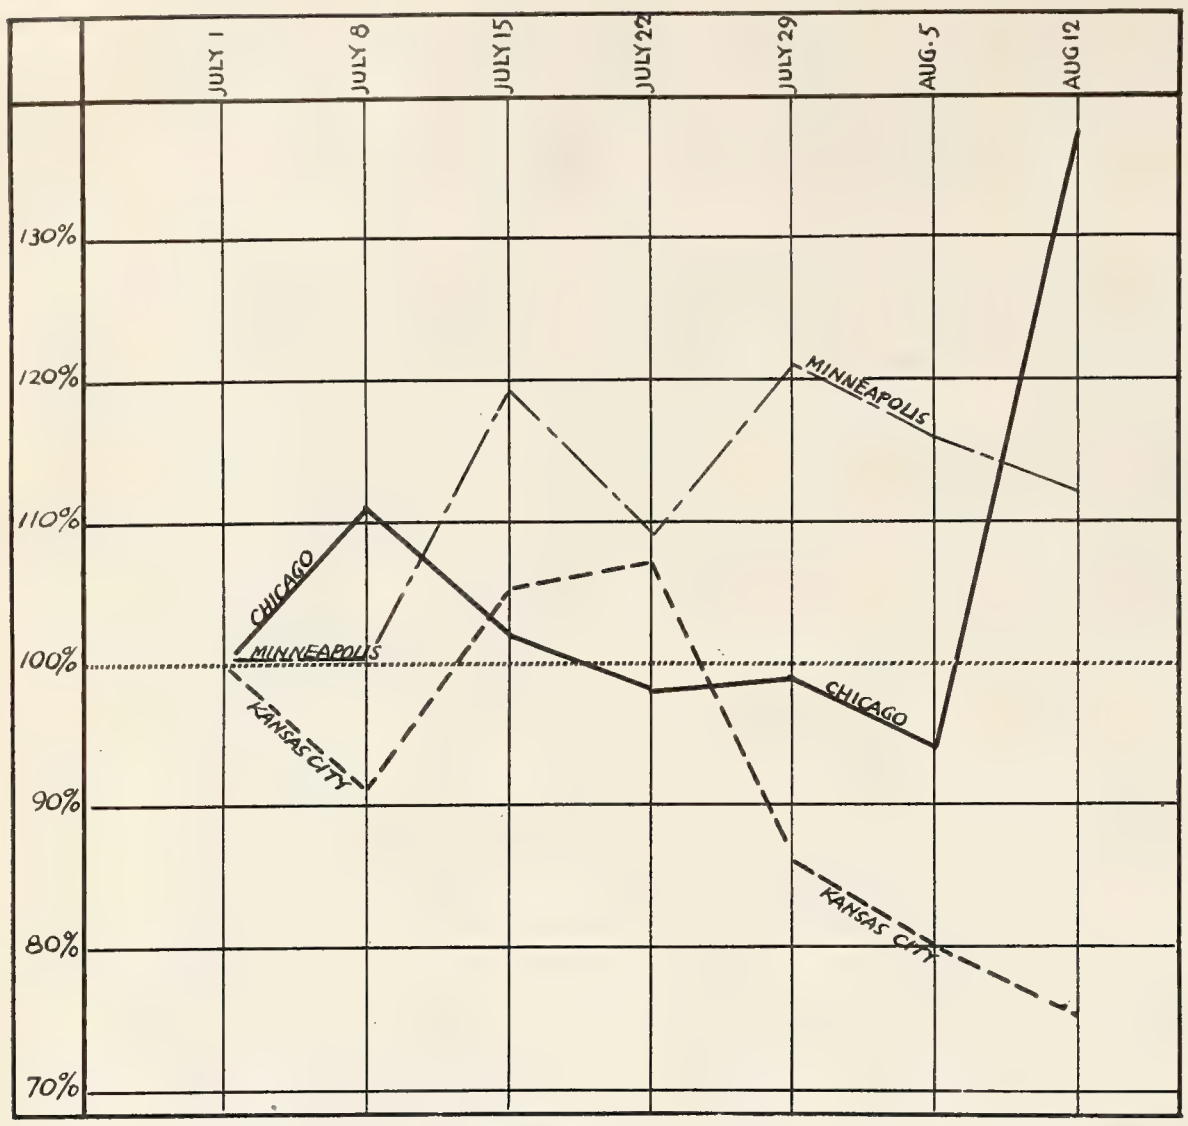
"Cavalcade" went into second West End pre-release, after 16 weeks at the Tivoli, a run which fulfilled predictions of W. H. Mooring, who went to Hollywood for Fox to feed England advance news on the picture, and far exceeding the Fox London office estimates—before they had seen the film! . . . "King Kong" is off after a similar period at the Coliseum. . . . "Merry Monarch" (Emil Jannings) was pulled out at Empire, MGM West End show house, after one night. . . . Paul Lukas signed for "Wings Over the Jungle," projected London Films production.

Gunning Returns to Active Production

Wid Gunning has announced his intention to return to active motion picture production in conjunction with Benjamin Christensen, the Danish producer, author, director and actor, who will be associated with him in the making of a series of special productions.

Seeks To Restrain Film

Mrs. Dorothy Russell Calvit, daughter of Lillian Russell, has obtained an order from Justice Alfred Frankenthaler in New York supreme court directing Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., against which she has a $100,000 libel action, to show cause why it should not be restrained from further exhibition of "The Daughters of Two Famous Women."



The above chart, based on Motion Picture Herald's weekly compilation of box office grosses during the period July 1 to August 12, indicates the changes in receipts in three Midwest cities, Minneapolis, Chicago and Kansas City. The 100 per cent line on the chart represents the business done in each of these three cities during the first week of this period, running from July 1 to July 8.

Lieber Has New Device for Deaf

Dr. Hugo Lieber, noted scientist and president of Sonotone Corp., at a private demonstration last week at New York's Manhattan Club, revealed the workings of another new device, which will be available after next week, for bringing the deafened back to the motion picture theatre, which they virtually abandoned at the beginning of talkers. Dr. Lieber's invention embodies the principle of bone conduction of sound, and will be marketed individually for private use, or en bloc, on trunk lines, for theatre or other public use.

"With the advent of talking pictures, few executives realize the tremendous loss of theatre patrons because of their inability to hear," said Dr. Lieber. "Authorities state that approximately 20,000,000 people in the United States are deafened."

Through the invention of Dr. Lieber, who has perfected a tiny oscillator, dating back in principle to the days of Beethoven (who held a stick between his teeth and rested the other end on the piano sounding board to convey sound through the bones of the head to his inner ear and thus was able to make his great compositions) it was stated that it is now possible for deafened patrons of the legitimate and talking picture audience to completely hear every word of a program.

"It will be possible for a prospective patron to request an individual installation at the box-office of the theatre, when he buys his ticket," Dr. Lieber said "This will not only make possible this additional revenue to the theatres by enabling the hard of hearing to enjoy the performance but will be a decided stimulant to the millions who had almost given up all hope of attending the theatre."

Special multiple installation equipment is available for the talking picture theatre as well as auditoriums and lecture halls. This operates from a central point and conveys the sound directly to the individual's ear through this tiny oscillator held in lorgnette style or clasped behind the ear for the duration of the performance.

Among the operating advantages cited by Dr. Lieber are: no special segregation is required in the theatre; patrons may sit in practically any spot; natural sound is conducted directly to the patron's inner ear without the distortion that necessarily would come from severe amplification, as in the case of air conduction. When there is a sudden change of tone volume on screen, it is not necessary to regulate the individual instrument.

Lew Brown Fox Producer

Lew Brown, formerly of De Sylva, Brown and Henderson, and noted as a producer of musical comedies, has been signed as an associate producer by Fox. His first production under this contract will be "Fox Movietone Follies."

Chesterfield Lists 18 with Invincible

George R. Batcheller, president of Chesterfield, and Maury Cohen, chief executive of Invincible, have announced at Hollywood a list of 18 features, including musicals. The total of productions will be equally divided between the two companies.

Pictures planned include: "No Experience Nevessary," "Matinee Women," "Slightly Used," "Master of Men," "Cross Streets," "The Defense Rests," "A Night with You," "Hotel Register," "Twisted Humanity," "Eye Witness," "Angel Face," "Unfaithful Woman" and "After Office Hours."

Four already completed are: "Notorious But Nice," "I Have Lived," "By Appointment Only" and "Dance Girl Dance." "A Man of Sentiment" is in work.

Three Rochester Theatre Men Die Within Two Days

Death came to three Rochester, N. Y., theatre men last week within two days. Harold W. Shannon, 61, formerly an executive of the Regorson Corporation, one-time operator of the Piccadilly theatre, died at a Rochester hotel after a long illness.

Burt E. Keller, 57, former executive and projectionist for the Temple theatre, Geneva, N. Y., died in the hospital after suffering fatal injuries in a fall from an automobile, and DeMerville S. Roberts, 33, chief operator at the Majestic theatre, Danville, died in that city after a long illness.

Indianapolis Theatre Setup Change Expected

The theatre setup in Indianapolis will be materially changed by the end of the month through new leases which have been signed there during the past few days. The first of these changes came about when Milton Feld and his Monarch Theatres, Inc., leased the Circle and Indiana theatres from the building owners.

The old Keith's theatre was leased by the Switow brothers of Louisville, and the Lyric by its original builder, Charles M. Olson.

Film, Theatre Leaders Aiding Relief Pageant

Major Edward J. Bowes, S. L. (Roxy) Rothafel, Harold B. Franklin, Harry Charnas and Daniel Frohman, theatrical producer, are members of a committee of sponsors of "The Romance of a People," Jewish pageant spectacle to be held at the Polo Grounds in New York September 14.

The proceeds will be used for the relief of German-Jewish refugees in Palestine. A cast of 6,000 is now rehearsing under Isaac Van Grove of the Chicago Civic Opera, Jacob Ben Ami and Louis Chalif.

Kuykendall Leaves Local Post

Ed S. Kuykendall has resigned as president of the MPTO of Mississippi, Arkansas, and Tennessee because of the press of duties connected with his work as president of the national MPTO organization. A successor to Mr. Kuykendall will be chosen at a meeting in September.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

PARAMOUNT'S six-foot star, Charles Bickford, is laboring on the lot at present with a body that is black and blue with bruises and a voice that is reduced to a whisper.

Mr. Bickford's brutal punishment came as a result of the role he played in Cecil De Mille's "This Day and Age," now showing. As a racketeer, he is kidnaped by hundreds of school boys, who bind and gag him with adhesive tape and lower him by a rope tied under his armpits into a deep hole full of rats until he confesses to a murder. (Confesses through the tape?)

Working under hot lights, the adhesive tape became securely fastened to his wrists and across his face. It was only with the loss of considerable skin that it could be removed.

Dangling in the pit with the rope around his chest, Bickford's lungs became constricted. Besides this, the chaffing of the rope and the manhandling by the mob has necessitated the nightly use of arnica, iodine, etc.

Use of an animal in such a part would have brought quick interference by the society which looks after such things. But then maybe producers DeMille and Schulberg used a double for Mr. Bickford and forgot to tell the publicity writer about it. (May have been at least one other fellow.—Editor.)

Investigation developed that the bill does apply to trailers—for trucks.

TIP to studio "prop" heads: In a warehouse at Shanghai there are stored some $20,000,000 worth of treasures and ancient relics from the former Imperial palaces in Peking. There are pearls as large as walnuts and brilliant stones which would light a darkened room. The treasures were conveyed secretly to Shanghai for fear they would be lost forever to China if Peking were to fall into the hands of the Japs.

In the collection there is an ancient Chinese encyclopaedia, consisting of some 100,000 volumes, compiled in the Ching dynasty. There were only four complete sets. Two were destroyed by fire, a third is stored in the museum at Mukden, Manchuria. Probably the only collection of its kind in the world, the encyclopaedia records all the ancient classics, and information touching upon every phase of human knowledge and activity.

Among the relics are bronze incense burners made in 2,000 BC for Imperial sacrifices to heaven, and more than 20,000 jade and gold seals used by the emperors, empresses and leading statesmen of China for the past 3,000 years. There are centuries-old costumes, weapons and armor; gems of all kinds and description; tapestries and vases, antique furniture and rare old carpets, on some of which are embroidered 10,000 dragons, each different in shape, size and color.

Some of the motion picture companies have hopes, too.

OF interest to Charles Clyde Pettijohn and to other motion picture colonels of the Kentucky realm is the announcement from the capital of the bluegrass country that it costs the State an average of twenty and one-quarter cents to commission a colonel on the staff of colonel-conscious Governor Ruby Laffoon. This raises some interesting problems of original cost versus upkeep.

The commission itself would be only a beginning; the real expense would be in living up to it. And how film folk like to live right up to things. To dress in character would require a frock coat for winter and white linen suits for summer. None but a soft, wide-brimmed hat should be flourished gallantly with each sweeping bow. Picture Colonel Al Lichtman strutting down Broadway bowing profusely to some of those independent New York exhibitors, or to a couple of hard-boiled circuit buyers.

Also, the colonel's code demands not only white waistcoats, but heavy gold watch chains across them. He must likewise have a supply of dimes to toss to grinning negroes hailing him by title. Film executives could use passes instead.

Just before going to press on Wednesday, we learned that three more leading film executives in New York: Charles L. O'Reilly, Dave Palfreyman and Nathan Burkan—had succumbed to the temptation and accepted Kentucky colonelcies. General-in-Chief-of-all-Kentucky Colonels Pettijohn performed the honors, dubbing each with a tin sword, a formal commission and a credit order on Woolworth's for uniforms.

Dave Palfreyman, literally the heaviest man in the Hays organization, accepted his commission reluctantly. He told us that he had expected at least two commissions for his poundage—235 net.

Colonel O'Reilly will be the first to see action at the front when he leads the exhibitors' expeditionary forces on to Washington, September 12, in the battle of the code.

Advisory Boards Named to Hear Code Differences

tor factions. Of these, double featuring, score charges, open buying, buying combines, poster exchanges, rejection privileges and designated playdates still remain the most important clauses on which there is a wide divergence of opinion.

The problems which remain to be solved, because of their revolutionary character, would change the entire aspect of many of the integral parts of the industry's machinery of selling motion pictures.

Of these, aside from double features, the disposition of which cannot and probably will not be dealt with by the NRA other than to relegate it to local option, the question of "the right to buy," or open buying, continues to be the most serious bone of contention between exhibitors and distributors. The chief dissension arises over the fact that, allowing the exhibitor his right to buy, the distributor should also be allowed the right to select his customers. The exhibitors object to this on the grounds that determination of a theatre's prestige and income may be influenced by the fact that a particular theatre is a member of a circuit and that the unaffiliated theatre in the same locality is thereby discriminated against, through the power of volume buying, even though the same unaffiliated theatre may be able to pay more than the circuit house in the same competitive situation.

Banning of score charges, as set forth in the separate exhibition code, is expected to be bitterly contested by distributor interests at the public hearing. The exhibitors were unanimous in declaring this an unfair practice.

It is generally considered a matter of strategy that the distributors left the question of rejection privileges out of their draft. They are said to have realized that under no circumstances would the committee be able to agree on it, and it was, therefore, left to Washington for disposition. Distributors and exhibitors are expected to battle over the subject at the hearing, the exhibitors demanding at least a 15 per cent rejection privilege, without payment.

As far as designated playdates are concerned, the exhibitors are insisting that distributors must not specify dates in their contracts. The distributors, on the other hand, insist upon so doing, but they make a counter proposal allowing for arbitration if the exhibitor can provide a good and proper reason for not playing a picture on a specified date. This is provided for in the distribution code.

Disagree on Buying Combines

Distributors maintain that exhibitors should not be allowed to utilize the services of poster exchanges, as being detrimental to the accessory business of the distributors. The exhibitors claim it is far less expensive to rent their accessories from these sources than to buy outright from distributors. An example of the exhibitors' claim is that it costs 15 cents to buy poster sheets from distributors, whereas it costs only 10 cents to rent the same sheets from the exchanges. On the other hand, the distributors point out that the exchange material is usually second hand, shoddy and mutilated.

Both committees were in flat disagreement on buying combines, both among themselves and with each other. Coordination of the proposals was not effected because distributors claimed that it is necessary to the well-being of both themselves and exhibitors to deal directly with individual theatres, while exhibitors maintained that the distributors should recognize any agent or agency appointed by them to buy film for a number of theatres, thereby lessening the average price per theatre of film.

Despite these subjects of controversy which remain definitely for discussion at the public hearing, there are many executives in New York who believe that the really important clauses of the codes have been agreed upon. These include acceptance of the standard form of exhibition contract, the setting up of local arbitration boards to settle trade disputes, and the creation of clearance and zoning boards in each film exchange center, which, it was said by a distributor spokesman, will virtually remove 95 per cent of general irritation and controversy within the industry.

A moral victory for the clause banning double features was won this week in Detroit when Allied exhibitors met and voted for their elimination. A new zoning plan for that territory also was adopted and $2,000 raised to carry on Allied's fight at the public hearing.

Meanwhile Eddie Golden, Monogram sales director, issued another statement in New York Tuesday in which he contended that the policy of double features is not for exhibitor associations to solve, but for each exhibitor.

Labor an Exhibition Code Problem

An important phase of NRA code hearing proceedings was being watched carefully by film executives this week. Great interest is being evidenced as to how the administration will dispose of a submitted clause in a code covering the motor industry which would give employers the right to hire or fire men irrespective of whether they are union or not.

Harry Brandt, president of the Independent Theatre Owners Association, on Wednesday charged producers were attempting to write into code all of the trade's malpractices. An exhibitor mass meeting has been called for September 5 in New York.

There has been, during the past few days, a considerable amount of speculation as to what disposition may be made of the labor provisions in the exhibition code at the public hearing. The provisions for labor in the production and distribution codes meet the requirements of the NRA, but those in the exhibition draft ask for a working week which is 12 hours longer than the maximum stipulated in the blanket code and a wage which is 15 cents per hour less than the minimum required by the agreement. If the exhibition labor proposals are approved, a 52-hour week will be permanent. On the other hand, if exhibitors are successful in their efforts to convince the administration that the 52-hour week is essential to theatre operation, minimum wages for this branch of the industry may be boosted to $18, instead of the $15 minimum stipulated. In its present form the exhibition code asks a minimum wage of 25 cents an hour, which, with a 52-hour week, would be a minimum of $13.

The Actor's Equity Association also has a grievance to set forth on September 12 in regard to the exhibition code, the provisions of which for artists employed in stage shows "are too general," according to Frank Gillmore, president.

Late last week, 400 members of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences met in Hollywood to hear and discuss the code. All attending were reported in accord with the proposed code, with the exception of the producers' agreement and agents' clause, which is reported as going beyond the Academy code of fair practice for artist-agent-producer negotiations in regulation of the Academy function. The clause denies the employee the right of representation in matters of salary and employment. The meeting also recommended that the clause pertaining to the banning of star raiding be made to apply only to employees under contract for one year or more at a salary of $1,000 or more per week and to employees under contract for three or more pictures at $15,000 or more per picture, and that the clause should apply only on expiration of contracts which employers do not have the right to extend by exercising options.

Extras in Hollywood have appealed to Mary Pickford, in New York to represent them at the code hearing.

Screen and Stage Fields Cooperate, Pledge NRA Aid

The combined forces of screen, radio, and stage met on the air on Sunday night to bring to the people of the nation, via the networks of NBC and Columbia Broadcasting, assurances from the amusement industry of whole-hearted cooperation and support to the National Recovery Administration. The program, which originated in four cities—New York, Washington, Los Angeles and Toledo—brought to the nation's radio audience many well-known performers, singers, comedians, speakers and orchestras.

General Hugh S. Johnson, recovery administrator, headed the speakers who were heard at intervals during the entertainment program. Others included Louis J. Alber, chief of the NRA speakers' bureau; Frank Wilson, chief of organization and NRA publicity; Kate Smith, of the NRA national committee of radio, screen and stage, and Graham McNamee and Ted Husing, alternating as masters of ceremonies. Mme. Ernestine Schumann-Heink spoke briefly from the NBC studios in New York. Will Rogers made a plea to the workers and employers of the nation to support the President's program.

From Los Angeles entertainment was supplied by Eddie Cantor, Will Rogers, Jack Pearl, Ruth Etting and Bing Crosby. In New York, Al Jolson, Jessica Dragonette, Kate Smith and John Charles Thomas were heard. Burns and Allen broadcast from Toledo.

John D. Rockefeller, Jr., pleaded on Saturday night for nationwide cooperation to assure the success of the "great adventure in reconstruction, the National Recovery Act," and declared that "to turn back is unthinkable."

Educational Near Ready to Resume

Educational's production units are about to launch a period of the most intensive activity in more than six months. With difficulties due to the studio strike pretty well ironed out, extra forces are going to work on both East and West coasts to keep up with Fox's release program of Educational short subjects.

The first comedy will be the first of Tom Howard's new series of two-reelers. Preparation is nearing completion and camera work is expected to start within a few days at the Paramount Long Island Studios in Astoria, under supervision of Al Christie.

The next two-reel subjects will be an Andy Clyde and a "Frolics of Youth" comedy, which are to be made at Educational's studios in Los Angeles. A Moran and Mack comedy will follow. The Frolics of Youth introduce a new series.

E. W. Hammons, president of Educational, will go to Los Angeles in about a week, where he will put the finishing touches on plans for production activities to last through the fall months.

93 U. S. FILMS RELEASED IN FRANCE IN HALF YEAR; 23 OF THEM DUBBED

Total of 206 Pictures Distributed, 57 of Them French; American Films Far in Lead of Money-Makers for Period

by PIERRE AUTRE
Paris Correspondent

The first six months of 1933 saw a total of 93 American pictures released on the French market. Of this number, 65 were original English-speaking versions, 23 were dubbed, four played first as original and later dubbed, and one in Yiddish dialogue made in the United States.

Following official announcement of the French quota for the new season, reported in the HERALD'S August 12 issue, the following important data concerning the status of the French market, insofar as foreign importations are concerned, should prove of interest to both producer and distributor of American films abroad.

Altogether 206 feature pictures were released in France during the first six months of the current year; 93 American, and 57 French.

Pictures made for French consumption in the French language included: 57 pictures made in French studios, and 16 in foreign studios, as follows: German, 8; Austrian, 5; Italian, 2; Czechoslovakian, 1.

There were 48 foreign-made films dubbed in French, as follows: American, 27; German, 14; British, 4; Polish 2; Czechoslovakian, 1.

Of the pictures in foreign languages shown during the six months period (which, under the new quota may now be shown only in 5 Paris and suburban houses and 5 in the provinces) there were 69 American-made. Classifications follow: American, 69 (also 1 in Yiddish); German, 13; British, 6; Italian, 1; Polish, 1; Czechoslovakian, 1 (also 1 in German).

Among these foreign language pictures, some were first released in their original language versions and afterwards in the dubbed version.

American companies releasing this total are as follows:

	Dubbed	Dubbed & Original	Original	Total
Fox	3		17	20
Paramount	7	1	11	19
Warner-F.N.			14	14
M-G-M	5		6	11
RKO-Radio	4	1	5	10
Universal	2		4	6
Universal (Hakim)			1	1
Columbia (Hakim)		1	1	2
(Osso)	1			1
(P.A.D.)			1	1
United Artists			3	3
Others	1	1	2	4
	23	4	65	92
Universal made one in Yiddish in the United States				1
				93

The best money-makers of the first six months of the year in France showed a great predominance of American films. The champion was "The Sign of the Cross," which broke all records at the Paramount theatre in Paris. Other American pictures which grossed well at the same theatre, one of the largest in Paris, were "Bring 'Em Back Alive"; "Grand Hotel"; "Blonde Venus"; "Movie Crazy," and "The World and the Flesh."

All the foregoing figures concern only pictures longer than five reels. There is not, in France, an organized production of short subjects. A few pictures (about 20) of three and four reels were made in 1932-33 by independent producers, but they will not carry on this kind of production which is called too expensive for so small a market. The only short subjects regularly made here are the news pictures (Fox Movietone, Paramount French News, Pathe Natan, Eclair Journal, France-Gaumont News), and some one or two reel topicals.

Dubbed Foreign Pictures

Improvement in the methods of dubbing and reduced costs resulted in an increase of the number of foreign pictures dubbed in French. While in 1932 only 60 foreign pictures, among them 36 American, had been dubbed, this year 48 dubbings already have been released, 43 others are now ready and 38 new dubbings will be produced. Thus a total of 129 dubbings for 1933 is estimated, among them 81 for the new season, 56 of them to be American pictures. The cost of dubbing of the better class picture in Paris ranges between $10,000 and $15,000.

Foreign Talkers

A total of 223 foreign talkers were released in France last year. From January 1 to June 30 of this year, 93 foreign talkers, among them 70 American were released. These pictures, which for the most part are classified as very successful productions, can be shown only in 10 French Cinemas, 5 in Paris and suburbs, and 5 in the country.

Cost of French Pictures

The average cost of a French production is 1,000,000 to 1,500,000 francs ($50,000 to $75,000). This amount must not be exceeded if the producer wants to be sure of redeeming his picture.

Sales totals for an ordinary French picture for the market of the French language —France, Belgium, North Africa, Switzerland, Egypt, Canada, Palestine, Syria, Turkey—cannot exceed $75,000 to $80,000.

130 Pictures This Season

The first six months of this year in France were marked by a slackening in production, not in the total number of pictures made, but in the smaller number made by the older companies. Concerns which in previous years had made 10 to 20 pictures annually, now had nearly stopped production such as Jacques Haik, Osso, Braunberger, Richebé. Other important companies, such as Paramount, Pathé Natan and Gaumont, are making only five or six pictures. The new program of Pathé-Natan includes only seven productions ready thus far and nothing else is in sight before October. Gaumont has only six pictures of its own production ready currently.

Notwithstanding, the French market, which produced 125 pictures in the French studios during 1932, will have this year a minimum of 110 pictures made in France and about 20 French talkers made in foreign countries, principally in Germany, Austria, Czechoslovakia and Hungary. Some will be made in the United States, as in the case of the French version of the new Chevalier film, "The Way To Love."

Improved Methods Increase Dubbings; Average Cost of French Production $50,000 to $75,000; Theatres Earn Less

On the 110 French pictures made in France, 53 are ready for release, 20 are shooting, and 37 are in preparation. These 110 pictures are being made by 50 companies, which gives an average of two or three pictures a company. This increase in the number of producing companies is an outstanding development of this year. Many small companies are born and produce one, two or three pictures which are released by important concerns such as Gaumont, Pathé, Universal, Fox and United Artists.

For the moment, Pathé Studios in Paris and suburb are booked to independent producers for whom Pathé perhaps will distribute.

The Paramount studios have been closed for five months. Dubbings only were made there. An agreement was signed recently between J. C. Bavetta, head of the French branch of Fox Film and Mr. Bacos, chief of the Paramount studios, for the making of a few productions which will be released here by Fox. On the other hand, Fox will start in October its own French production under the direction of Eric Pommer, with André Daven, formerly at the Paramount studios and at UFA.

Theatre Receipts Decline

During the first six months of this year, receipts of Paris and country cinemas dropped sharply in comparison with receipts of the same months of 1932.

The five most important Parisian cinemas are, in order of receipts:

1. Rex (3,200 seats) (Haik).
2. Paramount, (1,900 seats). (Paramount).
3. Gaumont Palace, (4,800 seats). (Gaumont).
4. Olympia, (1,850 seats). (Haik).
5. Madeleine, (815 seats). (MGM).

The publicity departments give for the first six months of 1933 the following results:

WEEKLY AVERAGE RECEIPT (from January 1 to June 30)

Mr. Mills Replies To Mr. Myers On The Music Tax

am happy to see Mr. Myers agreeing with us in the conclusion recently arrived at and announced that the '4,000-seat de luxe house' should pay a proportionately greater fee than the small motion picture theatre.

"In the eighth paragraph of his letter, Mr. Myers states 'The picture business has now reached bed-rock and no longer has great reserves of money to be tapped at will by supply industries'. Undoubtedly this is true, and we have every human and decent consideration for the fact—but also our industry has reached a sub-strata far beneath the so-called 'bed-rock'.

"This might be of small concern to exhibitors were it not for the fact that vital to the success of motion picture productions and the exhibition of pictures to the public is the supply of a constant and unending stream of music of all kinds. To starve those who are capable of creating that supply is to deprive the picture theatre of use of the material without which it could not do business.

"In the final paragraph of his letter, Mr. Myers refers to 'this proposed gouge'. We regret that he should so look upon an endeavor to constructively solve a very difficult situation.

"On the one hand, if composers and authors, whose product is vital to the continued success of motion pictures, are to be encouraged to continue to exercise their genius they must be paid more money. On the other hand is the motion picture theatre which at this time cannot afford to pay more money, as a general proposition.

"But, the way to meet this situation in fairness to all seems to us to be to substantially increase the rate for 'de luxe' theatres while retaining the rate for the average theatre at the present scale. Exhibitors are informed through the HERALD that there is no intention at this time of increasing the rate for the average theatre. The proposal to increase rates is in reference to the so-called 'de luxe' houses in the metropoli.

"Instead of our own authority in support of our statements as to the necessity for music of all kinds and types, we can do no better than quote a recent report issued by Fox Films, in which James O'Keefe, manager of the music department of Fox Movietone City, amongst other things says:

> "'The use of the thirty-two bars of "Kiss In the Dark" may cost the producer $250 while he can get 250 bars of Mozart for $75. But the "Kiss" music may fit whereas the Mozart music would be just a waste of sound film. So the popular song wins over the classic.'

"The Society is not the enemy of exhibitors—it is their friend. It has gone along from 1914 to the present date without raising its scale for theatres. Through all the heyday of the tremendous prosperity which the theatres enjoyed from 1922 to 1929, the Society did not raise its rate; but now, in dire extremity, the organization must perform as trustee in behalf of its members an unpleasant duty. And it is endeavoring to place the burden of increased rates, as far as motion picture theatres are concerned, where it should be—upon shoulders best fitted to bear it.

"We have been accustomed for years to the so-called 'music fee' being made into a rallying-cry for exhibitors. From time to time their organizations have induced them to pay hundreds of thousands of dollars in dues and assessments and all that sort of thing—and to attend conventions—with the forlorn hope that Congress might be persuaded to confiscate the properties of composers and authors for the benefit of exhibitors. But that this will never be done is a safe assumption, because through fourteen years of effort on the part of organized exhibitors to thus persuade Congress it has steadfastly refused to victimize the composer and author for the benefit of the exhibitor.

"These are times for constructive solutions of vexing problems—not for bombast and backbiting—or for 'propaganda'.

"We will be delighted to confer at any time with individual or group representatives of the so-called 'de luxe' theatres, as they are the ones concerned in the proposal of the Society, and to undertake to show them the injustice and the fairness of what we plan to do.

"Very truly yours,

"Signed) E. C. MILLS."

BONFIRE CHAIN TO MARK WARNER RELEASE

A chain of bonfires, lighted on hills and mountains, and extending across the country from Mount Warner, near Los Angeles, to the Palisades, on the Hudson shore of New Jersey, will herald the national release of Warner's latest musical, "Footlight Parade." Lookout and bonfire locations, now being selected, will be prepared, and as soon as the flame of the first fire, on the Coast, is visible to the next to the east, that will be ignited, and so on to the Atlantic coast.

NRA Stimulates Photophone Sales

Photophone theatre sound equipment sales for the first half of August were 50 per cent higher than the corresponding period last year, with a steadily increasing volume of orders indicating that the figures for the whole month will exceed last year's total by 100 per cent, according to the RCA Victor Company. Photophone business for July also showed an increase of 33 1-3 per cent over the year before, the parent company reported.

The unusual activity in equipment sales during the hottest season of the year when theatre grosses are generally lowest, is attributed to three important factors—better business generally, fear of further price rises, and reopenings.

Coast Strikers Continue Protest

Striking Hollywod technicians are continuing in their protests to Washington on what they term a lockout of their workers by producers on the Coast.

Producers are promising re-employment as jobs become available at the studios. However, less than 325 of the striking men have returned to their posts. Producers are demanding that men seeking re-employment have cards from the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers. A number of jobs have been promised during the course of the current week.

MPTO Says 'Gold Diggers' Problem Is Not Yet Settled

Warners' statement of last week indicating a court victory over a Philadelphia exhibitor in a test case to establish whether "Gold Diggers" should be a 1932-33, or a 1933-34 release, was challenged over the weekend by the MPTO of Eastern Pennsylvania, which has been fighting the issue. A decision by Judge Fineletter, of common pleas court, Philadelphia, denied a temporary injunction to restrain Warners from pre-release showing "Gold Diggers" in the Sherwood, owned by Joe and Earl Forte.

The MPTO directorate notified members that the plea for a preliminary injunction had been denied only until after it has been decided by a full equity hearing whether "Gold Diggers" is within the contract of 1932-33. "The whole question is still pending in the court," said George P. Aarons, MPTO secretary.

At the same time, the Philadelphia exhibitor organization issued another statement, covering a special meeting—at which the Brothers Forte were expelled for their activities in connection with the "Gold Diggers" showing. Said this statement:

"At a meeting of the board of managers of the MPTO of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware, Inc., the recommendation of a committee of censors of the organization that Joe and Earl Forte, members of the organization be expelled was unanimously adopted and names of these two exhibitors stricken from the membership rolls of the organization. . . .

"It was developed at the hearing before the committee of censors, that Joe Forte, a member of the board of managers of the organization, acting for himself and Earl Forte, had at a meeting of the board four weeks ago, voted in favor of an action in equity against Warner Brothers to compel Warner Brothers to deliver 'Gold Diggers of 1933' as a 1932-33 production.

"It was further developed that Joe Forte was vehement in his criticism of Warner Brothers at this meeting, charging them with unfair treatment towards the exhibitors and taking the position that immediate suit should be instituted without delay and that there should be no attempts to compromise the matter.

"Influenced by Forte's stand, the organization instituted suit which is now pending in the courts at present.

"Subsequently Forte made a complete about-face, bought the picture for 50 per cent for the Sherwood theatre, and completely repudiated his previous stand in the matter which he had taken at both a meeting of the board of managers and a regular meeting of the organization.

"This is the first instance in a number of years that a member of the M. P. T. O. has been expelled from the membership ranks.

"According to Secretary George P. Aarons, it is the purpose of this organization to expel from membership any exhibitor who violates any of the principles for which the organization stands."

GERMANY LIMITS FILM PROGRAMS TO TWO HOURS AND SEVEN MINUTES

Government Also Warns Against Making of Production Announcements That Are Not Certain to Be Fulfilled

(Washington Bureau of the HERALD)

The latest steps taken by the government in Germany to bring back the motion picture industry to normalcy include a ban on film performances of more than two hours and seven minutes; the outlawing of production announcements which are not carried out, and revisions in the ruling which prohibits foreigners from appearing in German films.

German government aid is expected to bring the industry in that country out of chaos, according to Trade Commissioner George R. Canty, Berlin, who reported last week to the U. S. Department of Commerce at Washington that July had brought about a strong improvement within the German film business. In June Adolf Hitler, by decree, placed the business under absolute control of government agencies. In July the first step toward complete reorganization was announced by Propaganda Minister Dr. Goebbels. This was outlined in detail in MOTION PICTURE HERALD on June 10 and July 8. Subsequently, the film credit bank was founded under joint participation of the ministry for propaganda, the ministry of national economy, private banks, and the Spitzenorganization; and the fusion of the whole industry in the individual associations attached to the Spitzenorganization took place. The socalled Spio Commission appointed by the industry was said to have made important decisions for general improvement of the market. These steps apparently have quickened rehabilitation, according to Mr. Canty's report, which said producers have started to realize their film plans, in the hope that a sufficient number of quality films will be available for fall release.

Situation Still Unfavorable

The German cinema situation must, however, still be considered very unfavorable even beyond the seasonal influences of the summer months, and exhibitors are forced by lack of current production to depend on films that originated prior to the national revolution, it was said.

Doubtless much time will be necessary to stimulate the trade. The German authorities so far have not come to desired decisions regarding sufficient tax relief. All authorities, especially of the municipalities, are being asked by the trade to help shorten the time of transition, otherwise required adjustments will take many months.

Distribution in Germany was not up to expectations in June; as compared with former years, turnover was considerably smaller than a careful estimate foresaw. A slight improvement over the previous months, however, has been noticed since June, due particularly to advance rentals on current production and to receipts for films already released.

The Spio resolution of June 22, regarding the two-feature-film system, will be effected irrevocably on Sept. 15, as follows:

As a general rule, programs shall not be longer than 10,800 feet, excluding newsreel.

The time limit for performances will be restricted to two hours and seven minutes without intermission. Production and distribution circles were warned that they must consider this necessity by producing feature films under 6,750 feet in length and shorts of not more than 2,025 feet.

Since, for the present, the required product is not available, the lengths mentioned may be exceeded. However, when two feature films are used neither must be longer than 5,400 feet.

In all these cases where cinemas have closed contracts for too many films, on the plan to double bill in a single performance, an agreement must be arrived at between distributors and exhibitors to reduce the number of films under contract. If no agreement can be arranged, the Spio Commission will decide.

The Spio said that announcements of films which do not materialize, or announcements of production plans which are not carried out, are apt to dislocate and damage considerably the plans of producers, distributors and exhibitors, ideally as well as materially, and warnings were issued against making such announcements. The exhibitor, especially, must always be able to get a clear view of market conditions and his own requirements in an interest to keep the German film industry on a sound basis, said Mr. Canty's report, which added: "Considering the paramount importance of this question, the Spio Commission, according to a decision made in its meeting, warns emphatically against publishing films or production plans which at the time of the publication are not absolutely certain."

"The Spio Commission intends to supervise constantly all announcements of films and production plans," the report said. "Such firms or persons disregarding the aforesaid warning run the risk of being banished from the film industry."

Ten-Year Residence Factor

As previously mentioned (see HERALD, July 8, page 11), the employment of non-Aryan people, as well as of foreigners, in film work, is subject to the approval of the ministry for propaganda, in order that all films may be approved as being "German," as specified in the film reorganization program. A new turn to this racial regulation permits foreigners of German race to be placed on an equality with Germans, if through a ten years' residence in Germany they have proved their close affiliation to the motherland.

In connection with the importation of foreign pictures, the report states that the Act of July, 1930, under which the government was entitled to set forth regulations for the exhibition of foreign films in order to secure the cultural interest of the German cinema industry, has been extended until June 30, 1936.

Nine Companies Sue to Restrain Film Valuations

Suit to restrain County Assessor Melvin S. Wooster of King County, Wash., from entering on his rolls film valuations fixed by the assessor for personal property tax was begun last week in superior court by nine companies in a combined action. The plaintiffs are Fox, Columbia, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Universal, United Artists, Vitagraph Inc., Paramount and Educational Film Exchange.

The companies value at $46,445 about 16,000,000 feet of film on which they declared the assessor has fixed valuations of $126,210 for 1933. Many of the prints taxed have no value whatever, they declared. Presiding Judge Jas. B. Kinne restrained the assessor from entries pending a hearing on August 21.

Warner-Loew Booking Deal Set

An innovation in neighborhood theatre booking arrangements is being introduced by the Loew's Theatres of Greater New York with the start of the new season. Launching the circuit's 1933-34 program will be the Warner musical, "Gold Diggers of 1933." The film is being played by Loew's under an unusual exclusive contract from Warner Bros., under which only Loew theatres will play the film during the next several months. The method of releasing the film by borough divisions will be ignored and "Gold Diggers" will open in all boroughs of New York and in Westchester simultaneously.

Another unusual angle to the "Gold Diggers" bookings is that some 30 Loew houses, which never play a picture a full week, will do so with this film. Starting Friday, September 1, the picture will play at seven metropolitan houses; the following week at 22 in Greater New York and Westchester, and on October 6 it will open for week-end showings at 31 additional theatres. There will then be a lapse of three weeks before the film reaches any other New York house.

Jules Levy, general sales manager of RKO Radio, announced this week the closing of contracts for 100 per cent showing of Radio product in Warner theatres during the 1933-34 season. Cresson E. Smith and E. L. McEvoy negotiated the deal on the RKO end and Clayton Bond and Joseph Bernhard for Warners.

Famous Players-Canadian, leading Dominion circuit of 110 theatres, has signed for the entire 1933-34 Warner output. N. L. Nathanson, managing director, acted for the circuit, with A. W. Smith, sales executive, representing Warner.

306 Admits Permit Men Following NRA Appeal

Harry Sherman, president of Local 306, New York projectionists' union, has offered full membership in the local to 600 permit men upon payment of the $500 initiation fee. The permit men have accepted and the proposition was approved by the full membership. The action was taken after an appeal by Edward F. McGrady, NRA deputy administrator. The union also admitted 300 members of the Empire State Union, rival organizations.

The local has obtained injunctions against Rudholm Amusement Corporation and Leo Brecher Enterprises, both operating New York houses, to prevent them from hiring non-union operators in violation of union contracts.

RUSSIAN SUPER-MONOPOLY PLACES FILMS UNDER A SPECIAL BUREAU

Commissars' Council Will Supervise All Production, Financing of Theatres, and Film Selling; Sound Installations Grow

[Washington Bureau of the HERALD]

A super-monopoly is Russia's newest move in its iron hold upon the motion picture industry. Following in the foot-steps of Germany's recent action, the Soviet administration issued a decree further reorganizing and solidifying its control of the business of the screen.

The Russian decree, based on the idea that the film is a continually growing factor in the cultural progress of a nation, regulates the film business on the following lines:

1. The Sojuskine is to be transformed into an official organization directly dependent on the Commissars' Council.
2. The new bureau, or office, will control the monopolies dealing with production of unexposed film and chemical products, cinema apparatus, spare parts, theatrical, cultural, technical, educational, military films and news reels;
3. Will organize an independent section to deal with exporting and importing films and in general to treat with the industry outside Russia.
4. The new administration will give instructions to all cinema schools. Exception will be made for organizations already existing.
5. The Council will exercise supreme control over all production and will approve the program of work.
6. Individual national monopolies now existing in the various Republics do not form part of the administrative system of the Sojuskine in the question of production and renting, but will remain under the control of the Soviet Republics. The control and financing of the monopolies will be exercised by the new administrative bureau.
7. All the national producing monopolies will be entitled to rent their films in the territory of the Union of Soviets.
8. The financing of a cinema will be effected through the monopolies of the various national Republics.
9. A council presided over by the Commissar for Culture is to be constituted for every national monopoly and will take up questions of art with the Sojuskine.
10. A monopoly for renting (Roskine) and a monopoly for the production of films suitable for the national minorities of the various regions (Wostokine) will be organized in the Commissar's Council of the People of Northern and Central Russia.

The number of halls in Moscow wired for sound is being increased by 123, bringing the total to 222 for the new season.

The number of wired halls in the country outside Moscow will be increased from six in 1932, to 125. It is calculated that the total number of cinemas, including also the traveling cinemas, will reach 14,679 by the end of this year, as compared with 13,767 in 1932. For the first time, 35 traveling cinemas will make tours. The whole cinema service of the Soviets ought, theoretically, to serve potentially 530,000,000 persons, of whom 322,000,000 live in the cities. The review, Kino of Charkov, observes that the purely propaganda films, the so-called agit-profilm, ought to be supplanted by "documentary" films produced with greater artistic sense.

Reorganization Compares With Germany's

In the June 10 issue of MOTION PICTURE HERALD the taking over of the German film industry by Adolph Hitler was described at length.

Russia and Germany are not alone, however, in their control of motion pictures. Italy subsidizes its companies and, while the propaganda phase is not so concentrated as that of Germany and Russia, the Italian government has as workable a tool as the others.

Censorship Revenues in China

(U. S. Commercial Attache at Shanghai)

According to the Nanking Press, all revenues collected by the Film Censorship Board, which is under the joint jurisdiction of the Ministries of Education and Interior, should be used for the production of educational pictures, a result of a resolution reached at the 65th meeting of the standing committee of the Chinese Educational Council.

Non-Theatrical Use of Reproducers

(U. S. Vice Conul, Guayaquil, Ecuador)

A leading distributor in Ecuador announced that his company intended to establish a film library so that owners of amateur projectors might be able to rent both talking and silent films.

Neither the Ecuadorian government nor any educational institution has prompted the use of sound pictures in schools, principally, it is said, because of the lack of funds. The ministry of education is said to be very much in favor of obtaining motion picture equipment and films.

Films in French Schools

(U. S. Trade Commissioner, Berlin)

It was reported in the French press that M. de Monzie, minister of public education, planned to institute a commission to study the problem of sound film equipment for schools. The trade press pointed out the advisability of insuring availability of replacements parts.

British Production High

(U. S. Trade Commissioner at London)

There are more British films in production in British studios than ever before. In the week ended June 10, twelve studios were working full time on 24 new subjects, representing an outlay of £350,000.

A growing demand for comedy above all other types of drama was reported.

Imports of unexposed film during April amounted to 2,474,196 linear feet, valued at £13,393, which compares with 3,784,268 linear feet valued at £11,003 imported during the previous month, and 2,465,122 linear feet valued at £10,467 imported during April a year ago.

Unexposed film exports during April, which amounted to 733,460 linear feet, increased 20.7 per cent over the previous month, 58.1 per cent over a year ago.

Unexposed film re-exported in April amounted to 318,663 linear feet, valued at £2,626, a decrease of 38.18 per cent from March.

On the four months' showing the amount of imports for the period January to April, which is 16,404,454 linear feet, is a considerable increase over the same period for the two previous years.

818 Czechoslovakia Houses Wired

(U. S. Commercial Attache, Prague)

Subsidy Plan Also in Operation in Germany and Italy; British Production Highest Ever; Chinese Use Few U.S. Pictures

At the end of 1932 there were 818 wired theatres in Czechoslovakia with 350,000 seats and more than 1,200 silents seating 260,000. As the silent theatres much charge much lower admissions than those equipped for sound, it is feared the quality of silent films shown will decline.

Decrease of U. S. Films in China

(U. S. Trade Commissioner at Hong Kong)

The past year has shown a heavy decrease in the percentage of American films in the British colony of Hong Kong. In 1930 an estimate placed 75 per cent of all films shown in the colony as American, and 20 per cent Chinese. In 1932 American films had dropped off to 60 per cent, Chinese films had increased to 25 per cent and British films accounted for another 10 per cent. Russian films have been stopped as propaganda.

There has been a marked decrease in theatre attendance the past year in Hong Kong.

Portable Cinematograph

(U. S. Trade Commissioner, Buenos Aires)

A portable cinematograph, sponsored by the Buenos Aires municipality, is circulatiing throughout the city giving shows at 6 p. m.

Basic Patents Granted Westinghouse's New Tube

By granting two basic patents on alternating current tubes last week, the United States Patent office gave its official recognition to the fact that engineers of the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company were responsible for one of the most significant developments in radio receiving, and one which now dominates a $50,000,000 a year tube manufacturing industry.

These patents are No. 1,909,051 to Messrs. Freeman and Wade, relating to the indirectly-heated cathode A.C. tube, and No. 1,911,024 to Messrs. Kimmel and Sutherlin, relating to the directly-heated cathode A.C. tube. The Radio Corporation of America is now manufacturing these tubes under a license from Westinghouse.

It was the development of these two types of alternating current tubes by the Westinghouse research laboratories which made possible the change from battery-operated to alternating current receivers in 1927.

Announces Arbitration Total

The Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, on the Coast, announced last week that $75,000 had been paid by producers to actors in disputes on contracts submitted to arbitration over a period of three years.

Bureau of Missing Persons

(Warner Bros.)

Comedy

Although the title might indicate otherwise, this is a novel and colorful comedy. That element predominates, though there are many other audience interesting factors that should be well received. There are really two ideas. The first phase, which serves as a continuous background for the second, is an interesting exposition in missing person bureau work. The second phase combines a humorous character study with an intriguing romantic twist, supported by clever treatment, good acting and thoughtful direction. The subject suggests its own showmanship.

The picture moves fast. The dialogue is peppy and there is plenty of exciting action that leads to surprising climaxes. One or two of the sequences are a trifle intimate but they serve principally to accentuate the comedy and drama of police work as well as the love interest.

The treatment is semi-episodic, particularly in the bureau sequences. To illustrate the work of that department a run away boy musician is restored to his parents; a philandering banker is shown the error of his ways; a man who ran away from his wife, because after 10 years of married life she still thought they were honeymooning, is reunited with his family. All the asides are given a definite comedy twist. Even when trips are made into the morgue, humorous action eradicates any gruesome atmosphere.

The real theme concerns but five persons: Webb, the kindly captain; Butch, strongarm squad transferee, Norma Roberts and Belle, about whom revolve all the other characters. Norma is brought into the picture looking for her husband. Butch, the detective, alimony-hounded by his ex-wife, falls in love with her. It develops that Norma is wanted for murder and when Butch goes out to bring her in she gives him the run around. Reporting Norma missing, he stages a fake funeral to see if a woman's natural curiosity to see how she looks as a corpse will attract her. Suspense with a comedy twist intervening, it does. Also it brings in Roberts, the man who was supposed to have been murdered; but it's one of those twin brother gags and Norma is only a victim of circumstantial evidence. Another ruse forces Roberts to confess to Webb and as Butch in the meantime has discovered Homer, Belle's second husband, the show has a slapstick finish to make the way clear for the Norma-Butch romance.

The rather irrelevant, unpleasant sounding title necessitates that more than usual attention be given to getting over the real idea of the show, not discounting the value of that title in exciting patron curiosity. Naturally it will be a source of interest to many, particularly the men. But considerable stress should be placed upon the comedy and romantic angles to attract the women. Tricky showmanship, that may be a little mystifying, is in line. The principal leads are all wellknown names, suitable for advertising purposes in any way. These, combined with catchlines emphasizing the colorful comedy, romance action and excitement, should prove effective in creating the proper understanding. Don't let patrons get the idea that the show is a mystery. Drive home the impression that it is different, interesting modern entertainment that will educate and amuse. Go after tieups with police departments in the larger cities to create an outside interest.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Paddy, The Next Best Thing

(Fox)

Romantic Comedy

Return of Janet Gaynor to the sparklingly vivacious roles that made her the universally loved screen player that she is, offers the showman the opportunity to go the limit, and that should be precisely the avenue of approach in every form of billing, that after making every possible use of the names of Miss Gaynor and Warner Baxter.

Entertainment value brims over in practically every sequence, and Harry Lachman in direction played the simple, homely emotional theme for its full worth, coming close to oldstyle hokum at times but never crossing the border, as attested by the many applications of audience handkerchiefs in the few scenes thus intended. And the long waiting lines for the second showing at the Music Hall in New York's Radio City confirmed the drawing power magic in that combination of names, Gaynor-Baxter, and also turned the industry pointer toward the general buoying of box office, realized or expected.

Miss Gaynor is Paddy, the younger sister, bubbling over with the joy of living, who makes action synonymous with impulse. In Gertrude Page's novel, as in the screen play, Major Adair, played by Walter Connolly, explained the name: she's the next best thing to the boy he had hoped for.

Paddy knows that Margaret Lindsay, her older sister, is in love with Harvey Stephens and so can't figure out why she's agreeing to become the bride of Baxter. Finally she finds the answer in the emptiness of her lovable but irresponsible father's purse, and straightway sets about trying to undo it all. One course she takes is to make love to Baxter herself for the sake of her sister. Her device is to bet him that he cannot place his lips close to hers without kissing her, and she wins the bet, unequivocably. She does succeed in breaking up the match. And the Major loses his life saving a groom from a rampant horse. The house and its furnishings go on the auction block.

And now Baxter knows that Paddy is the one he loves. But she has run away to Dublin to work in a Dr. Davy's apothecary's shop, and when he finds her there she decides to flee from him. He arranges with the doctor, played sympathetically by Fisk O'Hara, so that she loses her purse, has no breakfast, and is in the same compartment with him on the train, also that Miss Lindsay and Stephens are brought together.

And what a surprise when she gets back to the village. The home and all its furnishings have been restored, just as they were. Miss Lindsay and Stephens, married, greet her. But when all the friends, there for the surprise, show themselves, she sees Baxter among them and starts to run. He catches her and she finally agrees that her hating him has been because she has loved him.

Readymade tieups rest in the Irish settings, adeptly used and not forcibly. It's a picture for every member of the family.—Rovelstad, New York.

Moonlight and Pretzels

Musical

This musical, Universal's contribution to the host of such films which are dotting the release schedules of all companies for the 1933-34 season, was produced in the East for Universal by William Rowland and Monte Brice, with Bobby Connolly staging the dance numbers. The cast brings Leo Carrillo, Italian-accented player who is always amusing and entertaining, Mary Brian in the leading feminine role and Roger Pryor in the juvenile, hero position. Lillian Miles has an important part, and Jack Denny and his orchestra supply the often tuneful music.

For the information of the exhibitor it must be noted that the story woven through the musical show is much along the lines of previous musical films which have come to the screen within the past few months. The backstage atmosphere, the young producer trying to put on his first big musical show, and in need of money, his fight to make it go, and his romance with a show girl are all integral parts of the story.

However, the film as it stands, is lively in a measure, melodious to an extent and attractively done, if lacking something of an unusual spectacle nature. It should be reasonably well received, and the title, hitting a national mood of the moment, is definitely an appealing line with which to entice patronage.

Pryor, ambitious song writer, meets Miss Brian, owner of a music store in a small town. Working for her, he writes music, and when he sells one to a New York producing firm, off he goes to sell himself. He succeeds and in a short time is the hit of New York. Miss Miles is his star singer. When he breaks relations with the producers, and attempts to put on his own show, he is pressed for money and Miss Miles vamps Carrillo, Italian gambler. He is broke at the moment, but falling hard for Miss Miles, goes back to the game, and winning from the big-time gambler, Herbert Rawlinson, saves the show in the nick of time. Rawlinson becomes the menace, falling for Miss Brian, who had meanwhile come to New York and been given a part by Pryor, who finds a growing interest in her.

Rawlinson gambles Carrillo for his interest in the show, and proceeds to give orders, trying to make Miss Brian the star, instead of Miss Miles. The show faces ruin since Miss Brian cannot make the grade. At the last moment, Miss Brian gambles with Rawlinson for the controlling interest, wins through Rawlinson's good nature, and after another complication of uncertainty, all's well that ends well, and the show is a hit.

Utilizing the music the show offers, with stills of the attractive dance numbers, of which there are several, and playing upon the current appetite of the motion picture public for the musical show on the screen, appear to be the selling expedients.—AARONSON, New York.

Flying Devils

(RKO Radio)

Drama

There is thrill, action and drama in this yarn of the barnstorming, devil-may-care flyers of the fair grounds, who risk their lives every minute in the air, shoot across country to another spot, and do the same thing all over again. Not extraordinary in the matter of story, not unorthodox in treatment. "Flying Devils" packs a wallop for the showman and a thrill for his patronage, particularly in the smaller towns. He very definitely has something to sell to the adults, plus enough punch to bring the youngsters to the edges of their seats.

The title is an ace for the marquee and for heralds and stunts. If there has been a flying circus about town recently, or if one is due shortly, the picture should cash in on that without doubt. The cast names, not brilliant, are good, and the players do their work as though they meant it.

Arline Judge is in the lead, with Eric Linden, Bruce Cabot, Ralph Bellamy and Cliff Edwards for capable, dependable selling support. Not necessarily a smashing motion picture, it is the kind of stuff the showman can do things with, and make the box office show results. Its romance, of which there is enough without having so much as to break the action continuity, is appealing and well handled by Miss Judge and Linden.

Bellamy is leader of a barnstorming troop of daring stunt flyers, composed of himself, Cabot, Edwards and Miss Judge, Bellamy's wife, who does daring parachute jumps. Linden, Cabot's younger brother, appears and is hired to do a double parachute jump with Miss Judge. Linden falls in love with Miss Judge, and she with him, a dangerous situation, since Bellamy is a tough and undemonstrative, but nonetheless jealous husband.

While Edwards, perpetually drunk, supplies incidental and amusing comedy, the fire of Bellamy's anger smoulders. It breaks into flame when Linden and Miss Judge, going for a night spin, crash and are lost, being forced to sleep in a deserted cabin for the night. Bellamy and Cabot find them. Linden tells him the truth and Bellamy is surprisingly acquiescent. He asks Linden to try a new stunt, two planes meeting in a head-on air collision, the pilots bailing out before the crash. The intoxicated Edwards sees Bellamy cut Linden's parachute. Cabot goes up, warns Linden in time to prevent his jump and the crash. Then follows a thrilling air chase, as Bellamy chases Linden through the air, refusing to let him land. Cabot deliberately crashes headlong into Bellamy, both planes falling in flames, both men killed. Linden and Miss Judge are married, Linden joining the transport service.

The picture is active, lively, and full of the sort of punch that brings a thrill of suspense. It is salable material, above the average run, and good for adults and youngsters, should be a real draw toward the weekend.—AARONSON, New York.

Shanghai Madness

(Fox)

Drama

A colorful, excitement-stimulating adventure yarn, this carries a nicely paced dramatic, romantic, comedy atmosphere that generates and maintains interest. Not a big picture by any means, the film is rather one of those good programmers that ignores sophistication and uses action with traces of hokum to provide its punch. It concentrates interest on the hero with a sort of "Rover Boy" twist that first puts him in the light of getting a tough break from the U. S. Navy and then carries him through a lot of adventures that culminate in his honored rehabilitation. It is the kind of show that starts the kids cheering and gives the adults plenty of elemental 10-20-30 entertainment that pleased them so much when they and films were younger.

The locale is China; the time is the communistic revolution period. For firing on the stars and stripes, Lieutenant Pat Jackson violates neutrality instructions and wipes out the Red fort. Courtmartialed and despite his star-spangled banner plea, Pat is fired out of the Navy. No one will give him a job as he pauses to save Wildeth from a frenzied mob to have him become a phlegmatic party of the second part to a romance for which Wildeth is very keen. Eventually for being with Lo Ping's son when he dies, the Mandarin gives him a job on Lobo's gun-running river boat. Although Mr. Christie harshly thumbs down the ex-officer, Wildeth sees a heart of gold within him and smuggles herself aboard the boat. Hero and heroine stuff follows with Lobo and Larsen contributing the comedy before the girl is landed at a mission in Mrs. Glissen's care. Communists attack the mission. Excitement, thrill and suspense are keen and there is much noisy shooting as the gun-runner comes back to see Old Glory flying upside down. Then the rescue and Pat turns his field piece loose and routs the attacking horde. Finale is the quarter deck rehabilitation with Pat restored to rank, Mr. Christie admitting he always knew the boy had the stuff and a marriage in the offing.

"Shanghai Madness" is good entertainment for the kids, and exhibitors who have many of them in the house for every performance may find their enthusiasm transferring itself to the grownups. There is fun in the show as well as thrill and excitement. Although the start is a little slow, developing action remedies that as it concentrates sympathy on the hero and then inspires patriotism. Also there is a good deal of character in the film. An advance campaign that boldly gives the low-down on the color and tone of the theme, in which cast names have a prominent part and a little flag-waving is done, should stimulate plenty of interest.—MCCARTHY, Hollywood.

Turn Back the Clock

(MGM)

Comedy-Drama

Comedy-drama of a most unusual sort, this latest Lee Tracy starring vehicle should offer the showman a world of opportunity for exploitation of the sort to bring the crowd to the box office full of curiosity and set to enjoy itself. In addition to the undoubted draw which the lively and appealing Tracy has become, there is the origin of the story, an original for the screen by Ben Hecht and Edgar Selwyn. Where the Hecht name may mean anything, it is worth noting in the selling.

The rest of the cast is good but hardly unusual for the marquee. Mae Clarke plays opposite Tracy, Peggy Shannon and C. Henry Gordon are dependable names. Otto Kruger, long one of the Broadway stage's most capable and intelligent performers, here is in his first screen role. He is undoubtedly unknown, but is worth attention by the exhibitor for future appearances.

Tracy, small cigar-store owner in the big city, meets Kruger, from his own small town, who has made a fortune through his marriage to Miss Shannon, while Tracy married the poor girl, Miss Clarke. Kruger wants to invest the money they have saved, but Miss Clarke objects and they have a battle royal in their own apartment. Tracy staggers out into the night, half intoxicated. Knocked down by an automobile, he is operated on. As the ether is applied Tracy is wafted into a dream world, and what he pictures in his anaesthetized condition forms the body of the picture. Incidentally, the photographic impressionism by which is indicated the manner in which the ether is affecting Tracy forms a sequence of brilliant photographic technique.

Tracy is transported back to the small town and the age of 20, 20 years before. Based on the ancient saw, "If I had my life to live over again," etc., the picture offers a grand showman field day from that angle alone. Tracy, doing it all over again, knowing everything that is about to happen up to March 3, 1933, carries on from the point 20 years before, trying not to make the mistakes he had made the first time. He marries Miss Shannon instead of Miss Clarke, virtually reversing his and Kruger's situations for 20 years. He startles the early part of the century with his songs and dances of today and from that point, knowing what is to happen, makes his fortune. He reaches a point of authority, is authorized by President Wilson to head the War Industries Board during the War, but finally, after the crash of 1929, which he foresaw, but in which he loses his money through the recklessness and infidelity of his wife, he becomes president of a bank. About to be put on the spot by the other officers of the institution, he is pursued by a host of police, then wakes in his hospital bed, a sadder but wiser man, and certain that if he had it to do all over again, he would do it exactly as he had done it the first time.

The scenes of 20 years ago offer opportunities unbounded for the lively exhibitor who can decorate his lobby, use street and parade ballyhoo in the fashions of twenty years ago. The title is good, and the theme, "If I could do it all over again, knowing what I know now," is priceless in a selling campaign.—AARONSON, New York.

Produced and distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Directed by Edgar Selwyn. Original story for the screen by Edgar Selwyn and Ben Hecht. Photographed by Harold Rosson. Art director, Stanwood Rogers. Film editor, Frank Sullivan. Release date, August 25, 1933. Running time, 80 minutes.

Torch Singer

(Paramount)

Drama

Here is a different character study in which emotion stirring human interest predominates. Basically it is a tear-jerker, the kind of entertainment that gets under peoples' skin, women particularly, and gives them an opportunity to enjoy a little crying. But the drama of "Torch Singer" is not without romance, comedy, excitement and a unique story twist that endows the entire production with a pleasing novelty. The musical background and specialty numbers are charming and with Claudette Colbert proving herself a much better than ordinary vocalist, they constitute a very definite selling quality.

There is much in the show that will please all kinds of patrons. Early in the picture a splendid tribute is paid to a nun-managed Catholic hospital that should be useful in selling the picture to Catholic patrons. The radio atmosphere immediately suggests strong contacts with broadcasting stations as a means of stirring up added curiosity; the night club-torch singer color should prove attractive to the moderns and the unusual and dramatic climactic sequences will sink deep into the more mature adults as well as the children. In these scenes Miss Colbert's character forces her to assume the role of a drunkard, a fact that some may think ill-advised, but which fits well into the temper of the story.

Sally Trent, deserted by her lover, seeks the charity of a Catholic hospital while her baby is born. In build-up and confinement scenes, there is a bit of agony. Later, while living with Dora, mother love predominates and comedy is injected by the antics of Baby Leroy. Compelled to surrender her baby to the hospital, Sally hits the pavements. Changing her name to Mimi, she starts in a speakeasy dive, rising to become the toast of a class night club, with plenty of money, a swell apartment and lots of clothes, apparently forgetting her child. Meeting Tony, head of a chain broadcasting system, she is in the studio when Miss Spaulding, the Judson children's food hour entertainer, cracks in her "mike" debut. Stepping to the "mike," Mimi improvises her own program and is a nationwide hit. Mimi in the night club, Aunt Sally on the air, she gets a letter from a little girl named Sally, whom, when the name awakens memories, she visits, only to find a little colored child.

The mother again, she asks every little Sally to write to her, hoping to find her own child. Tense drama ensues as Michael, the father, returns to find Mimi, only to be spurned. Unable to find her child, Sally takes to liquor and disappears; found drunk in a dive by Tony and Judson, she puts on her program, gets a letter from another Sally. Going to the address, she finds little Sally has been adopted by her own father Michael, to have the story wind up with a charming romantic finale.

Get behind this story. You have just about everything with which you need to work. It has the elements that will interest adults as well as children. Cast names are good. No one can afford to overlook the natural radio contact possibilities, either as a means of straight exploitation or tieups with stations and sponsors. The doll gag is one that can be adapted to stimulate juvenile attendance, by having a prize doll as a door check prize. Even though Baby Leroy is only in the film for a short time, capitalize on the popularity his "Bed Time Story" appearance created. Get the full color of this show over to your patrons.—MCCARTHY, Hollywood.

Dance Hall Hostess

(Mayfair)

Comedy-Drama

Catchlines of the pattern of "Should a Girl Marry Only for a Home" might present the most practicable plan for selling this production, though the showman at the same time must guard against the implication that only heavy tragedy stalks through the picture. However, with the story itself presenting no new turn, effort should be made to emphasize the emotional highlights.

Name values can best be determined by frequency of appearance of the principals in productions shown previously in the given community. Helen Chandler, Jason Robards and Edward Nugent in the leads, the men sharing their prominence, may merit play in the billing.

The story, starting from a lovers' quarrel, is built around the life of a girl taxi-dancer. Helen Chandler's steady, Robards, has a good start on paying for his own taxi when things begin to happen. Nugent, cynical of his family's wealth, and bored, drops into the dance hall, his feet steered by his alcoholic cargo, and is attracted to Miss Chandler. When in a moment of confidences she tells of her dreams of wealth, with a pair of stockings for every day in the year, she gives him a clue, and the 365 pairs appear the next day. And when he comes later and asks to see her to her home, it's Robards' cab that he hails, and a bouncing ride they all have. On Nugent's ride home, Robards drives him into a tree and the cab is wrecked. And next he has a windup quarrel with his girl.

Robards goes to a beer-runner for a job. Caught by a prohibition squad, he gets a real sentence in jail, but his girl knows only that he has dropped out of her sight. While Nugent and Miss Chandler agree that they only like each other, she accepts his offer of marriage. Nugent's sister, a year later, is pestering Nugent's bride, but the sister also casts meaningful eyes upon the new chauffeur. Miss Chandler sees him; he's Robards. She meets him in the garden at night; and that same night Nugent is found dead in the garage. Robards had told Miss Chandler it would be best for him to leave; he's arrested by the sheriff's agent. The familiar interrogating is done by the sheriff rather than in a courtroom scene, the sister playing the villainess. Finally, the family doctor clears it up, showing that Nugent, who had been told that his heavy drinking had left him but a short time to live, had turned fatalist and had killed himself. And then Robards and his former sweetheart start over again.

The picture may be seen by the youngsters, though it probably has no particular significance for them. However, there is a likable tot for them in Helen Chandler's boy.—ROVELSTAD, New York.

Mickey's Touchdown

Columbia-Darmour

Lively Comedy

The characters created in the Fontaine Fox cartoons, Mickey McGuire and Stinky Davis, organize two football teams. Mickey's gang are all the poor kids from the other side of the tracks, members of the Little Scorpions Club. Stinky's are scions of the elite. Plenty of comedy goes with the practice sessions, which take on added color as Howard Jones, coach of the University of Southern California, gives the youngsters a practical lesson in how to play football. The eve of the big game, Stinky after stealing Mickey's clothes gets into some mischief, for which Mickey is held in the police station. The game, with Mickey listening in via radio, is a comedy replica of a big-time classic, with fights and so on, that inject Tomboy Taylor into the fracas, coming to a gag finish as Coach Jones shows up on the grounds, convinces the Judge that Mickey is innocent, which enables the kid to be rushed to the field with a police escort in time to score the winning touchdown. Plenty of fun for the grownups as well as youngsters; the action precipitating much laughter. Running time, 18 minutes.—MCCARTHY, Hollywood.

Rufus Jones for President

Snappy Musical

With Ethel Waters, famed negro blues singer, prominently cast, Vitaphone offers a musical comedy burlesque number with an all-negro cast, as one of the Broadway Brevities numbers, which is peppy, amusing and vastly entertaining. Miss Waters is seen first as a colored mammy as talented little Sammy Davis on her knee, promising he may be president some day. They sleep and dream he is, in song and dance. The Senate sings and talks in rhyme, while Sammy dances for them and Miss Waters sings. Several popular and melodious song numbers, as well as dances, are included in a short subject, which, striking the popular fancy of the moment, should be worth special billing.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Fair

There is fair liveliness of the animated variety, and reasonable amusement in this number of the Pooch the Pup series, in which Pooch, wandering through the woods, discovers a young bird in difficulty learning to fly and to sing. He helps him out and leads the raid of rescue by the birds when a big cat grabs the birdie. Amusing, especially for the youngsters.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Radio's Riotous Funsters—in a frantically funny feature comedy with drama, romance, gags, songs, sizzling dance numbers and everything else that makes for ENTERTAINMENT!

With Ted Healy, Eddie Foy, Jr., Thomas Jackson, J. Farrell MacDonald, Ray Hedge, Grace Hayes, Trixie Friganza. Directed by Al Boasberg. Produced by Foy Productions, Ltd. Presented by Carl Laemmle.

advance outlines of productions nearing completion

THE LATE CHRISTOPHER BEAN

MGM

With Marie Dressler in the lead, there is much reminiscent of the "Emma" atmosphere in this adaptation of a French stage play by Sidney Howard, which is being directed by Sam Wood.

In the story, Miss Dressler is the faithful drudge in the Lionel Barrymore household. Confidant, advisor, sort of mother-confessor to all, she exercises a benign effect on the squabbling family. Straightening out the husband-wife spats, keeping the daughter's romantic dreams on an even keel, she's more of a boss than servant.

Barrymore's prize possession is a number of valuable paintings by the late Christopher Bean. When times get tough they stand as a bulwark between him and poverty. Eventually it develops that Marie is the widow of Christopher and intriguing comedy enters as Marie comes into the fortune that the works of art represent and makes sure that Barrymore's family will never lose her as a friend.

The part is ideal for the Marie Dressler character and with a cast that features Lionel Barrymore, Jean Hersholt, George Coulouris, Beulah Bondi and Helen Mack in the principal roles there doesn't seem any doubt but that it will be on par with her best pictures.

SATURDAY'S MILLIONS

Universal

A seasonal football picture based on the Saturday Evening Post story of the same title by Lucien Gary. The screen play is by Dale Van Every. Direction is by Edward Sedgwick, who handled "What, No Beer," "The Passionate Plumber" (Keaton), "Parlor, Bedroom And Bath" and "Spite Marriage." The locale is a midwest university and the story runs the gamut of topical entertainment elements, with interest equally divided between romantic drama, in which the hero goes the way of all swellheads and becomes a heel, and topical comedy. The climax is a spectacular football game in which the hero plays with a broken hand. The game is lost in the final minute, but the lead puts up such a game exhibition that he redeems himself with all his friends as well as the old grads.

Leads are taken by Robert Young, recently seen in "Hell Below" and "Tug Boat Annie," and Leila Hyams, Johnny Mack Brown, a former All-American whose last football picture was "70,000 Witnesses," is captain of the University team. Husky-voiced Andy Devine of "Spirit of Notre Dame" and "The All-American" fame, is the principal comedy relief, and Lucille Lund, winner of the Universal-College Humor talent contest, former Northwestern University coed, is one of the highly publicized newcomers. Others in the cast include Grant Mitchell, Richard Tucker, and Paul Porcasi.

ONLY YESTERDAY

Universal

The cast numbering fifty-four credited players, "Only Yesterday" is an emotional and episodic drama covering the 1917-1929 period. Based on the same titled novel by Frederick L. Allen, the screen play is by Arthur Richman and George O'Neil, with added dialogue by William Hurlbut. John Stahl, who made "Seed" and "Back Street," is directing.

Treated in the familiar Stahl vein and somewhat similar to the "The Power and The Glory," (Lasky-Fox) idea, the picture tells its story by means of complete flashbacks. Detailing Mary's undying love and Emerson's forgotten romance, the yarn opens on the day the stock market collapsed. Mary, dying, leaves a letter for Emerson. Then, amid scenes of turmoil, the picture goes back to 1917 and relates the original clandestine romance. War atmosphere is absent but there is Armistice Day. Mary sees her returning hero, but he has forgotten her. There follow years with their encompassing historic events, to bring the unrealizing Emerson together with Mary again for another flirtatious night, and on down to October, 1929, when the financially ruined Emerson, contemplating suicide, receives Mary's letter. Too late to do anything for Mary, he leaves his double-crossig wife, and goes to his boy (by Mary), planning great happiness for both.

Margaret Sullavan, noted stage actress, makes her picture debut as Mary. John Boles, who worked with Stahl in "Seed" and "Back Street," is Emerson. Principal supports are Billie Burke, Reginald Denny, Edna May Oliver and Benita Hume. Other wellknown names include June Clyde, Marie Prevost, Tommy Conlon, Berton Churchill, Franklyn Pangborn, Natalie Moorhead, Betty Blythe, Dorothy Grainger, Dorothy Christy, Robert McWade, Ferdinand Munier and Louise Beavers.

The picture is being lavishly produced. Settings are extremely modernistic. Touching on many timely events and introducing numbers of noted personages, there is much topical color. Despite the extensive cast, action is confined to comparatively few players, making for easy understanding.

BEAUTY FOR SALE

MGM

Based on a story by Faith Baldwin, whose novels as well as short stories in Cosmopolitan and other periodicals have raised her to peerage among current popular authors and whose "Skyscraper Souls" is known to screen fans, this picture has the initial appearance of being a glamorous dramatic portrayal of modern romance. The screen play is by the wellknown Zelda Sears and Eve Green and the picture is being directed by Richard Boleslavsky, maker of "Rasputin and the Empress" and "Storm at Daybreak."

The cast, besides presenting the noted stage actor, Otto Kruger, features a host of well-known picture personalities including Madge Evans, May Robson, Alice Brady, Una Merkel, Henry Travers, Eddie Nugent, Florine McKinney, Phillips Holmes, Gilbert Roland and Hedda Hopper.

Class and glamor predominating, most of the story centers about a famous New York beauty parlor, which has a sort of Ziegfeld-Earl Carroll atmosphere where the girls are almost encouraged to be nice to the customers as long as it brings business. Into the setup comes a young Southern gal to be loved by the mechanic brother of her chum, but who falls in love with one of the patrons. The man, really in love, is married, a situation which Letty discovers; she revolts at the idea of going back to the hard-boiled mechanic only to have her happy romance saved by Sherwood's wife falling in love with another and hopping to Paris for a divorce.

The dialogue is crisp, action is colorful and fast and with production majoring in ultra modernistic settings as well as featuring scores of beautiful girls in the beauty parlor sequences, the picture should be unusually good looking.

DESIGN FOR LIVING

Paramount

As a stage play, "Design for Living" experienced one of the most phenomenal runs of modern times. This value, enhanced by the accruing publicity, is made more impressive by the big name atmosphere that surrounds the screen production.

The story is by the noted British author and actor, Noel Coward. The screen play has been prepared by Ben Hecht, who has a long list of screen accomplishments to his credit as well as being the writer of scores of popular short stories and novels. The picture is being directed by Ernst Lubitsch. The cast comprises but five persons. Frederic Marsh, Miriam Hopkins and Gary Cooper occupy the leading roles. In supporting parts are Edward Everett Horton and Franklin Panghorn, whose popularity as a comedian has taken a noticeable leap upward since "International House" in the supporting parts.

Identified as a light dramatic romance, with Lubitsch devoting his talents to the elimination of a too-stagy atmosphere by using action and illusion to eliminate lengthy dialogue, the show tells the story of two pals, March and Cooper, very much in love with Miriam Hopkins. Unable to favor one without hurting the other, she complicates the situation for all by marrying Horton for a while. But with her heart still for March and Cooper, she tosses her spouse overboard to return to her erstwhile lovers, leaving the audience to imagine which she eventually will choose.

Three locales featuring, London, Paris and New York, the story is ultra-modern and is being given the benefit of lavish production values.

LITTLE WOMEN

Radio

A picturization of Louisa M. Alcott's famous idyllic classic. The book, whose sales have run into the millions since its publication generations ago, and which even now is a big Christmas seller, has created a universal familiarity with the story. The screen play and adaptation are the work of Sarah Y. Mason and Victor Heerman. Direction is by George Cukor.

The cast includes Katharine Hepburn, Joan Bennett, Paul Lukas, Edna May Oliver; Jean Parker, currently in Columbia's "Lady For A Day;" Frances Dee. Douglass Montgomery, once known to picture fans as Kent Douglas, Henry Stephenson, Samuel Hinds; two new screen personalities, Spring Byington and Mabel Colcord, formerly of the stage, and John Davis Lodge, scion of the noted Massachusetts family.

Nearly a year having been devoted to preparation, Radio has given special attention to authenticity in reproducing the atmospheric background, the Alcott home in Concord, Mass.

Musical scoring is on par with the charm of the story.

JENKINS' COLYUM

North Platte, Neb.

Dear Herald:

We told you last week that our Neligh American Legion junior baseball team would play for the championship of Wyoming, Colorado and New Mexico here Saturday and Sunday and that we were going over there to see a sick grandma. We found grandma very much improved, so much so, in fact, that she said to me: "Well, Sonny Boy, I'm going to get up and go to the game with you." Grandma was always just like that. We also told you that if our team lost we'd be broke and have to panhandle something to eat. Say, brother, could you spare a dime?

The Fox company has two very fine theatres here. The Paramount, the finest one of the two, has been closed for some time, but is to be reopened very soon should business warrant, and it seems that it ought to in a town of 15,000 people located in an irrigated district. Dave Davis is the manager, and Vern Austin the assistant manager of the Fox. Both very capable men and both doing all they can to make Fox carry the load of both houses. They have a very capable assistant in Bobby Snyder, the cashier, who is the sunshine of the town on dark days and the life of the party on moonlight nights.

Bobby spotted us before we crossed the street to the theatre. She remembered us from two years ago. It's a wonderful memory Bobby has, but then who could ever forget our mug? Bobby agreed to come out to the ball park and help us root for our home team, but she didn't do it and that's why we are in need of a dime. Mr. Davis invited us to bring our ball team to the show as guests of the house, which we did, and we again extend our thanks to him for the courtesy. It was mighty nice of him.

E. C. Dettman of the Imperial theatre at Imperial shoots a 33 on a 36 par course, and that puts him up in our class. He shoots 100 per cent at the Imperial theatre when there is anything to shoot at. He shot us a check for the HERALD and that proves that he's a good shooter.

J. K. Powell operates the Oliver at Palisade, Neb., and a theatre at Wray, Colo. He reads the HERALD when going back and forth between the two, which makes J. K. a pretty busy man. He's a HERALD fan and that's how it comes that he has two theatres. He knows the game.

At Franklin we found one for Ripley's "Believe It Or Not." George E. Hall, who operates the Rose Bowl theatre, has a projectionist who is both deaf and dumb. He is said to be one of the best operators in the country. He determines the volume of sound by the sense of touch by placing his fingers on the horn in the booth and Mr. Hall says he can regulate the sound as well as those who can hear. We have seen some dumb operators, but they could hear, which doesn't seem to help some of them much.

We found Ralph Blank managing the World theatre at Kearney for the Blank Enterprises. The last time we met Mr. Blank he was managing a house in Grand Island. Carl Rose, who was assisting Mr. Blank, is soon to take charge of a new house in Hasting, which will be ready to open in a few weeks. This house also belongs to the Blank circuit.

Mr. Yachke is remodeling a house at Orleans and expects to have it ready to open soon. Orleans has been without a theatre for some time and Mr. Yachke will undoubtedly get the support of the community, as the people have been going to other towns for their entertainment.

R. E. Falkinburg of the Majestic theatre at Lexington is certainly sitting in a good spot. Lexington is a town of about 3,000 and is located in the heart of the sugar beet and alfalfa country and the valley is under a high state of cultivation and all of it under the ditch. The country is dotted with nice farm homes and everything in and around Lexington looks prosperous. It's one of the best looking spots we know of in the state. Ralph has the only theatre at Lexington, which is plenty good enough for any town.

H. J. Hagadone has the Rialto theatre at Cozad. Cozad is another town which is located in the Platte valley and in the heart of the sugar beet and alfalfa country, the most of which is under irrigation. Here, like most other irrigated sections, dry weather doesn't seem to affect the crops, for when they need water they open the ditch and let 'er run and that's all there is to it.

This entire Platte valley from Kearney west as far as Big Springs, a distance of something like 150 miles, is under some system of irrigation. The water is taken out of the Platte river and the only worry the farmers have is whether there will be sufficient snow on the east slope of the Rockies, where this river has its rise, to supply the river with sufficient water for the entire season, and if you don't think it takes water to irrigate this country you should see the size of these irrigating ditches; they are rivers of themselves, and one wonders how they could possible use all the water they carry, but they do, and the bed of the Platte in and around Grand Island is often dry for months during the irrigating season, as irrigation takes all the water.

Julesburg, Colo.

We always stop here to visit Mrs. Zorn, who operates the Hippodrome theatre, because we always receive a most cordial welcome.

Julesburg is where the Burlington railroad splits off the main line and runs to Denver. At one time Julesburg had visions of being quite a city, but she has gotten over that notion now, for now she is just like any other town of like proportions, just trying to keep the doors open and look pleasant. Mrs. Zorn provides the entertainment for the whole town, but there seems to be too many in the town who don't want to be entertained, which we find to be the case in many another community.

We called just at the noon hour and found Mr. and Mrs. Duer with their feet under Mrs. Zorn's dinner table and that boy Duer was stowing away fried chicken and mashed potatoes like a harvest hand. If we had Duer's appetite we'd live on railroad spikes and crowbars. He must have two tapeworms, both of them full grown.

Mr. Duer is film salesman for Paramount out of Denver. He has filled that capacity for 10 years without a layoff, which proves one of two things: either he is a good salesman or Paramount has good service. We surmise that it's a little of both, probably a great deal of both. Duer says he is strong for the HERALD. He thinks it is the best journal in the field, but says he can't understand why they publish our column. We told him we had met some people who couldn't nderstand why the earth is round, that what he ought to do would be to get some one to interpret our column for him who could read something besides the pictures in the magazine. Then the fight started, and now the landlord will have to help both of us to bed.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

British and Dominions

FLAG LIEUTENANT, THE: Henry Edwards, Anna Neagle—An English production but a splendid story in spite of that. The sets are very confined, but being English they would be very conservative about that. Has a lot of exciting moments and a very refreshing hero in the Flag Lieutenant. Well liked here. Played August 16-17.—Wm. A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

Columbia

SPEED DEMON: William Collier, Jr., Joan Marsh—If your patrons want action all the way, then be sure and play this one. An all around good program. —Amuzu Theatre, Inc., Inman, S. C. General patronage.

TREASON: Buck Jones—Very good western. Running time, 62 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. Neighborhood patronage.

WHITE EAGLE: Buck Jones—One of the best of the Jones and drew swell business. Best Wednesday in nearly two years.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

First National

ELMER THE GREAT: Joe E. Brown—A typical Joe E. Brown that just don't go by. It might be just the thing in other localities but not here. Played August 24-25.—Walter M. E. Potamkin, Cedar Theatre (Lessy Amusement Co.), Philadelphia, Pa. General patronage.

HEROES FOR SALE: Richard Barthelmess, Loretta Young—This one pleased some, others thought it far overdrawn. It drew average business and to most of the people who saw it was just another picture Running time, 75 minutes. Played August 16-17.—Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

Fox

BROADWAY BAD: Joan Blondell, Ricardo Cortez —Never saw so many dainty underthings in my life. Not much to this one and am glad that it was our owl show.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

BROADWAY BAD: Joan Blondell, Ricardo Cortez —A good program picture and pleased.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

DANGEROUSLY YOURS: Warner Baxter—Good show; kinda dirty but not too much. Plenty of wisecracks and it did business enough to pay out and leave enough for a slice of watermelon after the show.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

HOLD ME TIGHT: James Dunn, Sally Eilers—The first Dunn-Eilers comedy I've played and it did a satisfactory business. Much better second day. Bum print. Running time, 70 minutes. Played August 4-5.—Walter H. E. Potamkin, Cedar Theatre (Lessy Amusement Co.), Philadelphia, Pa. General patronage.

HOLD ME TIGHT: James Dunn, Sally Eilers—They liked this one fine, and if Fox had not killed this team with so many poor pictures before this one we could have done some business, but it drew less than the average even though it was a mighty fine picture that drew a good second night's business. Running time, 74 minutes. Played August 9-10.—Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

I LOVED YOU WEDNESDAY: Warner Baxter, Elissa Landi, Victor Jory—Just fair. Baxter as usual gives a top notch performance, but Landi overacted in the love scenes. Also she photographed bad. She looked gaunt under the lights. I don't get it, this flair for dieting until they look emaciated. The last picture that Hepburn was in she had the same appearance and the effect is far from good. On the screen when the voluptuous Mae West can knock them cold it looks to the writer that they would take a tumble to how these actresses look before the lights.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

SAILOR'S LUCK: James Dunn, Sally Eilers—Very satisfactory. Rather light business. Played August 2-3.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus N. Y. Family patronage.

IN this, the exhibitor's own department, the theatremen of the nation serve one another with information on the box office performance of product for their mutual benefit. It is a service of the exhibitor for the exhibitor. Address all communications to—

SECOND HAND WIFE: Sally Eilers, Ralph Bellamy—Poorest show I have had from Fox this year. No favorable comments. Kids knocked it plenty. Certainly not the show for the average small town house. Would not have used it gratis if I had seen it first. Recording also very spotty. Parts of it could not be understood at all.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

SMOKE LIGHTNING: George O'Brien—Terrible print with holes punched in sound track, although the kids seemed to like it. Running time, 54 minutes. Played August 5.—Walter H. E. Potamkin, Cedar Theatre (Lessy Amusement Co.), Philadelphia, Pa. General patronage.

SMOKE LIGHTNING: George O'Brien—This boy makes them move along and when he socks them, they stay socked. Plenty of action; he can ride, and they find a different spot in the hills to film them. Book it and play it because it is one of the better westerns.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

STATE FAIR: Janet Gaynor, Will Rogers—Can add nothing to the praise already given this fine show. Went over the split figure, which is something these days. Why can't we get more stories like this? L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

TRICK FOR TRICK: Ralph Morgan, Victor Jory—Pleased about 90 per cent to less than usual Saturday night business. Played August 5.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

WARRIOR'S HUSBAND, THE: Elissa Landi, David Manners—It's different from anything made within the last three years and plenty of money was spent in production. Had a number of pleasing comments and they laughed all through the picture so it must have been most enjoyable entertainment. Don't know how it would have drawn by itself because we ran it as an owl show. Played August 18-19.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

Invincible

FACE ON THE BARROOM FLOOR, THE: Walter Miller—Road show picture. Handled throughout this state by Adams Bros., a fine bunch of men. The picture pleased. The lobby display and ballyhoo got them in. We made some money. You can do the same if you will play the picture. I never pass up a roadshow man if he has anything good.—Ned Pedigo, DeLuxe Theatre, Garber, Okla. General patronage.

MGM

ANOTHER LANGUAGE: Helen Hayes, Robert Montgomery—Down to earth entertainment. All in cast excellent in their parts. Clean and wholesome. You fellows that want all objectionable words or implications removed, here it is. Seemed to please our patrons. Played August 10-11.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

BARBARIAN, THE: Ramon Novarro—The surprise of the year. Decent business. Don't know why, but who cares, they came.—Walter H. E. Potamkin, Cedar Theatre (Lessy Amusement Co.), Philadelphia, Pa. General patronage.

BARBARIAN, THE: Ramon Novarro—A good picture that drew fairly well but dragged along in spots. Great cast, including Louise Closser Hale and what a pity that she had to go. She could liven up the worst of them and make you think that you'd just seen a real show.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln Kansas. Small town patronage.

DEVIL'S BROTHER, THE: Dennis King, Laurel and Hardy—A complete surprise. We advertised Dennis King and we did a fair business. Show itself isn't bad; it gets by. Running time, 87 minutes. Played August 2-3.—Walter H. E. Potamkin, Cedar Theatre (Lessy Amusement Co.), Philadelphia, Pa. General patronage.

GABRIEL OVER THE WHITE HOUSE: Walter Huston, Karen Morley—An exceptionally good picture which did not make film rental and express. Every member of this cast is good and it is a picture every American ought to see, but just try to get them to come to this kind of show. Every one who remained during the entire show liked it, but they would walk out on George Washington in person if he made a speech. This production is just too good for the small town. Running time, 87 minutes.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

HOLD YOUR MAN: Clark Gable, Jean Harlow—Not sophisticated type as one might think from title. Gable is a crook. Jean Harlow delivers her part. Wisecracks pretty strong, but seemed to get over okay. Patrons said nothing on leaving, neither for nor against, so think they liked it. Played August 13-14.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison Ark. Small town patronage.

HOLD YOUR MAN: Jean Harlow, Clark Gable—Here's one picture that will get you some business and you don't have to spend all the profits getting them in. We put it on the calendar, hung up a banner, put out some cheap heralds and boy, how they flocked into see this picture. Done with plenty of wisecracks, and just naughty enough but nice to make them like it.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

LOOKING FORWARD: Lewis Stone, Benita Hume, Lionel Barrymore—The first lemon of the season from good ole Leo. Extremely bad casting, and Clarence Brown must have been punch-drunk when he directed this. Lewis Stone carries the show by himself. Barrymore is fine in what he does, but he doesn't do enough to rate him as the star. The rest of the cast are English and they could have stayed in good old England. Played August 28-29.—Walter H. E. Potamkin, Cedar Theatre (Lessy Amusement Co.), Philadelphia, Pa. General patronage.

LOOKING FORWARD: Lionel Barrymore, Lewis Stone—Lionel Barrymore to star in this, but Lewis Stone predominates. Barrymore excellent in his characterization but another picture with an English story and all based upon accent and dialogue. Phillips Holmes a minor in this one. Story based upon depression's effect upon an old established business. The spot for it??? Played August 15-16-17.—E. A. Reynolds, Strand Theatre Princeton, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

MIDNIGHT MARY: Loretta Young, Ricardo Cortez—The usual nite drama. The girl gets off to a bad start. Tries to reform. Does and slips. Reforms again and slips to save the man she loves. Cortez excellent as the heavy. Ordinary crook drama. Running time, 75 minutes. Played August 8-9-10.—E. A. Reynolds, Strand Theatre, Princeton, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

MIDNIGHT MARY: Loretta Young, Ricardo Cortez, Franchot Tone—A very good picture, presenting the story from a little different angle. Franchot Tone is one boy that I can enjoy and I'd sure like to hang his autograph in my lobby because he can act, plenty. Drew good for a program picture and pleased the majority, which is something now.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

REUNION IN VIENNA: John Barrymore, Diana Wynyard—The perfect show (for us). It did just what we expected, and if any of my opposition is reading this they know, we had 'em.—Walter H. E. Potamkin, Cedar Theatre (Lessy Amusement Co.), Philadelphia, Pa. General patronage.

REUNION IN VIENNA: John Barrymore—A very good show that looks better to you every time you see it but it isn't a small town picture. Drew fair business and the better class who could appreciate it, enjoyed it. Played August 16-17.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

STRANGER'S RETURN, THE: Lionel Barrymore, Franchot Tone, Miriam Hopkins, Stuart Erwin—Here's a small town natural. All characters excellent and plenty of compliments from patrons. Step on this and cash in. Picture will stand up. Played August 15-16.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

and these other attractions released in the next two months: Gary Cooper in "ONE SUNDAY AFTERNOON"—Claudette Colbert in "TORCH SINGER"—Laurence Schwab's "TAKE A CHANCE"—Skipworth & Fields in "TILLIE & GUS"

. . . If it's a Paramount Picture, it's the best show in town

—An excellent production. I consider this Joan Crawford's best picture, while Gary Cooper gives his usual fine performance, and Robert Young and Franchot Tone and Louise Closser Hale are fine. This picture has about everything to appeal to the small town patronage. Ran this Saturday, Sunday, with a street carnival as opposition on Saturday, so did not do so very well financially but it was no fault of the picture.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

WHEN LADIES MEET: Ann Harding, Robert Montgomery—This has possibilities if your patrons like society drama. Sell this picture properly and it means extra business. Harding and Montgomery excellent and entire cast rate better than average. Screen it first and then you will know how to sell it. Paper from exchange doesn't fit this type of picture. Running time 85 minutes. Played August 6-7.—E. A. Reynolds, Strand Theatre, Princeton, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

WHITE SISTER, THE: Helen Hayes, Clark Gable—A great picture in which Helen Hayes gives a wonderful performance. Clark Gable is good, while Louise Closser Hale is fine. The screen has certainly lost one of its best stars in the death of Mrs. Hale. Running time, 101 minutes. Played August 5-6.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

WHITE SISTER, THE: Helen Hayes Clark Gable—A very good picturg that did a fair business with some extra advertising. Tied up with the Catholic Church and that helped get some of the stay-at-homes. This picture will please the ladies and you won't have to hide when they come out.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

WHITE SISTER, THE: Helen Hayes, Clark Gable—A beautiful story, being just sad enough to have the ladies eat it up, but just a bit too religious for many. Helen Hayes steals the limelight all through, of course. Gable is in it but, being the story of a Nun Helen has the stage. Did good on this in spite of hot weather. Played August 11-12.—Wm. A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

Monogram

BLACK BEAUTY: Alexander Kirkland, Esther Ralston—Nice clean story. Well done and pleased.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

PHANTOM BROADCAST: Ralph Forbes, Vivienne Osborne—As a whole this is an interesting picture, but it would have been a much more pleasing picture if they had not given this a tragic ending. When will producers learn that folks come to the theatre to get away from their own troubles? There are times when a tragic ending is unavoidable, but in this picture this is not the case. Ralph Forbes has the audience's sympathy from the start and there was no need to have him killed in the end. I could suggest far better ending and I am not a trained scenario writer. Drawing power average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

Paramount

BEDTIME STORY, A: Maurice Chevalier, Baby LeRoy—This is a big letdown from "Love Me Tonight" for Chevalier. The baby saved the picture, but when this actor appears they expect more romance and more singing. There is one good number in it but that is all. The picture did not seem to register very strongly with the audience. Helen Twelvetrees had a washed out appearance on the screen for some reason. They will have to come a lot better than this one if Chevalier keeps his popularity. There is one thing about it: it is clean, but the picture dragged in story. Seemed to be reaching for laughs that did not come.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

BEDTIME STORY A: Maurice Chevalier, Helen Twelvetrees, Baby LeRoy—Gave best satisfaction of any feature we have presented this year with Baby LeRoy stealing the picture. Increased business. Played August 9-10.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

BEDTIME STORY, A: Maurice Chevalier, Helen Twelvetrees, Baby LeRoy—A good picture that drew extra business and had a lot of laughs mixed in with the entertainment. Baby LeRoy just about loses Maurice and you nearly forget that he is in the picture.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

COLLEGE HUMOR: Bing Crosby—Plenty of entertainment in this one. Just what the Sunday audience wants. Songs and girls, and Bing Crosby is as well liked by the men as the ladies, and that is something for a crooner. Step on this one hard, you can't go wrong. Especially good for Sunday opening.—Warren L. Weber, Ellinwood Theatre, Ellinwood, Kansas. General patronage.

GIRL IN 419, THE: James Dunn, Gloria Stuart—Jimmie Dunn as a famous surgeon in a city hospital isn't convincing. The gangster angle somewhat confusing. Direction at fault in my opinion. Warner Baxter would have been great in Dunn's role. Vince Barnett as the dumb interne gets all the laughs. The sneezing episode brought roars of laughter. Running time, 75 minutes. Played July 25-27.—E. A. Reynolds, Strand Theatre Princeton, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

YES, YES, MR. HYDE!

We have the honor to acknowledge herewith a letter, also herewith, from a valued exhibitor friend and follower of "What the Picture Did for Me." It will be obvious that the merry Mr. Hyde is not deceiving us, about anything:

To MOTION PICTURE HERALD:

Inclosed find a puncture-proof check for five dollars for which I wish you to place me on your "Roll of Honor" for another two years.

Now that I have renewed my subscription and am an owner in your publication, I'll start running it and want to dictate some policy for your "outside" man and his puddle jumper. Tell J. C. that his new boss wants to be placed on his calling list when he hits South Dakota and this stuff of repeating on Hot Springs just "cause the attractive wife of the careless manager cooks hashed brown taters" just like the Nebraska sodbusters like 'em, and cutting out the ninety and nine other careful exhibitors of the State and not calling on them, is out of the picture entirely. I got a wife what looks and cooks and a flock of kids that will give J. C. enuf competition around the festive board that he can eat just ordinary taters and like them. Haven't seen any one connected with the motion picture business for years who wasn't trying to get me to pay for his visit and donate towards his boss's salary so sure would like to chin with J. C. and cuss and discuss the rest of the industry.

Talking about industry, I'll shoot you a flock of reports with this letter. They won't be worth a darn to any one as I'm a failure—had to dig up four hundred bucks to keep my theatre going this summer—so my opinion must be wrong; nevertheless, I know you must have something to put into your weekly grunt, so guess my good deed for today will be inclosed and welcomed.

CHAS. LEE HYDE,
Pierre, S. D.

I LOVE THAT MAN: Edmund Lowe, Nancy Carroll—Only an average program picture that failed to get any business. A morbid ending which left a bad taste in the mouths of the audience. We can get along without pictures of this type.—Warren L. Weber, Ellinwood Thetre, Ellinwood, Kansas. General patronage.

INTERNATIONAL HOUSE: W. C. Fields, Peggy Hopkins Joyce—Joyce supposed to star but Fields the whole picture. One small dance number of the cellophane girls. Just a nutty pix without rhyme or reason and yet they liked it. The different radio stars appreciated. They will never get enuf of Cab Calloway in a picture to suit me. Rates your best nites. Bill heavy. Running time, 68 minutes. Played July 23-24.—E. A. Reynolds, Strand Theatre, Princeton, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

INTERNATIONAL HOUSE: W. C. Fields, Peggy Hopkins Joyce—Not up to expectations as a picture or as to business. Plenty of stars but not enough musical numbers. Those that it had failed to click as expected. Only average business on Sunday-Monday playdate. Played August 6-7.—Warren L. Weber, Ellinwood Theatre, Ellinwood, Kansas. General patronage.

KING OF THE JUNGLE: Buster Crabbe, Frances Dee—About the best, if indeed, it is not the best production of this kind we have ever shown. Buster Crabbe was a knockout; people were thrilled and thoroughly pleased. We find a remarkable Zasu Pitts type of girl in this that was a scream. Watch her, she's a comer.—Ned Pedigo, DeLuxe Theatre, Garber Okla. General patronage.

MAN OF THE FOREST: Randolph Scott—An excellent western. Taken amid beautiful mountain scenery and pine valleys, this western is outstanding. It has a good story, a capable cast and much comedy. Direction doesn't miss and picture hasn't a dull moment. The type western that pleases all. Running time, 60 minutes. Played August 4-5.—E. A. Reynolds, Strand Theatre, Princeton, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

MYSTERIOUS RIDER, THE: Kent Taylor—The usual satisfactory Zane Grey that drew better than most westerns.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

NIGHT AFTER NIGHT: George Raft, Mae West—Dandy program picture that drew lots of nice comments, but not quite as much business as we expected.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

SONG OF THE EAGLE: Richard Arlen, Charles Bickford, Mary Brian—The picture pleased. An action story wrapped around the brewery business before and after the war and up to the present time. Running time, 70 minutes. Played August 1-2-3.—E. A. Reynolds, Strand Theatre, Princeton Minn. Small town and country patronage.

SUNSET PASS: Randolph Scott, Tom Keene—Another Zane Grey with the story changed so you would not recognize it. Excellently done, great scenery and photography. Why do they murder these stories?—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

UNDER THE TONTO RIM: Stuart Erwin—Just fair, to fair business. Played August 12.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

RKO

DIPLOMANIACS: Wheeler-Woolsey—Wheeler and Woolsey are not the draws that they once were, and this is not their first, second or third best picture. They manage to get a few laughs in it, but the songs are punk and it failed to get over as an average Wheeler and Woolsey comedy. Running time, 63 minutes. Played August 13-14.—Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

GREAT JASPER, THE: Richard Dix—Another crow from RKO. Richard Dix as a great lover is a joke. What he needs is more action and less talk. This one will not please over twenty-five percent; might get by on 10c nights, if you have to run it.—Warren L. Weber Ellinwood Theatre, Ellinwood, Kansas. General patronage.

HALF-NAKED TRUTH, THE: Lee Tracy, Lupe Velez—Ballyhooed publicity will win. That's the theme of this, and Tracy and Velez have made a clever comedy drama. Nothing more naked than usual, where stage scenes are shown. Lupe's dance a shade warm. Played August 11-12.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

LUCKY DEVILS: Bill Boyd—A few aerial stunts and a lot of talk about their wives going to have babies, and they called it "Lucky Devils."—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

MELODY CRUISE: Helen Mack, Greta Nissen, Charles Ruggles, Phil Harris—RKO has made a good picture at last. "Melody Cruise" has only one drawback and that is Phil Harris. He may be a hot number leading a band, but that is where he should stay. They did not like him and said so. He has a Cheshire cat grin that is not so good and he did not register. A wet smack to be headlined. There is a splendid brand of comedy, and the ice ballet is spectacular, perhaps the most beautiful that has been brought to screen. Rhythm and swing, it was the high spot of the show. Why they dragged Harris into the cast except for his band name; he is not known in the mid-west or the east.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind.

MELODY CRUISE: Charles Ruggles, Phil Harris—Regardless of adverse reviews, this is a very good picture, with plenty of comedy, but not as much music as patrons expected. Better than average business on Sunday. Ruggles, as usual, steals the show. Give this picture your best playing time.—Warren L. Weber, Ellinwood Theatre, Ellinwood, Kansas. General patronage.

MEN OF AMERICA: Bill Boyd, Dorothy Wilson, Charles "Chic" Sale—You can't go wrong on booking this on Saturday or family night. Made for the small town. Clean, lots of action, and will be liked by all ages. Played August 12.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

PROFESSIONAL SWEETHEART: Ginger Rogers, Norman Foster—A better than average picture for RKO. Not big and not a special, but will please those who are not hard to please. Drew better than average business for us as it has star value in the cast, but they did not have much to make a picture out of. Running time, 73 minutes. Played August 8.—Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

age western. Running time, 60 minutes. Played August 11-12.—E. A. Reynolds, Strand Theatre, Princeton, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

SILVER CORD, THE: Irene Dunne, Joel McCrea—Run this on a night when you can put over a real high class picture, for they do not make them any higher class than this one or any better, but some of your patrons will not like it and some may walk out before it's over, but nevertheless you should play it and advertise it big. Running time, 75 minutes. Played August 15.—Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

SILVER CORD, THE: Irene Dunne, Joel McCrea—Another flop from RKO. It seems to me that they should learn some of these days to make pictures for the small town. Ran it on cheap admission nights and had plenty of squawks. No entertainment, nothing but the ravings of Laura Hope Crews as the mother. Lay off this one.—Warren L. Weber, Ellinwood Theatre, Ellinwood, Kansas. General patronage.

SPORT PARADE, THE: Joel McCrea, Marian Marsh—A good clean family program. Running time, 65 minutes.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

SWEEPINGS: Lionel Barrymore—Lowest week-end business this summer. Nearly 35% below average. Undoubtedly a good picture but too heavy and drags badly in spots. Not enough comedy relief. Had some good comments on it, however, from the more serious minded. Can't seem to get them in with my RKO's—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

TOMORROW AT SEVEN: Vivienne Osborne, Chester Morris—Good mystery comedy drama. Pleased week-end patrons. Drew well, due in some part to the fact that a lady of this town is first cousin to Miss Osborne. Played August 4-5.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

Universal

BIG CAGE, THE: Clyde Beatty, Anita Page—We heard one small boy remark on his way out, "That was a real show." We most heartily agree with him. Lots of comedy relief in this and no suggestive scenes. Many fine comments from both kids and adults. Certainly a show that every boy and girl will understand and enjoy to the utmost.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

COHENS AND KELLYS IN TROUBLE: George Sidney, Charlie Murray—A dandy comedy for any town. Drew above average in spite of extreme heat. House was in a roar throughout and many good comments. Small towns, don't pass this up!—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

DON'T BET ON LOVE: Lew Ayres, Ginger Rogers—A fine program picture that will please and draw if you advertise it a little extra. Plenty of comedy. Good for any night. Running time, 62 minutes. Played August 18.—Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

KISS BEFORE THE MIRROR, THE: Nancy Carroll, Paul Lukas—Rather heavy drama. Where they like court room argument it will go over. Nothing for the younger set to rave over. Running time, 68 minutes. Played August 9-10.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

KISS BEFORE THE MIRROR, THE: Frank Morgan, Nancy Carroll—Drama of the more serious type. Pleased Sunday crowd. Played August 6-7.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

KING OF JAZZ: Paul Whiteman—A most amazing photoplay, color is so wonderful that it could hardly be described, the bringing out of this picture again after four or five years certainly shows up the wide range recording and all this hooey about new style sound, listen to this and weep. This picture has the best recorded musical sound that I have ever presented in this theatre, you will find "King of Jazz" satisfactory in every way.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

MY PAL, THE KING: Tom Mix—A good western. Mix on a tour with a circus becomes involved with a gang attempting to do away with the boy king. Mix befriends him and scatters the hoodlums with the aid of his circus cowboys. Some rodeo shots in the film. Your youngsters will eat it up. Running time, 61 minutes. Played July 28-29.—E. A. Reynolds, Strand Theatre, Princeton, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

OUT ALL NIGHT: Zasu Pitts, Slim Summerville—An attempt by the producers to rush this team too fast. Some good comedy interwoven with some weaker moments. One brassy blat about white slavery which I eliminated and was not necessary at all in the picture. Picture seemed to please but this pair rates better story material and direction than this. Extra business. Running time, 67 minutes. Played August 13-14.—E. A. Reynolds, Strand Theatre, Princeton, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

OUT ALL NIGHT: Slim Summerville, Zasu Pitts—While it did not draw as well as their first picture, it was pretty good comedy drama and seemed to please a majority. Played August 13-14.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

CONTRIBUTORS TAKE ROUND TABLE AWARDS

To two able contributors to the "What the Picture Did for Me" department we herewith extend felicitations, calling the attention of the rest of our "membership" to these two exhibitors, both of whom came through in winning style in the recently concluded July exploitation contest conducted by the Round Table Club of Motion Picture Herald. The two are Roy W. Adams, of the Mason theatre, Mason, Mich., and Edith Fordyce, of the Princess theatre, at Selma, La. To Mr. Mason went one of the seven major prizes, for his campaign on Fox's "State Fair," while to Exhibitor Fordyce has gone an honorable mention award. The picture, we gather, did something for them.

all the way through a picture leaves me kinda dizzy. I'll bet he keeps a director on the jump. This story winds its way through the World War and has a few pointers for anyone. Running time, 85 minutes. Played July 30-31.—E. A. Reynolds, Strand Theatre, Princeton, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

RUSTLERS' ROUNDUP: Tom Mix—A good western. A good story and real rodeo action. Print and photography excellent. If your patrons appreciate good westerns filled with action and shot in the open and not an alley, this will please them. Running time, 57 minutes. Played August 18-19.—E. A. Reynolds, Strand Theatre, Princeton, Minn. Small town and country patronage.

RUSTLERS' ROUNDUP: Tom Mix—A lot of riding and boy, how he can fight. They can't even knock his hat off. Must use molasses on his hair. Can't give this one much but the chewers and spitters laugh at it and like it, so give 'em what they like, if they'll buy tickets. Had better than ordinary business. Played August 18-19.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

Warner

42ND STREET: Warner Baxter, Bebe Daniels, Ruby Keeler, Dick Powell—Played this rather late in the season, but the weather, though hot, did not affect us very much, doing rather good business. A type of picture you can go all out to build up and sell. It has what it takes to make a picture and is a life-saver in these warm vacation days. Played August 14-15.—Wm. A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

LIFE OF JIMMY DOLAN, THE: Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Loretta Young—A very nice little program picture that drew average business and pleases the men and boys, but is not so hot with the women. Running time, 75 minutes. Played August 6-7.—Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

MAYOR OF HELL, THE: James Cagney—Boys, don't miss this one. If "I'm A Fugitive" did business this one should do twice as much as it is twice as good a picture for a small town. I think it the best Cagney ever made and there are plenty here who agree with me on that. Book it for your best days and your longest run, and get behind it with all the advertising you can get, for you have a show when you play this one. Running time, 80 minutes. Played August 20-21.—Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

PARACHUTE JUMPER: Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Bette Davis—Not my idea of a very good picture but it went over, especially with the young folks. Plenty of action.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

PICTURE SNATCHER: James Cagney — Fast, breezy, action and dialogue. Cagney is his usual self; as usual carrying the whole show on his shoulders. It didn't mean much. Played July 30-31.—Walter H. E. Potamkin, Cedar Theatre (Lessy Amusement Co.), Philadelphia, Pa. General patronage.

PICTURE SNATCHER: James Cagney — Patrons said this was the best Cagney picture made. At any rate, it is a swell picture and should please everyone. Excellent attraction for Friday and Saturday booking. Plenty of action and comedy. Better than average business.—Warren L. Weber, Ellinwood Theatre, Ellinwood, Kansas. General patronage.

WORKING MAN, THE: Hats off to Mr. George Arliss, the most distinguished actor of all times. This without a doubt rates among his finest. They're all fine, these Arliss shows; it's a pleasure to exhibit them to a crowd. They came from all over to see him. More like it. Played August 26-27.—Walter H. E. Potamkin, Cedar Theatre (Lessy Amusement Co.), Philadelphia, Pa. General patronage.

WORKING MAN, THE: George Arliss—The first Arliss ever shown in my theatre that did average business. A very good picture that will please old and young. Arliss might be a box office bet if kept in pictures like this.—Warren L. Weber, Ellinwood Theatre, Ellinwood, Kansas. General patronage.

World Wide

DRUM TAPS: Ken Maynard—Good western with a troop of Boy Scouts taking part in the picture. Good for a tieup with them, but mine had all gone to a summer camp. Had the same old chase, past the same old hill and the horse stepped in the same old gopher hole.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

DYNAMITE RANCH: Ken Maynard—The last Ken Maynard we're going to run. Even the kids laughed at this. Take two aspirins after looking at it, if you have to. Running time, 60 minutes. Played August 29.—Walter H. E. Potamkin, Cedar Theatre (Lessy Amusement Co.), Philadelphia, Pa. General patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

CAT'S NIGHTMARE: Silly Symphony—What happens to cat that catches birds is very amusingly depicted in this unusually clever cartoon. Running time, one reel.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

Educational

SKIPPING ABOUT THE UNIVERSE: Hodge-Podge—Excellent travelogue.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

Fox

HAVANA HO!: Magic Carpet Series—Got this when the papers were full of Havana news. Had a few who came out to see what the country looked like and stayed to see the feature or maybe the stayed to see this.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

RICKSHA RHYTHM: Magic Carpet Series—Punk. Nothing but music score and it was raspy.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

TAKING THE CURE: Magic Carpet Series—Wonderful music, etc., make these Magic Carpets a welcome addition to any bill. Running time, 8 minutes.—Walter H. E. Potamkin, Cedar Theatre (Lessy Amusement Co.), Philadelphia, Pa. General patronage.

VENETIAN HOLIDAY: Magic Carpet Series—Some good shots of Venice and the boats. Good filler.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

MGM

ALLEZ OOP: Sport Champion—One of the best acrobatic tumbling and balancing acts that you will ever get to run. These boys are good and if no one comes to see it, I still say you'll get your money's worth.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln. Kansas. Small town patronage.

BIG DITCH OF PANAMA, THE: FitzPatrick Traveltalks—Some of the canal and might interest some.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

BONE CRUSHERS: Sport Champion—Good if your patrons like modern wrestling.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

BONE CRUSHERS: Sport Champion—Shows all the grunt and groan boys doing their stuff. Some real shots of wrestlers in action and a good line of chatter by Pete Smith.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

DAUGHTERS OF THE SEA: FitzPatrick Traveltalks—All about Sweden, Denmark and Norway. All right for a traveltalk but I've taken my audience so many places recently that they want to stay home and look at some cartoons.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

FORGOTTEN BABIES: Our Gang—Best recorded Gang comedy that we have had. We could actually hear them talk and there were a number of laughable incidents.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

HIS SILENT RACKET: Charlie Chase—Good comedy for any day you use two-reel comedies.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

HOT SPOT: Taxi Boys—My idea of a very poor short but my patrons seemed to enjoy it so I will have to report it O.K. Running time, two reels.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

INFLATION: Just another reel of film. You don't know any more about this after you have seen it than you did before. Most of these special reels make

"come up an' see me some time"

...come and see us produce a talking trailer from start to finish...

...follow us thru the plant from the time the material is gathered in the production department until the time it hits post-office or express office bound for your screen...

...watch the artists make air-brush and stencil stand up and beg ... watch the hard-working camera boys do their tricks ...

... then come into the projection-room and see yourself sold in spite of yourself.

★ and ask us to let you see the service department in action ... watch the cutters ... watch the bookers ... watch the billers ... checkers ... inspectors ... shippers ...

plenty of money for the producer.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

MOTORCYCLE MANIA: Sport Champion—Clever and entertaining. It shows the motorcycle riders trying to do some climbing, a stunt rider demonstrates his ability and some trick photography calls forth some laughs. — Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

NATURE IN THE WRONG: Charlie Chase—He thought that he was Tarzan. His antics made a few of the humorously inclined giggle a few times.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

SOILERS, THE: Zasu Pitts, Thelma Todd—Zasu Pitts and Thelma Todd give their usual very satisfactory performance. Zasu always goes over big here. Running time, two reels.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

TAXI BARONS: Taxi Boys—The only thing missing in these are the titles that tell you when to laugh. So bad that they're not making any more of them. —Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

Paramount

ALOHA OE: Royal Samoans—Phoey. That Hawaiian orchestra is punk. The cartoon work isn't much better. Running time, 7 minutes.—Walter H. E. Potamkin, Cedar Theatre (Lessy Amusement Co.), Philadelphia, Pa. General patronage.

BOILESK: Watson Sisters. Not as good as some screen songs. Will get by.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

HOLLYWOOD ON PARADE: No. 11—This is a very fine reel and should be played on your best night. —Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Amamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

HOLLYWOOD ON PARADE: The whole series is punk.—Walter H. E. Potamkin, Cedar Theatre (Lessy Amusement Co.), Philadelphia, Pa. General patronage.

JAZZ A LA CUBA: Don Aspiazu—An excellent band act. About six minutes but they liked it.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

MOONLIGHT FANTASY: Vincent Lopex—Believe it or not, this actually ran five whole minutes. What nerve to release it. Running time, 5 minutes.—Walter H. E. Potamkin, Cedar Theatre (Lessy Amusement Co.), Philadelphia, Pa. General patronage.

PHARMACIST, THE: W. C. Fields—I personally consider this fair entertainment. However, where W. C. Fields is liked it is sure to go over well. Only a few of my patrons like him; they thought it very good. A few laughs and the usual wisecracks that make Fields famous. Running time, 19 minutes. —J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

Pathe

PATHE NEWS: If there is any better news than this on the market we have not seen it.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

RKO

CENTURY OF PROGRESS: A remarkable scenic of the World's Fair. Good recording and photography. People came in droves to see it. Almost as good as a trip to the Fair. You can feature it big. It costs you little. Give it a showing. It's OK.—Ned Pedigo, DeLuxe Theatre, Garber, Okla. General patronage.

United Artists

FLOWERS AND TREES: Silly Symphony—Very clever, these colored Silly Symphonies, and how they eat them up. Have helped bring back some of the kids on Monday and Tuesday.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

JUST DOGS: Silly Symphony—Didn't think that this was any too good.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

WHOOPEE PARTY, THE: Mickey Mouse—Most of these Mickey Mouse cartoons are good and draw some extra business, kids mostly.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

Universal

DOWN MEMORY LANE: Radio Star Series with Texas Guinan—Good one-reel filler. One good song, balance showing silent pictures of Texas on the range as a cowgirl.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

KID GLOVE KISSES: Slim Summerville—Got a lot of laughs. The prize fight is a wow. Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

TERRIBLE TROUBADOR, THE: Pooch Cartoon —The best Pooch Cartoon we have had; however, have not run many of them.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

Warner Vitaphone

BOSKO IN DUTCH: Looney Tune—Just as good as any other cartoon except Mickey Mouse, Silly Symphonies, Scrappy, Betty Boop, or any other that we play. Running time, 7 minutes.—Walter H. E. Potamkin, Cedar Theatre (Lessy Amusement Co), Philadelphia, Pa. General patronage.

BOSKO IN DUTCH: Looney Tune—A very good cartoon.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

FIFI: Vivienne Segal—'Twas a pleasure, fellow members. This short deserves feature billing, especially when we ran it with Elmer, dear old Elmer. Running time, 19 minutes.—Walter H. E. Potamkin, Cedar Theatre (Lessy Amusement Co.), Philadelphia, Pa. General patronage.

HOW TO BREAK 90: Bobby Jones—Just finished the series and couldn't see where they did a bit of good. Priced too high and the golfers don't seem to be interested in them. If you can get the golfers to turn out, this series would probably be worth the money.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

LOVE THY NEIGHBOR: Pepper Pot—Excellent single reel comedy.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

NORTHERN EXPOSURE: Color Musical—Not up to their usual standard, but it'll get by.—Walter H. E. Potamkin, Cedar Theatre (Lessy Amusement Co.), Philadelphia, Pa. General patronage.

ONE STEP AHEAD OF MY SHADOW: Merry Melody—Just another cartoon and average.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

PIE A LA MODE: Broadway Brevity—Slapstick back again. This starts off with a bang and ends up a boom. Running time, 19 minutes.—Walter H. E. Potamkin, Cedar Theatre (Lessy Amusement Co.), Philadelphia, Pa. General patronage.

PIE A LA MODE: Color Musical—Starts off grand, but slapstick comedy gets the best of it, and phooey. Running time, 19 minutes.—Walter H. E. Potamkin, Cedar Theatre (Lessy Amusement Co.), Philadelphia, Pa. General patronage.

RED SHADOW, THE: Al Gray, Bernice Claire—A good two-reel short with some fine singing. Running time, two reels.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

SPEAKING OF OPERATIONS: Pick and Pat—A very good two-reel musical. Good comedy and music. —Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

SPEAKING OF OPERATIONS: Broadway Brevity —A very good musical short and the kind we want to see more of. Running time, two reels.—Lloyd Pearson, Menard Theatre, Petersburg, Ill. Small town patronage.

YOU CALL IT MADNESS: Richy Craig, Jr.—It is different, anyway. Two-reeler of the "Goofy" variety. Pleased most, but not worth getting excited about. No wonder if any of the movie mag-nuts realize how much we need some honest-to-God comedies that will make folks really laugh. Running time, two reels.—Wm. Sayre, Delmar Theatre, Morrill, Neb. Small town and rural patronage.

SEA DEVILS: Pepper Pot Series—Punk narration by Frank McHugh, but the good clips put this over. Running time, 9 minutes.—Walter H. E. Potamkin, Cedar Theatre (Lessy Amusement Co.), Philadelphia, Pa. General patronage.

SPORT THRILLS: No. 6—Moose hunting and English shinny game. Our audience did not care for it.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

THREE'S A CROWD: Merry Melody—The best cartoon from Warner so far. Evidently copied from Silly Symphony, "Old King Cole," as the books open up and characters come out.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

WAY OF ALL FRESHMEN: Hal LeRoy, Mitzi Mayfair—Oh me, oh my, how they can dance. A perfect combination makes a perfect show, and the perfect combination who made the perfect short played to a perfect show and the perfect combination who made the perfect short to a perfect show, to perfect business. Running time, 19 minutes.—Walter H. E. Potamkin, Cedar Theatre (Lessy Amusement Co.), Philadelphia, Pa. General patronage.

Serials

Mascot

THREE MUSKETEERS, THE: John Wayne—We're on our sixth chapter now and the kids are just as interested now as they were on the first chapter. We use this only on Saturday matinee, and it proves a helpful hand. Running time, 16 minutes per chapter. —Walter H. E. Potamkin, Cedar Theatre (Lessy Amusement Co.), Philadelphia, Pa. General patronage.

Universal

CLANCY OF THE MOUNTED: Tom Tyler—Have just finished this serial which I consider one of the best ever produced. Sound, photography and plot all very good. Business built up each week, except last, when a bad electrical storm kept people at home.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

WABASH AVENUE

CHICAGO

Publication of the industry code gave the row its biggest thrill last week. Advance copies of Motion Picture Daily brought the details to Wabash Avenue even before some of those who sat in on the code conferences had received copies themselves. Neither Jack Miller nor Aaron Saperstein had received copies and, along with several exchange managers, were anxious to read the detailed clauses as set up by producers-distributors and exhibitors for the Washington hearing September 12.

B. N. Judell, Inc., announces a cash prize contest among exhibitors for the best exploitation efforts on the serial "Fighting With Kit Carson." The prizes will be $10, $5 and third and fourth prizes of $2.50. This is the latest Mascot serial featuring Johnny Mack Brown, Betsy King Rose, Noah Beery, Sr., and Noah Beery, Jr. Exploitation accomplishments may be either in picture or letter form. Hazel Flynn of the Chicago American, Lou Abramson of Allied Theatres of Illinois and this correspondent are to be judges. Entries close October 15, with the judges waiting to be shown that showmanship is not a lost art in Illinois.

T. R. Earl has been named manager of the New Granada theatre at South Bend, Ind. This house, which has been closed for some time, is being reopened with new equipment and up-to-date decorations by the Seville Theatre Corporation.

Hay fever victims along the row are planning a mutual consolation club. Membership so far includes Charles Kemp, Adolph Plotchman, Harry Phillips and George Lang. Qualifying sneezes will be held for others wishing to join this society.

Henri Ellman is all set to move from the third to the fourth floor at 831 S. Wabash avenue. Everything has been fixed up in de luxe style at the new quarters.

George Batchellor and Murray Cohn of Chesterfield Pictures were visitors along the row on their way from the Coast to New York.

Ted Myers of Universal, who has been confined to a hospital for the past five weeks, is on the road to recovery. He expects to be up and about in another three weeks.

Local exhibitors signed up for the NRA last week and there was much discussion as to easels, banners and special display spaces in theatre lobbies for the Blue Eagle flag.

Ed Kuykendall, president of the MPTOA, with his wife and daughter, stopped off in Chicago last week to take in the World's Fair after the strenuous code sessions in the East.

HOLQUIST

Peggy Joyce Files Claim For Six Weeks' Salary

Peggy Hopkins Joyce last week filed a claim with the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences for six weeks salary for her work in "Broadway Thru a Keyhole," a 20th Century production. Miss Joyce was paid for two days' work, it was stated, and then was succeeded by Lilyan Tashman. Miss Tashman worked only one day before illness sent her to the hospital. Blossom Seeley next took the part. Miss Seeley was recently placed under a seven-year contract by Darryl Zanuck. Mr. Zanuck answered Miss Joyce's claim with the charge that she was unsuitable for the part.

RKO Concludes Pooling Deals in Albany, Newark

RKO, in a revival of theatre pooling, in which it was at one time prominently engaged, has entered into partnership deals in Albany and Newark, N. J. A 50-50 arrangement has been completed with Chris Buckley, operating the Haramus Bleecker Hall and the Leland in Albany. RKO will handle film buys, while Mr. Buckley will operate not only his own two but two RKO houses as well.

The second agreement covers the Terminal in Newark, a former Fox house now operated by the Skouras Brothers. The arrangement provides that the Skourases continue operation of their house and RKO of its Proctor. The cost, however, will be borne jointly and the profits divided.

Standard Is Photophone Licensee

The Standard Sound Recording Corporation, headed by Jack Miner, with studios at 220 East 38th street, New York, has become a Photophone recording licensee. Under the terms of a new, limited license agreement, a complete Photophone High Fidelity recording system, mounted on a mobile truck, becomes available to the licensee for its recording requirements for a stipulated period during the year.

14 Youngsters Get Tests For Paramount's "Alice"

Fourteen young girls, ranging in age from eight to 14, are marching out under Klieg lights and before motion picture cameras this week in screen tests which will decide who, out of 5,000 applicants, will play the role of "Alice" in the Paramount production of "Alice in Wonderland."

The tests for these 14 children started Friday, and, as soon as they are completed, will be rushed to the Coast for immediate selection of the girl who will play the role. Production will start as soon as Alice has been selected.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

ATT.: HON. SOL A. ROSENBLATT

The exhibition code submitted by Co-ordinator Charles L. O'Reilly sets 52-hours work a week for all theatre employees, excepting, among others, employees in a managerial capacity. And while the responsibilities and duties of the manager justly demand more than this number of hours a week, surely he should not be forced to labor 75 to 85 hours, as now prevails in too many instances.

The following situations, manifestly unfair, are called to your attention:

The case of a manager who received a raise of $3.50 to a weekly wage of $36 to remove him from the jurisdiction of the blanket code and who continues to work long hours, seven days a week.

The case of a manager, employed by a prominent mid-West circuit, who states that managers working for this company are compelled to labor from 75 to 80 hours a week and now must assume additional duties of other theatre employees protected by the NRA.

Similar conditions undoubtedly exist in every section of the country, but fear keeps many tongues silent that otherwise would speak. The manager is, by far, too important in theatre operation to be ignored. But unorganized, unprotected, his lot will not be improved unless the protecting arm of the NRA is raised in his defense.

The shoulder straps of the executive title "manager" may all too often be used to evade rather than comply with the NRA idea, unless safeguards can be set up. An exhibition code that does not provide relief for this overworked class, is incomplete.

A DESERVED BOW

In last week's editorial page, we suggested that circuit and other operators employ experienced but jobless showmen to serve as relief managers, thus allowing the regular incumbent a day off in peace and without worry. Permanent employment could thus be given, one man to each six houses to spend one day in each theatre; and where there are less than six theatres under one operation, arrangements could be made accordingly.

With pleasure we now discover that this idea has been, and still is, a long established practice with the Consolidated Amusement Enterprises of New York, and Laurence F. Bolognino, vice-president, informs us he employs extra managers for this purpose alone, that the plan has been in operation for a long time, and that it works to the entire satisfaction of everyone concerned.

For which consideration and clear thinking, this executive is to be commended; and upon other exhibitors at all concerned with their managers' welfare, we urge the immediate adoption of this plan.

TOP THIS ONE

For sheer ingenuity and fast thinking, we doff the old felt to Manager I. L. Shields, Royal Theatre, Columbus, Ga., who persuaded his school authorities to hold high school graduation exercises on the stage of the theatre between showings of his picture, charged regular admission prices to the event, and put on a bang-up campaign to capacity attendance.

Showmen who sit up nights trying to dope out new box office angles are requested to read a full account of this excellently conceived and flawlessly executed "honey" on page 61 of this issue. Besides building up a valuable good will, Shields neatly turned what would have been tough opposition to his own account, an account that he is keeping in the "black" by frequent applications of keen showmanship.

OFF THE RECORD STUFF

To the Manager Who Sent the Sexy Herald on That Picture Taken from a Smart Hit Comedy

It's a nice piece of work, brother, so far as the layout and makeup are concerned, and the suggestive copy perhaps brought in some extra admissions. But, after all, the success of the story was due to the sparkling dialogue, the comedy situations in which the sex theme was background and not slapped on with a trowel as your copy indicates.

Yes, we agree that many of the original lines were muffed by many patrons to whom light comedy and smartness are Sanskrit. But there are many more, rather fed up with such adjectives as "shocking," "daring," "scandalous," and we doubt the lasting wisdom of placing in the mouths of the stars, as you have, such phrases as "Why should I be virtuous?" or "Get your man at any cost."

We question the soundness of such advertising. You are not only fanning the spark of rebellion against oversexing pictures, but are also providing ammunition for the bluenoses relentlessly on the prowl for such targets.

SHOWMEN'S LOBBY LAFFS!

What patron hasn't experienced this from the "dear" kiddies?

NEWMAN, KANSAS CITY, ACCORDED "DIGGERS" TREMENDOUS CAMPAIGN

George Baker, resourceful and energetic manager of the Newman, Kansas City, proved that terrific heat means nothing in the face of go-getting campaign methods. Baker's whirlwind activities on "Gold Diggers" proved this conclusively, when 100 in the shade would have been considered a relatively cool day.

The posting of 75 stands in addition to the sniping and distribution of a myriad of lesser units, a doubled newspaper advertising appropriation and intensive plugging at theatre, over radio stations and by mail, was merely the foundation for a series of follow-up exploitation features, advance and current, in the interests of the engagement at the Newman.

Attractive Front

Among several unusual stunts employed was the placing on street of a group of attractive girls, scantily clad and bearing golden picks in a bannered open car. This ballyhoo represented the modern or 1933 Gold Diggers, while several yards ahead a typical prospector mounted on a burro showed what the Gold Digger of 1849 was like.

To get the music angle across in a big way, three cute little damsels were sent out to entertain the shopping throngs with a portable phonograph on which they played the special musical exploitation record gotten out on the picture. Alluringly attired in blue and gold "shorts," one girl carried a campstool, one the phonograph and the third a golden basket of golden pass-out cards. At each important corner they would set up the outfit, play the record and distribute the cards. This stunt was employed for four days prior to opening.

The photo we are showing gives you an idea of the attractive front he turned out for the picture.

FORD STREET BALLY STUNT PUT OVER BY SMITH CLICKS BIG

A flivver parade may not have anything to do with "When Ladies Meet," but Manager E. C. Smith, of the Carolina Theatre, Chapel Hill (N. C.), says it has a lot to do with stopping crowds to read the banners attached to the cars in the procession, and that point is important in selling.

Smith dug up the first Ford sold in Chapel Hill with a string of the latest models, formed quite a motorcade, each of the vehicles of course plugging the picture. Going through the town, the driver of the old timer would stop, get out and crank the bus, taking enough time so that a crowd would gather.

"E. C." managed to tack a theatre banner inside the entrance of the State Park, which is said is a "first," this having never been allowed before. Tieups with a refrigerator dealer, for special discounts on opening day, and similar deals with other merchants hooked in with a page of co-op ads, which was obtained in the face of the newspaper's saying it could not be done.

RAILROAD DONATES FARE AND SLEEPERS IN "LUCKY" CONTEST

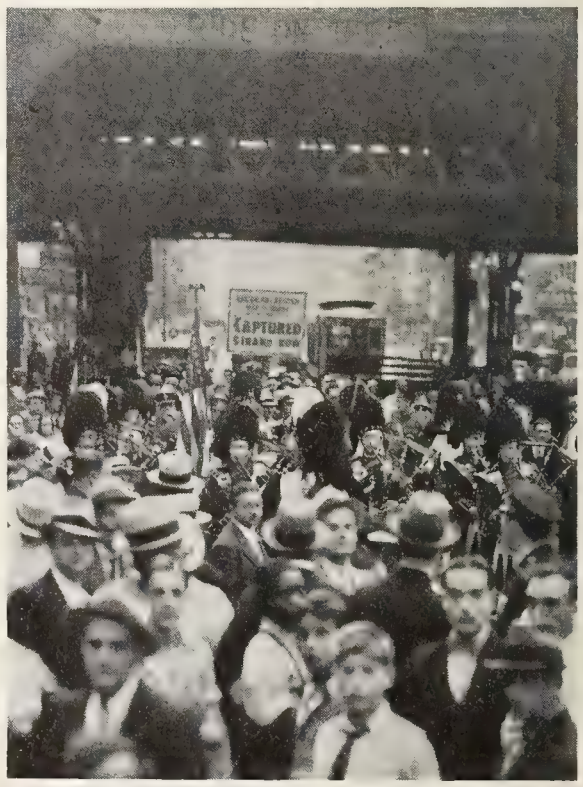
Recognizing the inroads made by bus and air competition, the railroads are now listening to theatre tieups. We told you about Sedge Coppock's hook in which the B. & O., and Manager S. B. Tucker, of the Byrd Theatre, Richmond (Va.) now sends us an account of his cooperation with the Chesapeake and Ohio, in which through a "lucky number" contest, the railmen gave two round trips, including lower berths, to Chicago, in conjunction with the showing of "The Century of Progress."

The C. & O. furnished 25,000 numbered tickets for a week's distribution at the theatre, issued an employee bulletin requesting attendance to see the picture, gave the entire window in their downtown ticket office to plug the picture and tell about the stunt and took large display ads to announce the contest. The weekly publication of the railroad's clerks' association came in with an essay contest on the picture for which the theatre supplied passes as prizes.

All that was required of Tucker was inclusion of the contest in his regular advertising, newspaper, poster screen and lobby, and plugs were also given over the radio. "S. B." says that he had a marvelous week, as people came from miles away to get in on the prizes, and that this competition held up the show in the face of a big circus opposition.

"The Century of Progress" is an educational picture put out by RKO-Pathe, obviously to encourage railroad travel to the World's Fair, and where the roads will go for like prizes, a similar tieup may be profitable.

STREET PARADE



Kilties and bagpipes make an irresistible combination, as the Warner exploiteers discovered with their crowd stopping street parade to the opening of "Captured" at the New York Strand. American Legion, British War Veterans, and the Yonkers Kilty Band headed the procession that tuned its way through Times Square to the theatre.

"WHEN IS AN ADULT—?"

World's Fair Prize Winner Criticizes Adult Admission Prices for Twelve-Year-Olds

by S. S. (SID.) HOLLAND

Elkhart Amusement Co., Elkhart, Ind.

I hope that Gracie Allen does not catch the title of this little story before it reaches the columns of the HERALD—She's bound to know the answer and my effort will have been in vain. I repeat—"When is an adult not an adult?"

During the past three years we, in the picture business, have suffered what has been termed a general depression—at least we have laid our ills at that doorstep. A few courageous torch bearers have admitted that their troubles could be traced to extravagance, greed and an over abundance of relatives. Let us leave all of the theories for the universities and face the facts. We are now on our way up, and it seems to me to be the time for each of us to air our little pet peeves with the thought that said airing of many ideas might be for the general good of the industry and prevent a recurrence of the tragic mistakes of the past, mistakes that made such serious inroads at the box office and weakened good will.

Child Patronage

It must be universally agreed, and there can be no contradiction, that the child patronage of today is the adult patronage of tomorrow. Are we encouraging that patronage? We are not! When the boy and girl reach the age of twelve years we slap a sign on their backs—"You are now an adult and must pay 25-40 or 60 cents (as the case may be). How many millions of dollars are lost each year by the industry through this practice I have not endeavored to calculate, nor am I much concerned with the present from that angle. It is the future that presents a serious aspect. Why are we blasting and killing the movie habit of the younger generation instead of building these potential adult fans? Are we doing our part in this necessary building?

Movie Habit

The average youth from 12 to 16 years of age today, attends the grade or high school and is able to do so only because someone, usually dad or mother, is making some sacrifice so that Jack or Helen can get some background before facing the ogre sometimes referred to as the "business world." Under these circumstances is it plausible to expect Jack or Helen to "find" 25-40 or 60 cents to attend our movie palaces twice or even once a week? When I say once or twice a week I'm referring to the life of our business, the movie habit. It is unreasonable to expect this business. And what is more—we are not getting it, and will not get it until prices are revised downward within their financial reach.

Lower Adult Age

In isolated spots we find showmen with some vision who arrange Student Night parties and other synthetic price tricks for this group of forgotten youth. And while this alleviates the situation to some extent in the particular locality, it is not the solution to the problem. I, personally, vote for an adult admission to become effective at age sixteen or thereabouts, when the youngster has, in most cases completed his schooling and is in a position to help himself to some extent.

How many of you who read this article agree with me! Agree that you cannot create a habit by discouraging it. If you, too, feel the need for a universal change in the child-adult price set up, start a campaign which might penetrate the ears of the industry "higher ups" and possibly adjust what is probably one of the greatest weaknesses of the picture business today.

MGR. ANDY SASO PUTS ON A ROLLER SKATING RACE IN PORTLAND STS.

A roller skating race in a street at 11 in the morning was the unusual showmanship stunt pulled in Portland, Ore., to open "Gold Diggers" by Andrew Saso, manager of the Music Box, Portland, Ore. Mr. Hamrick, owner, to the left, took part in the ceremonies as it was also the occasion of his opening the Music Box.

Police went to the Warners exchange and escorted the film from the vaults to the waiting automobile. Several other cars followed the police escort downtown, the latter's sirens blowing, and all traffic halting as the sirens approached them.

Hi, there, Andy!

Girls were paid $1 for entering and prizes of $10, $5 and $2.50 were given the first three racers to come in. Another stunt was sending up of scores of toy balloons, with passes attached. Some were recovered 105 and 120 miles away, which resulted in following publicity in the newspapers.

Keep us posted on your doings, Andy; we're always interested in hearing from you, and we'll do the rest. Here's wishing you luck in the new house.

AUTHOR OF "COLLEGE HUMOR" STORY HELPS KINSKY SELL SHOW

Sioux City (Iowa), where Joe Kinsky tells 'em at the Capitol Theatre is only a short distance from the home town of the author of the story from which "College

Kinsky's Street Bally

Humor" was made, so Joe seized upon this to tie in with the local paper there for some extra advertising on his showing and a lot of publicity along the "local boy makes good" angle.

Kinsky also put on the collegiate flivver parade, both his leading papers going for it with big daily breaks including shot of the actual parade. A slick street bally was a college fraternity stunt in which three boys worked the business section, dressed as though they were taking part in a fraternity initiation.

One lad carried a fish pole and pail, stopping at prominent corners to fish out of the pail, the second wore a bathing suit and a barrel, and the third was clad in a burlap costume, copied from the one worn by Jack Oakie in the picture. Ushers wore skull caps and sweaters a week in advance which were promoted for passes, with signs on the sweaters, front and back.

Special program was distributed house to house, and a classified tieup with one of his papers also netted Joe plenty, as did stories and cuts in 13 nearby rural papers, secured in exchange for passes. Free life saver candy hand outs with the sweets in printed bags was another click as was the front, upon which special shadow boxes were built over the letter spaces giving the marquee a flash that could be seen for blocks.

These highlights were also hooked in with "Zoo in Budapest" which Joe ran at the same time, the effectiveness of this bang up campaign resulting in a holdover for the program.

BALLOON RACE ACE STUNT FOR CRAITE'S "STATE FAIR" DATE

On a repeat showing of "State Fair," Manager I. R. Craite, Fort Theatre, Fort Atkinson (Wisc.), put over a campaign comparable with his exploitation behind the first run. Outstanding was a balloon race, the night of the opening, in which each patron between 6:30 and 7 o'clock was given a balloon with card attached upon which both sender's and finder's name was to be written.

The gas bags were released at one time, and a prize awarded for the one traveling the greatest distance, in addition to passes to those returning the tags on captured balloons. Other gags were a parade of boys carrying window cards, post cards to all rural boxes, heralds distributed house to house besides front page newspaper stories and bigger than ordinary ads.

It isn't very often we hear of a strong campaign on a repeat booking, and in this case "I. J." had enough confidence in the strength of his attraction to get behind it, the returns evidently proving that he was shooting down the right alley.

RUDY KUEHN CRACKS BAYONNE WIDE OPEN WITH FASHION SHOW

Round Tablers are in the habit of overcoming local "can't be done" objections to contemplated stunts, and Rudy Kuehn, skipper of the De Witt, Bayonne (N. J.) proves this by his effective fashion show that not only got him a fat gross, but cracked his hardboiled local paper for plenty of front page stories and pictures.

The editor tried to impress upon Rudy that although efforts had been made in that direction, a successful fashion show had never been staged locally, so the hard to convince Kuehn went right out and tied up his Junior League to furnish the models, got a flock of merchants to supply the clothes and to hook into a two page co-op ad spread advertising the show.

A local dancing school was only too anxious to supply extra talent and all the scenery necessary, the acts going on between fashion flashes, and a nearby dealer was promoted for bannered cars for the use of members of the cast. All costs were borne by the participating merchants, the only extra expense to the theatre being a small contribution to the League's charity fund.

Rudy keeps his theatre in the public eye, as his "in" with his papers brings almost daily comment on some feature of his show, back stage and up front. A newsreel shot of the local police broadcasting on the first two way radio transmission from headquarters to police car and back gave Kuehn the opportunity to run a special show for the coppers, followed by a personal appearance a few nights later by the Commissioner himself who told the folks all about it from the stage.

We don't hear from Rudy very often, but when we do, his stuff is alway high scoring and strong in box office effectiveness.

Eames' "Sound" Ad

Realizing the importance of the installation of a "wide range" sound system, J. B. Eames, of the Premier Theatre, Littleton, N. H., climaxed his publicity campaign with a full-page sock in which he sold the merits of the new apparatus and the pictures that were dated in the two weeks following.

A "SILLY" WINDOW ON FIFTH AVENUE

One of the largest toy stores in America, on Fifth Avenue, New York, dedicated an entire window to toys and books connected with the characters that appear in Walt Disney's new Silly Symphony, "Old King Cole." A scroll telling the whole story of the film and the parts the different fairy tale characters play in it is pictured in one corner of the window. Bill Depperman, of Monroe Greenthal's exploitation staff, made the tieup for the Radio City Music Hall date.

ED HART LICKS HOT WEATHER WITH BOX OFFICE MONEY GAGS

Believing in the old adage that a good offense is the best defense, Ed Hart, fast moving city manager, Walter Reade theatres, Plainfield, N. J., is putting the slug on the high temperature days.

On "Melody Cruise" Ed worked a most popular girl voting contest for a free sea trip, this put on for four days in advance, securing a series of nice newspaper stories. A local Legion Post sponsored Ed's showing of "The Big Drive," and his paper is still kicking in with those swell front-page boxes on a classified tieup.

Get yourself a look below at Hart's "submarine" float on "Hell Below," which was entered in the annual Plainfield Day Parade, an event that brings many visitors to town. Ed dug up a bugler, some stooge sailors, borrowed the truck and the costumes, and advertised his two other shows at the same time, all at the cost of a comparatively few dollars. Which is how Ed usually registers.

PRETZELETES RAIN ON LOUISVILLE IN BIG TIME CAMPAIGN

Thousands of pretzeletes and a host of pretty gals to distribute them from a street float and snappy new model cars greeted Louisville (Ky.) in Flynn Stubblefield's campaign on "Moonlight and Pretzels" at the Strand Theatre there.

The float was a truck with calliope attachment, and while two costumed girls displayed a giant cutout pretzel, others distributed the pretzeletes. An effective display to judge from the shot below, the stunt being put on three days in advance.

Eleven orchestras plugged the song hits in advance and during the run, at hotels, dance halls and on the radio. A tieup with a new model roadster resulted in a bannered carful of girls riding through the city holding a giant cutout pretzel. Music stores gave windows to the song hits and also plugged the picture with big displays.

Posting included extra three and six sheets, insert cards, six sheet cutouts, pictorial window cards and 22 x 28's in cafe and restaurant windows, and six oil paintings of musical scenes in the picture were planted in the lobby and in music store windows.

Flynn hopes that the campaign will be as helpful to other members as it was to his box office. We are sure it will.

ENTERPRISING MANAGER TAKES ADVANTAGE OF KINZLER'S ACE GAG

Merrill F. Hanna, manager of the Detroit Hollywood Theatre, read the details in the Managers' Round Table Club of World's Fair stunt worked by Morris Kinzler at the New York Roxy, saw its possibilities and wrote Kinzler. Kinzler replied with four typewritten sheets of explanation. Hanna then set about adapting the plan. He wrote to a score of nationally known manufacturers requesting co-operation. From these firms came offers of replica exhibits—soap statuary from Procter and Gamble, replica of the G. M. World's Fair Building from General Motors, industrial pieces from others. Hanna prepared three-sheets, window cards and newspaper ads announcing World's Fair Week at the Hollywood Theatre. Each night one trip, all expenses paid, to the World's Fair was awarded. The week consisted of seven "festival nights." Opening night was United States Festival night, sponsored by the American Legion Roosevelt Post No. 131; Monday night was Hungarian night, sponsored by the Hungarian Daily News; Tuesday night, Irish night, sponsored by the Knights of Equity; Wednesday night, German night, sponsored by the Abend Post, and so on through the week. Closing night was known as International Festival Night. Special stage and screen entertainment offered in addition to the regular bill on each night for the particular group to which the night is dedicated.

Newspapers—metropolitan, foreign language and neighborhood—co-operated with Hanna. Much of the material used in this connection he obtained from the publicity department of the Century of Progress. Half the expense of the free trips to Chicago, a great feature of the stunt, were paid by the Wabash railroad.

YOUNG HAS TRIPLE FEATURE TO START HIS NEWEST SERIAL

Down in Lynchburg, Va., they inaugurate the new serials in premier fashion, and Leo Young, the skipper of the Isis, gave his kid customers plenty of entertainment with the opening installment of "Phantom of the Air." Leo had another serial running, and also "Zoo in Budapest," so his young customers had no squawk.

Kid Patronage!

In addition to filling up the kids with plenty of free salted peanuts, Young gave the more serious minds a chance to enter an aeroplane modelling contest and you can get an idea of the interest aroused by the photo above of some of the entrants reading the details.

First prize was an air trip that Leo promoted at his local air port, and other prizes were theatre tickets, the winners being announced from the stage. Young knows his serials, and proceeds to put them over in bang-up fashion when he goes after those necessary dimes.

SHIELDS HOLDS HIGH SCHOOL GRADUATION ON THEATRE STAGE

Persuading the principal of one of his local schools the theatre was much cooler and more spacious than the school auditorium, and therefore a better place to hold graduation exercises, was the accomplishment of L. L. Shields, manager of the Royal Theatre, Columbus (Ga.).

Permission secured from the Superintendent of Schools and the local Board of Education, the exercises were held on the stage in between showings of "One Way Passage," and only regular admissions were charged, resulting in a tremendous attendance.

The idea was put over in the most approved exploitation fashion, with plenty of radio broadcasts, front page stories, advance lobby and screen plugs, street bally and word of mouth advertising. The theatre secured this feature without any extra expense outside of the additional advertising, and turned what would have been formidable opposition into a satisfactory profit.

That's how Shields works to get results, and another example of his fast stepping is shown wherein he put on a script broadcast in connection with "Pick Up," planting it in a prominent downtown store window instead of at the studio.

Swell stuff, indeed, and although Columbus discovered America, it looks as though Shields discovered Columbus, Georgia. Let's hear from you soon again.

Deciding that a "Mae West" in the flesh(?) would help to back up that star's endorsement of "The Girl in 419," Louie Charninsky, the box office rejuvenator of the Capitol, Dallas (Texas), used the above West double for a street bally that tied up traffic—and we can believe that. Notice the "rooms" on both sides of the lobby, and Louie, himself, looking over the layout. He's a great "front" guy.

MANAGER C. W. WADE'S BIRTHDAY CARD STUNT A GOOD-WILL BUILDER

C. W. Wade, hustling manager of the Wadesonian Theatre, Clanton, Ala., has recently worked a birthday card and pass stunt at his house which he says is the finest advertising he has ever done. He placed a large box near the ticket window on which he printed a request that each person entering put name, address, and date of birth on a card arranged for that purpose and deposit in the box. He also carried this request in all county newspapers. The result was that he soon began getting a large list of birthdays and to each person he mailed a pass to the next picture shown at his theatre.

ACES, BARRETT!

RKO Radio's press book ads on "Morning Glory" should have plenty to do with the successful retailing of this picture. They make a grand flash, selling sock high up class and drama with attention grabbing pictorial art and punch copy.

Various treatments and layouts are presented, and whether you go for the halftones, line ads, black-on-white or reverses, these displays certainly sell. They'll steal many an amusement page, and to S. Barrett McCormick, responsible for their creation, a deep bow for his intelligent, showmanly craftsmanship.

SEDGE COPPOCK'S ACTIVITIES

Fast Thinking, Well Grounded Showman Has Won Island Wide Following for His Theatre

Too infrequently to suit the members, Sedge Coppock, ace showman manager of the Paramount, Staten Island (N. Y.) sends in a report on his doings which are many and varied, but have one point in common—their effectiveness in box office strength.

The Round Table is pleased, therefore, to present herewith, an outline, more or less, on some of the ways and means employed by this hustler to keep his theatre continually in the ear and eye of the residents of that fair Island. These profitable ideas are set forth for the consideration of the membership.

Radio

The theatre musical director arranges regular programs for one station, and a singing usher also gives weekly broadcasts over the same station, in which the theatre and current show are given frequent mention. Newspaper columnist conducts a movie gossip hour devoting most of his time to the Paramount. Theatre organists play three times weekly over a nationwide hookup.

House

Organ solo arranged with production idea to plug coming attraction, in this case, "Midnight Club," trailers are presented in special Brenkert effect, with teaser trailers spliced to all short subjects. Each night, Sedge gives news flash over house P. A. system, reading last minute press bulletins through courtesy of one of his papers. In connection with his showing on "Gambling Ship," Coppock had an exhibit of ship models in the mezzanine promenade.

Institutional

Railroad reduced fare tieup (previously detailed in Round Table), house organists appearing before lunch clubs, playing two pianos. Coppock spoke at Kiwanis on Paramount editorial board manner of planning year's product, and also appeared before quarterly meeting of Better Films council. Speaking program also arranged for United Parents Association, of which Sedge is honorary member.

Saturday morning Booster children's club, with membership of 2000, includes special stage show by child members. Jig saw puzzles to hospital, netting newspaper break. Department store tieup, in which store distributes 80,000 lucky number coupons for many expensive prizes. In return, theatre runs lobby poster, and gives 50 passes for children; good when accompanied by adults, who of course pay.

Coppock is one of the directors of the local little theatre, which insures free talent for one act plays presented several times a year at Paramount in lieu of stage show.

As stated, the above are selected from the activities of a few weeks, so you can well imagine what Sedge turns in over a year. Though only at the Paramount for a few years, this member has firmly established it as one of the leading attractions of Staten Island.

His newspaper relations are unexcelled, as some mention of the theatre is made almost daily in the news columns. And when Sedge vacationed in the West Indies, he air mailed a daily letter of his travels to the papers, which was run under a special head.

Coppock is 27, has travelled over a large part of the world, and "show businessed" from San Antonio (Tex.) to Rochester (N. Y.). He represents a high level of theatre management in company with many other Round Tablers, and we know the membership joins us in requesting more frequent reports of his campaigns, picture and institutional.

Michigan Avenue, Detroit (Mich.) is unacquainted with the red ink newspaper streamer, so John Pival who stirs up all the commotion for the Senate Theatre there gave the folks a shot of it on his "Diplomaniacs" campaign by imprinting the front page of his neighborhood paper, and having the newsboys deliver them a la regular edition, as you can observe below.

To further attract attention, John had two boys indulge in a fake fight and when a sufficient crowd gathered, they separated and unwound a large banner carrying the title and theatre. A parade of bannered cars that Pival promoted from a local dealer followed the fighters all over and encouraged the "scrappers" by honking horns and other noise making crowd-stopping devices.

Printed grocery bags were sold to retailers at half price, and lettered arrows, pointing to the theatre, were tacked to poles and sign boards. The color scheme on all printed matter, posters and front decorations was black lettering against a yellow background thus identifying the campaign.

Certainly sounds as though John stirred up plenty of excitement, well reflected by the gross he piled up on this attraction. And that he sold the grocery bags to his store keepers instead of donating them indicates that his local merchants are well trained on the possibilities of Pival's co-op stunts. Pretty good work, John, and let's hear from you more often.

MAYBE IT'S LEO

Manager Charley Pincus, Warner's Western, Hollywood, Cal., invited Col. Roscoe Turner, famous aerial ace, to bring his pet to the Coast premiere of Universal's "Big Cage." But Joe Weil forgot to say whether the cashier was in the box when the lion asked for a ticket.

SWANKE CHECKS IN WITH ACE CAMPAIGN ON "HOLD YOUR MAN"

After a long silence, we have the pleasure of hearing again from Arthur Swanke, now manager of the Saenger, Hope (Ark.), who was well represented in these pages from his former posts, Anderson (S. C.) and El Paso (Tex.).

Arthur sends along some good stuff on "Hold Your Man," with which he snared book store and department store windows for big tieups. Downtown street corners were painted—"Hold your man at the Saenger while seeing 'Hold Your Man,'" and the windows of ten empty stores were painted with same copy. Drug stores and beauty shops came in on a "no cost" herald distribution idea, and a newspaper co-op page, in which he sold all the ads and wrote all the copy, also clicked.

On "Diplomaniacs," Swanke used the blotter gag, with "blot away your troubles" copy, and got his leading laundry to insert circulars in all packages, advising customers not to worry over loose buttons occasioned by laughter at the picture, as the laundry gave free sewing service.

Interesting reading, Arthur, and don't wait as long to send in your next batch of box office ideas.

LIVING GIRLS!

Bert Henson, that aggressive showman up at the Palace Theatre in Cleveland, had traffic stopped when he got eight bathing beauties to toss pretzels from the marquee of the theatre when they played "Moonlight and Pretzels." Bert went still further in that he promoted the "biscuits" from a local dealer and enclosed them in envelopes which carried an ad for the picture. Just a typical Henson stunt. How've you been, Bert?

has recently purchased the Rivoli Theatre in Baltimore and plans to reopen the house after it has been completely redecorated.

EDWARD J. FAHEY
formerly manager of the Strand in Woburn, has been made manager of three theatres in Nashua, N. H., for Shea.

E. B. CARRINGTON has been named manager of Hamrick's Oriental Theatre in Portland, Oregon.

D. J. SMITH
is managing the reopened Royal Theatre in Carroll, Ia. The house has been closed for several years.

MONROE GREENTHAL
United Artists home office dynamo, is spending some time in Philly, where he is working on the opening of the Aldine Theatre, home of U. A. pictures.

WALTER B. SHUTTEE
formerly manager of the Paramount Theatre, Denver, has been named manager of the Denver Theatre, succeeding Jerry Zigmond, resigned. Ulysses S. James has been named manager of the Paramount to fill the vacancy left by Shuttee.

W. H. HOBBY
has taken over the managerial reins of the Premier Theatre in Sylvania, Ga. New sound equipment has been installed.

CHARLES NESMITH
has reopened the Tyron Theatre, Tyron, N. C. The house has been dark the past six weeks.

BILL MORAN AND PHIL ISLEY have opened the Whiteway Theatre in Picher, Okla. This pair of showmen are rapidly acquiring many theatres in this territory from time to time.

JACK ROTH
erstwhile Publix manager at Indianapolis, has been named manager of Chatfield's Palace, Akron, Ohio.

GEORGE REISTER
formerly a Warner manager, is the new district manager for Schines at Bellefontaine, Ohio.

GEORGE FRIARY
for the past two years assistant manager in charge of advertising at the Victory in Holyoke, Mass., has been transferred to Pittsfield, where he will open the Strand Theatre.

PARENTS OF POWELL ATTEND SHOWING OF TUNSTILL'S "DIGGERS"

Getting a big newspaper break when the parents of Dick Powell, from nearby Little Rock, came over to see him in "Gold Diggers," Manager J. Clayton Tunstill, Saenger Theatre, Pine Bluff (Ark.), followed that up with a host of other sock ideas that gave him a holdover on the picture.

Clay doubled his usual negro attendance by putting out a special herald plugging the singing of the colored girl in the picture, and when he decided to hold over, informed the local bus lines who spread the news to all agents in adjacent towns, offering special low fares as an inducement to attend the theatre. Tunstill says it worked out very well.

Local paper ran the serial and also a front page story that for the first time, theatre was running a picture for four days, and came in on a classified hookup for display and story breaks, in addition to daily art flashes.

Special outdoor slide projector on top of theatre flashed ads on building opposite, windows on main street were lettered, heralds and post cards were sent out, street auto bally and auto tires carried announcements, and a score of other effective stunts were put across by this hustling showman to roll up a high scoring gross.

N. Y. STRAND FRONT!

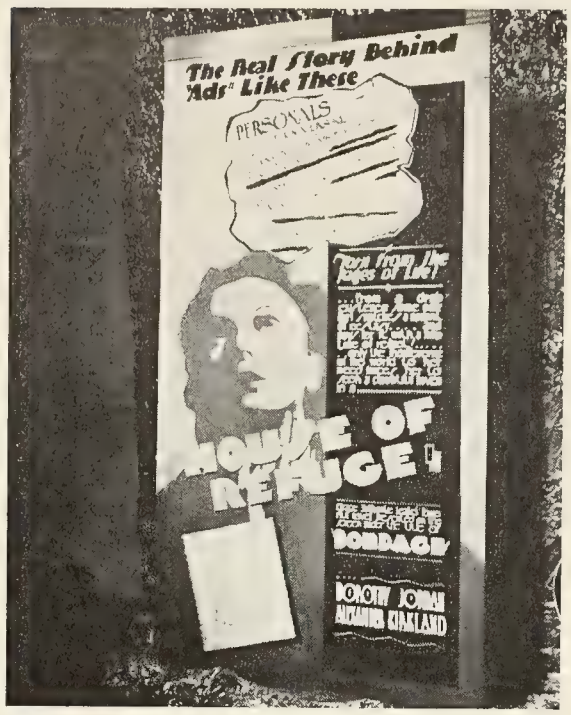
A very effective theatre front was gotten up by Arthur Jeffrey, of Warner Bros. in conjunction with the showing of "Heroes For Sale" at the Strand Theatre, N. Y. C. It was a cool looking front with the top featuring copy and star head cutouts in blue against a white background. Special frames along the sides of the lobby sold the picture's cast, with stills and copy along those lines.

BEE-YER UND PRETZELS!

Jack Hodges of the Tampa Theatre in Tampa, Fla., cooked up a great novel display in his immense lobby when he showed "Moonlight and Pretzels."

He had a bar, with plenty of cold beer and connected with it was one of those "ring a prize" booths. Each customer entering the theatre for a week prior to the showing of the picture was given three real pretzels. They could eat them or try their work at "ringing." If they succeeded in "ringing" two pretzels they were given a pass to see the pix. If they only got one pretzel over they had a bottle of cold beer on the house. Jack didn't say what they got if they were able to "ring" all three pretzels. How about it, Hodges; what did you do then?

POSTER ART WORK FOR THE THEATRE



Louie Vaughan, head of Jay Wooten's art department at the Dodge, Dodge City, Kan., is the creator of the poster above which has the virtue of combining a swell job of painting with selling the high points of the picture. His colors are black on lemon, black on green, copy white and magenta letters, cut-out letters silver with orange letters. Portrait, dark blue graduated, with light magenta background.

NOVELTY!

Eddie Yarbrough, Dayton, Ohio, director of advertising for RKO, has the natives all agog over a contest in which the participants are asked to submit local freaks and oddities, with substantial cash awards for the subjects selected.

Yarbrough will have the prize subjects made into a one-reel short to be shown at the opening of the RKO Colonial as a part of the local RKO Greater Show Season.

SHEPHERD ARRANGES UNUSUAL PUBLICITY ON CERMAK PICTURE

A preview for those who were present at the shooting of the late Andrew Cermak, in Miami (Fla.) last winter, was arranged by Sonny Shepherd on "The Man Who Dared" at the Mayfair Theatre in the resort city. The picture is supposed to suggest the life story of the former Mayor of Chicago, and Sonny knew that those who were at the scene of the catastrophe would be more than interested in seeing the picture.

To the special showing were invited, among others: Mrs. Joe Gill, also wounded by the madman; Mrs. Cross, who jogged the assailant's arm when he aimed his gun at the President; and the newspapermen who covered the hospital during Cermak's last days. Of course the papers made much of the picture and Sonny had the reviews run on the opening day of his showing instead of the day after as is usual.

Among other ideas that clicked were, a classified ad tieup that netted Shepherd over $200 in free display space, personal phone calls to many locals, and dramatized announcements over all local radio stations.

BIRTHDAY IDEA!

Loew's Broad Theatre in Columbus, Ohio, is organizing a birthday club to which children up to twelve years of age are eligible and to whom membership certificates and cards, both serially numbered, will be issued. Each Saturday one hundred numbers are to be posted outside the lobby, and members with cards bearing corresponding numbers are to be guests of the management on that day.

Records of members' birthdays will be kept and every child and its parents will receive special complimentary invitations for the show as a birthday gift.

We don't know who is directly responsible for this birthday idea, but it's a corker, of that we're sure.

WALKER MAKES GOOD SHOWING ON SINGLE DAY "WARRIOR" DATE

Though confronted by the advertising handicap of a one-day showing, nevertheless Manager T. Y. Walker, of the State Theatre, Greenville (N. C.), put on a campaign on "Warrior's Husband" that was strong enough for a week's stand.

He tied in with his leading department store to run a special sale of one cent matinee tickets good for the first hour, the store paying for the tickets at regular prices and advertising the stunt, for profitable word of mouth publicity.

In advance, distributed teaser cards which invited to meet "the warrior's husband" at the State, and also gave away birthday cards, printed free of charge, that invited holders to attend performance as guests. Mailed post cards to men with copy to the effect that the writer did the washing while the wife did the wooing, with a suggestion that the men come over and see how the male got out from under.

These were some of Tucker's highlights besides regular newspaper and theatre advertising, and he reports increased activity at the box office as a result, proving that a one-day date with a strong picture is well worth plugging and spending a few extra dollars to do so.

NEAT FLASH

This artistic display is the work of Kramer Drace, who operates the Grand Theatre, Greer, S. C., the copy on the panels being changed weekly to plug the coming attractions. As this location is right in the center of town, Kramer pays real money for rent instead of the usual passes, and for what he gets in return, has made a good investment.

COME ON IN, THE WATER'S FINE!

WILLIAM C. WATSON

Managing Director of the Hippodrome in Cleveland, Ohio, starts off by joining us and sending along the applications of three other men in the Hippodrome who will next be introduced. Bill first joined showbusiness over twenty-five years ago when he joined Paramount as a film salesman in Pittsburgh. In 1920 he left Paramount to operate his own circuit of theatres until 1927, when he went to St. Joseph to open the Missouri Theatre. Bill has held many responsible positions before coming to the Hip and we're hopeful of receiving plenty of "hot" campaigns from him.

house manager of the Hippodrome in Cleveland, and has been opening houses around since then. He just recently started at the Hipp, and since Cleveland is always well represented in our pages by some of our most active members, you're going to have to show us something, Corwin, to keep step with the rest of the lads out there. What say, are you on?

J. KNOX STRACHAN

the advertising manager of the Hippodrome, in Cleveland first entered our great business in 1924 as assistant at the Olympic, in Buffalo, and became the youngest manager of a first run theatre in the coutnry at the Cameo, Pittsburgh. Well done, Knox, apparently you have been places and done things. Our thousands of members and readers are always interested in good campaigns and you can't send 'em on too fast for us, so when you can get out the old Waterman and drop us a line we'll be happy to receive it.

holds down the job of Publicity Director of the Hippodrome in Cleveland, Ohio, and since this house is the largest in the city with a seating capacity of 4,000 operating under a vaude-picture policy playing outstanding attractions we ought to get some nice ads from him. He started in working for RKO at the Palace in Cleveland and later worked as press agent for the Cleveland Division of RKO Theatres, leaving to work as personal representative of Rube Wolf. Well, that's about all for the Hippodrome and if we don't get some swell representation from these boys, four of 'em strong, we'll throw up the sponge. Don't let us down now; we're waiting for you.

swells our Canadian membership when he joins from Princess Theatre in Melville, Saskatchewan, where we have plenty of active members. We're bound to find a couple of letters a day from up in your neck of the woods, Jack, and now that you are one of us, we will bid you welcome and hope you'll be another whose mail we'll be looking forward to receiving.

acts as assistant manager of the Cairo Theatre, in Los Angeles, Cal. With the swell openings and campaigns that are put on in your fair city, there's no earthly reason why you shouldn't be elected to write us and let us have the dope on any outstanding stunts that the rest of our members and readers could take advantage of, so let's know if we can count on you, Jack.

is a mighty young new member to join us as assistant of the Mosholu Theatre in the West Bronx. We know your section very well, Bert, and realize how congested it is. You certainly have to be on your toes to keep the shekels coming in to the box office and you can't afford to keep the way you do it a secret. Let us in on it and drop in to see us soon.

E. V. HOLLIS

manager of the College Theatre in Morehead, Ky., should have a special introduction since he is the first and only college professor who has joined the Club. Hollis tells us that nine months ago he thought a trailer came after the show, and that a one-sheet was about the size of a letterhead. However, he assures us he knows better now. He says the Morehead State Teachers College owns and operates a first-class theatre for its students and any citizens who may care to attend. We have asked him to write a brief article for us on "Running a Theatre for College Students" and we're anxiously awaiting the receipt of it.

is out at the Kiva Theatre in Greeley, Colo., and since good old Colorado is pretty well represented in our pages, Temple is going to have to be up on his toes to compete with those live-wire showmen who are already keeping us informed of things theatrical out there. Is it a go, Temp? Can we count on you, too, to contribute regularly?

can't spent much of his time sleeping, for he manages the Rialto, Kozy and Ritz Theatres in Chickasha, Okla., and if that isn't a man's size job we don't know what is. We haven't been hearing so much lately from out Oklahomey way, so we'll appoint you a sort of one-man committee to keep us posted on doings thereabouts, particularly what you are doing to keep the old cash register a buzzin'.

is holding down the managerial reins at the Apollo Theatre in Jersey City, N. J., and having met "E. D." personally at the Round Table shindig, we size him up as being an up-and-coming young man who will get places. Listen, "E. D."! You saw for yourself how active our Jersey members are, so you'll have to keep the old Waterman working if you want to get in the swim. Give our regards to the rest of the boys over there and drop in whenever you're in the Big Town.

(Mail to Managers' Round Table Club, 1790 Broadway, New York)

manages the Colonial Theatre in Atlantic City, N. J., and judging by the kind of weather we've been having lately, business must be pretty good for him. Say, Fred, tell us how you managed to keep the wild waves from creeping up into the aisles and flooding the place out generally. Next time we get down your way, which we hope will be soon, we're going to stop off and say hello, so be sure the welcome mat is out and ready for us.

owns and manages the Paramount Theatre in La Cross, Kan., and tells us he has long been an ardent reader of our pages. Well, Ralph, you'll have to do more than read them, now that you've actually joined; you'll have to promise yourself to contribute your various stunts so that the rest of the boys may take advantage of your activities, too. Larned sure knows his oats, since he has sold films, been an advertising sales manager, owner and manager of a house, and if that doesn't qualify him for membership, we don't know what does. We have a Harold Larned as a member of the Club. Is he a brother of yours, Ralph?

managing the Liberty Theatre in Herkimer, N. Y., joins us and says he's entertaining at the organ as well. From what we can learn, Steve broadcast five years ago over WGY. He opened both the Stanley in Utica and the new Warner in Milwaukee. Maybe he can tell us some of the organ novelties he uses to keep the customers interested. Can we count on you to send us something of interest to the rest of the boys?

isn't so terribly far away from Club headquarters. He's managing the Palace Theatre in Bradley Beach, N. J. How come didn't you get up for the Round Table midnite lunch, Steiner? A lot of Jersey boys were over and I'm sure you would have enjoyed meeting them all. Many's the summer we spent at Bradley and enjoyed, too, so if we get the chance to come down again and look the place over, you may be sure we'll do it. In the meantime, any time you're around this way, come on in.

is the publicity poster artist for the Fraternity Theatre in Baldwinsville, Mass., and he's only twenty-one. If you have seen fit to join the Club, Chick, you've been following our pages and are doubtless aware of our Poster Art Series. How about contributing to it? Just send us some good clear snaps of some of your outstanding posters with a brief description of them, and we'll do the rest.

who manages the Pastime Theatre in Vicco, Kentucky joins the Club and says she admires it very much, showing her good judgment. Anna's house is a five hundred-seater and we're looking forward with keen anticipation to her first contribution to these pages. We have several "lady" members and are always interested in their activities, so we hope we can count on you, too, for representation from Vicco.

is the assistant manager of the Studio Theatre in Upland, Cal., says he is a constant reader of our pages and is very anxious to be one of us. We think you're about the first member from Upland to join, Clarence, though we have hundreds already in from California. How about keeping the mails buzzing with showmanship activities in Upland? There aren't very many towns in California not represented in our pages, so get in the swim.

TECHNOLOGICAL

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 188.—(A) By diagram, show how you would so arrange that a new set of fuses might be cut in instantly when a projector circuit fuse blew. (B) Tell us just what a glare spot is and what various bad effects such spots set up. (C) Tell us just what is meant by a "ground," as applies to an electric circuit. (D) Has current generated by battery or dynamo any affinity for, or inclination to escape into, the earth?

Answer to Question No. 181

Bluebook School Question No. 181 was: (A) When fusing motor circuits is it necessary that the wires be large enough to carry the current permitted by over-fusing without overloading them? (B) Give us your views as to the economy or lack of economy in the one-man projection idea. Also set forth your idea as to what gain there is in having two men on duty.

I was rather astonished at the answers to Section B. There were a few excellent ones. The rest displayed a sad lack of proper grasp of the subject as a whole. Those who answered acceptably as to Section A were, with three exceptions, approximately the same as the regular list. The three consisted in names not yet published, I believe. They were D. P. Harrington; H. Miles and G. W. Scott; A. Goering, J. Green and H. C. Goodwin.

Those answering both A and B acceptably were S. Evans and C. Rau; G. E. Doe, T. VanVaulkenburg; D. Danielson; H. Edwards; Van Buskirk and Kroll; G. Thompson; W. Ostrum; J. W. Morrison; H. H. Menefee; D. L. Howard; L. Hutch and D. Goldberg; J. Wentworth; S. Maybe and R. D. Konley and G. Tinlin.

I would very much like, did not space limitations forbid, to print the answers of all these men concerning Section B. It cannot be done, though, so I will first set forth the views of Evans and Rau, who are fair enough to be able to see not only their own side, but that of the boss as well. First, however, let us dispose of Section A by printing Dale Danielson's answer, which is the same as that of more than 500 others, except for differences in words. Danielson says:

"No circuit should be fused above the capacity of its wires. This being true, any permissible over-fusing of motor circuits must be compensated for in wire capacity.

(B) Evans and Rau say, "This subject has been the cause of more contention between exhibitors, managers and projectionists than any that has arisen since motion picture projection began. It may be expected, and we think conceded, that each side is firmly and honestly convinced that the other is wrong. So firmly fixed is this view that it is very hard for either side to realize and admit that there may be at least some truth in the other fellow's arguments. We believe in being fair, however, and will therefore make some attempt to set forth a fair estimate of the exhibitor's argument, as well as of our own.

"The chief obstacle to an amicable agreement is of course the money involved and where it is to come from. The exhibitor argues there is just so much money expended for amusement in his vicinity, or "field," therefore projection costs cannot exceed a certain fixed sum, even though granting the possibility that increased excellence in screen image and sound may bring some increased attendance. When, therefore, the projectionist is convinced that the exhibitor is not misstating things, and that the total maximum available theatre income will not permit paying two men a reasonable living wage, there seems little room for further argument. It then is a case of do the best that can be done with one man, or else shut the show shop up.

"It would verge upon foolishness to say one man cannot do the work, for the reason that one man actually is doing it in many parts of the country. One man can do it, true! One man does do it, true! Also one strong man may lift a 200-pound sack of flour, but that is no convincing evidence that he should be compelled to do so. One man very often can do some certain thing that two men should do. Two men, however, would do it, not only without heavy strain, but much better and with far greater efficiency, which is exactly the case in projection in all except small theatres equipped only with very simple sound equipment. It is more or less unsafe even in them, but since relatively few of them could pay two men a living wage it must be tolerated. . . ."

I believe we should also print the answer of G. Thompson, who says, "The honest contention of the exhibitor in the small theatre in small cities, towns and villages, is that the two-man shift is financially impossible, or at least very risky, if both men are to be paid what may be fairly called a living wage. The argument that better results in picture and sound will create sufficiently increased revenues to justify employment of the second man does not appeal to him at all, for the simple reason that, his possible patronage is strictly limited. I therefore intend my answer and argument to apply to theatres where better work might justify its cost by increased patronage, but with the thought in mind that after all, except for villages, it is a question of whether or not any theatre, except those of very limited seating capacity, falls outside that limit.

"First of all, certainly there can be and is no question but that there is increased safety with two men on duty than with one. That is not a matter I would consent to admit to argument. It is not at all impossible that one fire might cost more than the wage of a second man for five years. Not likely, perhaps, but entirely possible. Also it might cost a panic, and panic is, as we all know, a very awful thing.

"Next, in the modern projection room there are many things to look constantly after while a show is in progress—that is, if maximum results in excellence and in efficiency of operation are to be had. Certainly every exhibitor knows that. If any does not, let him ascend to the sky parlor and run a show under the direction of the projectionist he thinks has such a soft berth. He will return to his office chastened.

"I believe it indisputable that two men can justify themselves, but to do so they must become real projectionists. They must spend every minute of their time on duty to being what we call on the job. They must study and thoroughly equip themselves with technical knowledge. They must understand how to make the equipment under their charge, and every individual part thereof to work with highest efficiency. They must not only be able to produce, but actualy must produce the very best possible picture and the very best possible sound."

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1933, unless otherwise specified.

Screen play by Frances Marion and Herman J. Mankiewicz . . . from the Sam H. Harris stage play by GEORGE S. KAUFMAN and EDNA FERBER. Additional dialogue by Donald Ogden Stewart. Produced by David O. Selznick. Directed by George Cukor.

The opening of M-G-M's "Dinner at 8" at the $2 Astor, N.Y., at Grauman's Chinese Theatre, Los Angeles, and in road-show engagements, is not alone of tremendous importance to M-G-M which thus launches its 1933-34 season so auspiciously—

"BEAUTY FOR SALE" a grand audience show! (Madge Evans, Alice Brady, Otto Kruger, Una Merkel and Big Cast!)

It is the greatest tonic this industry has had in years—it will be a stimulant to picture business for months to come!

RADIO CITY MIRACLE

IN the classic days of sail every seaman knew that a great clipper ship had to have a voyage around the Horn, battling through the ordeals of Hatteras, the Straits of Magellan and Pacific typhoons before she "found herself."

In somewhat kindred fashion the Radio City Music Hall, after an inglorious launching and much buffeting of the skipper and crew and many rechartings of the course, appears now to have found itself. Under full sail, running fair, bowling along like the Great Begum of Bengal, and laden to the plimsol mark, this romantic leviathan of a project is gathering way on a record voyage.

The current state of box office business at the Music Hall is near akin to the fruits of miracle, when one views the background circumstances. S.R.O. business at the world's greatest theatre in the last days of summer '33 is tremendously encouraging.

Conspicuously and importantly the current success of the Music Hall is a motion picture victory by motion picture showmen. New York theatre patrons and visitors from all the country over are now finding the Music Hall a place to go. New York has not been seen until one has seen Radio City and the Music Hall, but there is in addition a compelling something which makes lines of spenders stand and wait pressing against the green velvet ropes. The show is a picture show. This was not, as the story of the project admits, the original conception and purpose. That fact detracts nothing from the importance of the success of today, even if it does not win laurels for foresight for the promoters and initiators. Many another spectacular bullseye in American enterprise has been scored by a ricochet bullet.

Enmeshed as the Music Hall is in the grandiose pattern of the Radio City project there is probably no system of accountancy which could say with real cash jingling accuracy where true profit begins. The part that land and structure plays and the part that this ornate and elaborately spectacular piece of enterprise has or may prove to have in the making of what is to be the ultimate career of the whole presents a problem in the upper calculus of economics that is unlikely ever to have a solution written down on a balance sheet. That is for a postponed tomorrow which may never come.

But all that involves a process of tedious thinking which makes the mathematical answer of no real importance in the industrial emotionalism of the day. For current purposes in spite of the fact that it started to be something else Radio City Music Hall is the super theatre of the motion picture and—for today and now, precisely now—a success. And in being a success it contributes to brighter outlook and higher hopes for the whole of the industry.

"LEAD KINDLY LIGHT"

NEXT week the motion picture industry will meet itself in the presence of the United States at Washington.

This conclave at the hearings to be held for the making of a code of motion picture operation under the National Recovery Administration program will bring about the most important concentration of executive manpower in the history of the industry. The code sessions held variously in New York and elsewhere about the country have been in a certain sense limited by delegated and appointed personnel. In Washington it is likely that the hearings, being concerned with points of controversy, will be somewhat more inclusive of representation of diverse and competing interests.

It would have been a happy outcome if the industry's own code sessions had developed and disclosed a leadership which could speak for the whole picture before the government—speaking with an assurance that the industry had a unified state of mind about the basic principles and practises necessary to its own general well being. Since that did not, and perhaps could not, happen it is now to be hoped that in this coming forum of violently conflicting opinions there will be evolved reasonable compromises which at least will prevent the industry appearing before the public in such a light of confusion as surrounds oil and coal.

Meanwhile it seems now, on the eve of the Washington sessions, that the factions of the industry are going there still the special pleaders of their special interests, inclined to seek an opportunity for the solidification and exploitation of advantages involved in trade methods under debate.

It would be surprising to find the government or any arm of the government willing to lend support to such endeavors. More likely than not a considerable proportion of the problems of issue with which the industry goes to Washington will still be problems after the hearings are over. Many of the issues are none of the government's business.

The end product of the NRA is intended to be long payrolls with living wages on them. Block booking, double bills, protection, percentages, copyright violation and the like are important in this present instance only as they bear on the enhancement of mass buying power and business turn-over.

IT is not surprising that some of the industry's inquiring minds are asking: "If double bills are to be put under ban, what is to be done about the theatre operation policy which adds, not another picture, but from five to a dozen acts of vaudeville to the bill?"

Introduce enough variables into any situation and the difficulties of writing a rule become insurmountable, in any business. The theatre is the exhibitor's business.

TROUBLED UNIONS

Apparently perennial are union troubles in the motion picture as in other fields. Newly arisen in the New York area is a new Allied Motion Picture Operators' Union, digging in, already by dint of persuasion, new terms having set its men in 11 New York houses, supplanting members of Local 306, long the master of the situation, lately merged with an earlier rival, Empire State, the validity of which action is soon to be tested. Already have two of the 11 houses suffered stench bombings, suspects arrested. In defense, 306's Harry Sherman declared this week: "I have exhausted every effort to conciliate with exhibitors and will fight for ourselves and not against anyone." Claiming a lockout, Mr. Sherman plans an aggressive counter attack to hold his war-torn territory, already having invoked the NRA, with Wanamaker's Grover Whalen named mediator between Local 306 and owners, at the request of NRA's Edward F. McGrady. 306 asks blue eagles be torn from 350 theatres involved, charging Allied men work over maximums, under minimums, denied by exhibitors. . . .

COMBINED FIGHTERS

In fighting mood are independent exhibitors of the bay district of San Francisco, with their objective a body blow at two major circuits of the territory, Fox West Coast and Gold States Theatres, in which West Coast also has a small interest. Last week into activity as a group, pooling buying power in a combine, plunged Cooperative Film Buyers Association, wired New York sales managers it was ready to buy 1933-34 product. Attempted is the breaking of the strong hold of Fox West Coast, Golden States on the area. The personalities leading the way are Nasser Brothers, Joseph Blumenfeld, William Wagnon, Harry C. Arthur. No small problem have national sales managers, since the combine is ready to buy for 14 towns and cities, provided no selective contracts had been offered other circuits, the "other" unmistakable. . . .

PLEASANT NEWS

Pleasant was the news which greeted RKO theatre moguls on their return this week from Labor Day holiday-making. From the management of their enormous Music Hall in Radio City came reports that on Sunday, a day of continuous torrential rainfall, the afternoon found the theatre at capacity, with doormen importantly shouting to clamoring patrons that they might buy tickets if they so desired, but with the understanding that they would be forced to endure not less than a two-hour wait for all seats. The corner may yet be turned. . . .

"GOLDEN" ANNIVERSARY

No stammering, breathless ingenue was May Robson when she attended the premiere of Columbia's "Lady for a Day," in which she stars, at New York's Radio City Music Hall this week. Rather, to the month, was she celebrating an anniversary the like of which few performers may boast. One night in September there opened in Brooklyn a play called "The Hoop of Gold," in which May Robson had a part. It was her first stage role. The date was 1883, a half century ago. For 45 years she played the "legitimate," then went screenward. Reaching film stardom, she must surely be celebrating a "golden" anniversary. . . .

SALES TAX

Certain it seems that Missouri showmen, along with other business operators of the state, will yet come face to face with a sales tax in order to finance unemployment relief, public construction that the state may share in federal appropriation. Approaching is a special session of the legislature, called by Governor Park. Even recalcitrant legislative leaders, last session responsible for killing the governor's sales tax legislation, admit such enactment appears inevitable. Fortunate in a measure are those to be affected, however, in that one per cent apparently will suffice. . . .

CHOCOLATE THEATRE

Lavish philanthropist has long been Milton S. Hershey, the chocolate millionaire of America, whose Hershey, Pa., factories and community have become famous the country over. Perhaps more as a hobby than anything else is the latest Hershey addition to the community, a $3,000,000 limestone building, of which a theatre will form a part. Last week-end there were people for miles around keenly awaiting the opening on Saturday of the theatre, said to rival for extravagance, elegance, New York's Radio City Music Hall, if not in size. Seating 2,000, the Hershey Community theatre will take its place in the cooperative group with zoo, dance hall, swimming pool and several etceteras, give employment to more than 15 musicians, 12 ushers, four doormen, two cashiers, 10 stage hands and electricians. A feat of theatre technique is the stage, in six sections, each possible of raising, lowering. . . .

AMATEUR

Famed as amateur actor of the early days of the century and before its turn was Edward Fales Coward, one time dramatic critic and writer of and for the theatre on the New York Sun and the World. Mr. Coward leaped from law to Journalism via the old Commercial Advertiser. When famed Arthur Brisbane left the Sun for the World, critic Coward went along. One of the founders was Mr. Coward of the long famous Strollers, amateur players of note. Gently he was wont to boast of the 224 roles he had played as an amateur. Last week, at his summer home in Tannersville, N. Y., several years of failing health ended for Mr. Coward in death at 71. And so another page of New York's heyday history was turned. . . .

MARQUEE SHIFT

Despite protestations to the contrary from official RKO theatre sources, strong is the indication that the circuit, perhaps tiring of a battle, the earlier round of which it has already lost, will shortly make a marquee shift, change the name of the RKO (Radio City) Roxy to RKO Center, leaving the field unquestioned to the old Roxy, Seventh avenue neighbor of its younger, more modern brother. From Harold B. Franklin, however, comes assurance that the name will not be relinguished without a fight. His explanation: "The action was taken to end the unsatisfactory and confusing condition which has existed since two theatres in close proximity utilized the same name." To circuit head Franklin is attributed authorship of the new name. . . .

GROUPS STRENGTHEN FORCES FOR PUBLIC HEARING ON CODE TUESDAY

Every Faction Will Have Spokesman at Washington; Rosenblatt Hopeful of Solution; Labor Problem Foreseen

[News of additional motion picture code activities appears on pages 10, 17 and 18. The complete text of the code governing theatre supply dealers starts page 10.]

The textual contents of the motion picture industry's NRA code governing labor, wages and trade practices will be determined finally next Tuesday at a public hearing in Washington. But not without many vigorous oral arguments between the official representatives of the industry's branches and factions.

The principal development this week was the organization by various industry groups of proper representation, legal and otherwise, through which they will present to the National Recovery Administration factual records to uphold their stand on clauses. Appeals for proxies with which to strengthen the "voting" power of each of the many factions were sent out by letter and telegram.

All Industry Will Be Represented

Every faction will have duly authorized spokesmen on hand when, on the morning of September 12, Sol A. Rosenblatt, deputy administrator, heading a staff of government economic experts, swings the gavel in the large auditorium of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce Building, at Washington. Mr. Rosenblatt thereby will signal the beginning of the official NRA hearing from which a final code will be written, and the end of the long series of film committee meetings, continuously interrupted by squabbles, over what should and should not be incorporated.

Some of the disputed clauses would effect revolutionary changes in motion picture merchandising—create open buying, end double featuring, premiums, "star raiding," poster exchanges.

To the National Recovery Administration, Tuesday's hearing merely will represent the 63rd in the series to enroll the nation's industry under President Roosevelt's recovery plans. To the motion picture business, however, it may climax the long fight between buyer and seller over various practices.

Administrator "Hopeful" of Solution

Efforts to harmonize differences between groups, as represented by large distributors and independents, and by affiliated circuits and non-affiliated, is made considerably more difficult by the fact that neither the distribution group nor that which drafted a code for exhibitors can agree within itself upon some of the provisions. The proposals of each committee were accompanied by a long schedule of exceptions (see MOTION PICTURE HERALD, August 26).

On the whole, however, the deputy administrator was reported this week to feel hopeful that some agreement would be reached without undue difficulty, once they were made to realize that failure would result in the code being written by the recovery administration. This was done in the case of the oil industry's code, and oil is not particularly happy with the document which the NRA Administrator delivered.

With an increasing pressure of work due not only to the negotiations incident to the hearing last week on the laboratory code (see page 10), and the forthcoming hearing on the film code, plus the submission this week of drafts for broadcasting and music publishing, Mr. Rosenblatt was compelled to obtain quarters at Washington twice as large as originally assigned. His staff has undergone similar expansion.

A large mass of correspondence is accumulating in the NRA's film-code file, ranging anywhere from letters and telegrams outlining the plight of extras in Hollywood to communications on legal potentialities of some proposals. Film delegations also have called to discuss clauses with Mr. Rosenblatt.

A letter from California producers discusses the proposal to ban double features (see page 17) with reference to the fact that the federal courts in that state have held illegal attempts by the companies to end the practice.

There is some suggestion that trade practices not touching upon hours, wages or other matters required under the recovery act, be eliminated from the codes and be turned over to the control committees. This would automatically settle numerous disputes in the film industry.

As in the automobile code, the labor provisions of the film agreement promise much difficulty, involving reservations as to the rights of employers to negotiate with their employees. The film code provides that "the right of employer and employee to bargain together free from interference by any third party shall not be affected by this code, and nothing herein shall require any employee to join any organization or to refrain from joining any organization in order to secure or retain employment."

Announcing approval of the automobile code, General Johnson declared that he would not consider the President's approval of the open-shop policy as setting a precedent for other codes. This statement was considered a warning to other industries not to attempt to use the automobile code as a lever to obtain approval of similar reservations for themselves, which the film industry will be the first to challenge.

Hays Heads MPPDA Committee

Mary Pickford has delegated to a Washington lawyer the duty of representing Hollywood extras, who asked Miss Pickford to defend their rights.

Charles L. O'Reilly, exhibitor coordinator, and Sidney R. Kent, coordinator for producers and distributors, will sit with Deputy Rosenblatt at the public hearing.

Mass meetings of exhibitors were being held throughout the country, to organize opposition to various clauses and to appoint official spokesmen.

Representatives of some 15 Allied and MPTO groups have organized a mass meeting Sunday at the Wardman Park hotel in Washington. It is expected that answers to 2,000 telegrams will result in selection of one spokesman. At the rally 20 per cent cancellation, instead of 15, will be asked. Louis F. Blumenthal and 30 New York exhibitors were named to work out a program.

Will H. Hays will head a committee of the MPPDA at the public hearing. Louis B. Mayer will represent the MPPA.

Actors and directors were preparing to attend. The Academy will select its representative later. Hollywood extras are writing their own code, providing for an arbitration board. Actors want a 48-hour week, too.

Various surveys indicate the code will increase employment between 4,000 and 10,000, principally in exhibition.

Independent exhibitors will be aided in their protest against the elimination of poster exchanges by representatives of these exchanges. The large distributors would permit the purchase of posters and "paper" only from their companies.

The independents are preparing to tell Mr. Rosenblatt that they "look with alarm at the threat (in the code) of the further extension of protection beyond the existing burdensome conditions."

Exhibitors Hold Mass Meetings; Johnson Cites Requirements for Voice at Hearing; Music Publishers Submit Code

Conditions for Code Hearings

Requirements for those wishing to be heard were outlined last week by General Johnson, as follows:

"(1) A written or telegraphic request for an opportunity to be heard must be filed before noon on Monday, Sept. 11, 1933, with the Administrator, Room 4225, Department of Commerce, Washington, D. C.

"(2) Such request shall contain a statement setting forth without argument, a proposal: (1) for the elimination of a specific provision of the Code; or (2) a modification of a specific provision, in language proposed by the witness; or (3) a provision to be added to the Code, in language proposed by the witness. The request shall also contain a statement of the name of any person seeking to testify in the hearing and a designation of the persons or groups whom he represents.

"(3) All persons appearing at the public hearing are regarded as witnesses and shall present orally only facts and not argument. Written briefs or arguments may be filed but oral presentations will be confined to factual statements only and no legal arguments will be heard.

"(4) Persons not appearing may file before the close of the hearing written statements containing proposals for eliminations, modifications, or additions to the Code supported by pertinent information. These written statements should be condensed as much as possible."

A code for music publishers, which is expected to revolutionize many business practices, was sent to Washington late last week by John G. Paine, chairman of the board of the Music Publishers Protective Association. The number of music dealers, the accompanying letter said, has decreased from 12,000 in 1926 to 3,000, the volume of piano sales from $76,829,338 in 1929 to $30,148,751 in 1931 and considerably less in the last two years.

A 40-hour week and a minimum 35 cents an hour are established in the code of fair competition adopted by the Theatrical Consumers Association of America, Inc.

Erpi Under Electrical Code

Electrical Research Products, Inc., this week announced that it has placed itself, as a wholly-owned subsidiary of Western Electric, under the electrical manufacturing code.

Pathe Meeting Delayed

A postponed meeting of the Pathe directorate scheduled for Wednesday was again adjourned until Thursday.

LABORATORY CODE UP TO JOHNSON; SUPPLY DEALERS SUBMIT OWN PLAN

Public Hearing Completed on Laboratory Agreement; 20 Clauses on Unfair Trade Practices in Supply Code

by FRANCIS L. BURT
Washington Correspondent

Motion picture laboratories and theatre supply dealers and equipment manufacturers are virtually at the end of their NRA code drafting activities. The President's signature is expected to be affixed to the laboratory code long before the public hearing, next Tuesday morning, on the general film code. Enactment would follow in ten days. The text of the laboratory code was published in MOTION PICTURE HERALD on August 26.

The theatre supply dealers and equipment manufacturers finally submitted their agreement last week to Philip C. Kemp, deputy administrator in charge of motion picture equipment and machinery branches. Text of the proposed code appears elsewhere on this page. No hearing has been set, and when it is held there is not expected to be any great dissension over the provisions for labor or wages, nor over the 20 clauses which would govern unfair trade practices.

Two-Hour Hearing Sets Lab. Code

Having disposed of the code for the laboratory division last Thursday, at a public hearing at Washington, Sol A. Rosenblatt, deputy administrator, on Wednesday sent the completed form to NRA Administrator Hugh Johnson for submission to the President for final approval.

A two-hour hearing, followed by a private conference with the representatives of the several interests, was all that was necessary to smooth out differences between laboratory employers and labor as to wage provisions, the only important point on which there was any controversy.

As completed and ready for approval, the code sponsored by the Motion Picture Laboratories Association, provides two wage schedules, one for laboratories with less than 20 employees and the other for larger establishments. Application of the code, it is estimated, will bring about an increase of 15 per cent in employment, which will mean a 12 per cent advance in payrolls, involving approximately $6,000 a week.

Workers Sought Sliding Scale

Discussion of wage rates during the hearing developed that the code provision of 50 cents an hour for a 40-hour week, with 60 hours in emergencies, was unsatisfactory to the workers, whose side was presented by Solomon Scoppa. The workers sought a sliding scale of $20 a week for assembly department, apprentices and helpers; $25 for negative cutters, printers, hand inspectors and shipping department; $30 for developing department; $35 for title cameramen, maintenance and projection inspectors; $45 for timing department and $62.50 for negative cutters. A 40 hour week, with but 50 hours for emergencies, also was recommended.

The purpose of these amendments, Mr. Scoppa explained, was to guard against a practice of working persons any number of consecutive hours without giving overtime pay, and it was

SUPPLY DEALERS' CODE

A proposed code of fair competition for the theatre supply dealers and motion picture equipment manufacturers was submitted last week to Deputy Administrator Philip C. Kemp, and was signed by W. N. Green, president of the National Theatre Supply Company, Inc., and by J. E. Robin, president of the Independent Theatre Supply Dealers' Association, Inc.

The full text of the code for the theatre supply dealers and motion pictures equipment manufacturers follows:

ARTICLE I

Definitions

1. The National Industrial Recovery Act when referred to in this code shall be called the "Act."

2. The term "dealer" refers to any person, firm, association, or corporation engaged in the business of repairing equipment or buying and selling equipment and supplies for the theatre and other places where motion pictures may be exhibited without regard to whether or not a stock of merchandise is maintained.

3. The terms "equipment" and "supplies" are to be deemed to include not only equipment and supplies which can only be used in connection with theatres and other places where motion pictures may be exhibited, but also any equipment and supplies which, although useable for other purposes, are sold to be used in connection with the exhibition of motion pictures, or for use in theatres, auditoriums, etc.

4. The term "employee" as used herein shall include every person employed by any dealer as above defined.

5. The term "persons" as used herein shall include without limitation natural persons, partnerships, associations, and corporations.

6. The term "cost" as hereinafter used is defined as the cost of direct labor plus the invoice cost of materials (excepting any cash discounts or rebates allowed by the manufacturer under terms of sale to all dealers) plus transportation, cartage, and hauling, plus an adequate amount of overhead, including an amount for the use of any plant facilities employed, as determined by cost accounting methods recognized in the industry and approved by the Administration Board constituted for the enforcement of this code as provided hereinafter.

7. The term "President" refers to the President of the United States.

8. The term "effective date" as used herein is defined to be the 10th day after this code shall have been approved by the President of the United States.

ARTICLE II

Labor Provisions—General

The following provisions shall apply with respect to labor under this code:

1. That employees shall have the right to organize and bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing, and shall be free from the interference, restraint, coercion of employers of labor, or their agents, in the designation of such representatives or in self-organization or in other concerted activities for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection.

2. That no employee and no one seeking employment shall be required as a condition of employment to join any company union or to refrain from joining, organizing, or assisting a labor organization of his own choosing.

3. That employers shall comply with the maximum hours of labor, minimum rates of pay, and other conditions of employment, approved or prescribed by the President.

Minimum Wages

1. The minimum wage or salary to be paid by Dealers to employees, including every class of employees, employed on a half-monthly basis, shall be at the rate of sixty-five dollars per month.

2. The minimum weekly wage to be paid by Dealers shall be fifteen dollars ($15.00).

3. The minimum wage to be paid by Dealers to employees hired on an hourly basis shall be forty cents per hour.

4. Salesmen may be employed on a straight commission or salary and commission basis.

Maximum Hours of Labor

1. Employees, except those engaged as traveling salesmen, emergency repair men and service men, shall not work more than 40 hours per week, nor 182.5 hours during a calendar month of 31 days.

2. These limitations shall not apply in cases of emergency, but at the end of each calendar month every dealer shall report to the Administration Board hereinafter provided for, in such detail as may be required, the number of man-hours worked in that month for emergency reasons and the ratio which said emergency man-hours bears to the total number of mar hours of labor during said month.

Minimum Age Limit

Dealers shall not employ any person under the age of 18 years.

ARTICLE III

Administration

1. With the approval of the President there shall be constituted an Administration Board for dealers in motion picture and theatre supplies and equipment to consist of one duly authorized representative from the Independent Theatre Supply Dealers' Association who shall be its President and one duly authorized representative from National Theatre Supply Company who shall be its President, and not more than 3 members without vote appointed by the Administrator of the National Industrial Recovery Administration.

2. With the approval of the President such Administration Board shall be empowered to assist the National Recovery Arministrator in administering the provisions of the Act as set forth in this code; may initiate and shall consider such recommendations and regulations and interpretations, including those relating to trade practices, as may come before it, and in such case shall, in deliberations held without publicity and recorded in writing, submit to the National Recovery Administrator its advice setting forth in each instance whether said Administration Board unanimously approves or unanimously rejects or is disagreed upon a proposal and in such event the National Recovery Administrator shall decide.

3. Such Administration Board shall also supervise the application of this code and shall notify any and all persons subject to the jurisdiction of this code of its provisions and regu-

Broadway Gets a Taste of Real Oldtime Ballyhoo—and Likes It

Blase Broadway ballyhooers perked up a bit, early this week, at the sudden return of a bit of motion picture press agentry reminiscent of the old school of sensational Harry Reichenbach showmanship.

City editors all over New York, hard-boiled, cut-and-dried newspapermen that they are, for the first time in some years opened up their editorial pages and gave real space to an avowed exploitation departure conceived by Columbia Pictures Corporation and embodying one of the most typical of "human interest" stories.

Even the conservative New York Times, with years of tradition behind it, donated two full columns of type to a feature story treatment of the film company's publicity for the opening of its picture, "Lady for a Day," at the Radio City Music Hall. The Post, Sun, Brooklyn Eagle, Evening Journal, World - Telegram, Herald - Tribune and others, including two news services, covered the story thoroughly, giving virtual carte blanche to the members of their staffs assigned to cover the event. The fact that reporters actually were assigned to cover a press agent's "gag" is in itself of such importance that many an exhibitor will be inspired to spend many sleepless nights thinking up campaigns to equal this one.

The idea was simple: someone in the Columbia exploitation department had the thought that, as accompaniment to the picture's opening, it would be fitting and proper—for publicity purposes—to obtain a member of New York's financially lower strata to enact the part of the picture's heroine in real life—a lady for a day—with photographs.

Details were placed in the hands of Lou Goldberg, exploitation director. City editors were contacted and it was explained that while the idea was solely for publicity purposes it was authentic: Columbia guaranteed to pick out some poor woman at random and give her a taste of real life.

Feature Writers Assigned

The press cooperated. Feature writers and reporters were assigned, and accompanied by the fortunate woman who was chosen to enjoy the pleasures of being "lady for a day."

Selecting 73-year-old Nellie McCarthy, an apple seller in New York's theatrical district, the brothers Cohn authorized a liberal amount of money to be spent on her and had her esconced in a magnificent three-room suite in the Waldorf-Astoria just after midnight Monday. Before going to bed, and in a complete state of bewilderment, Nellie put a towel over her pillow "so's not to get things dirty."

She awoke at 8:30 Tuesday morning and ordered a sumptuous breakfast, put on new clothes—starting with a real silk chemise—provided by thoughtful Jack Cohn. Clad in a soft satin gown, similar to those which she long had admired in Broadway's shop windows, and coiffured and dined, and with a police escort for her limousine, she was welcomed at the City Hall and served tea at a Park Avenue restaurant.

Everywhere she went during the day, downtown to City Hall, uptown to Sherry's for lunch, over to the Music Hall at night for dinner with S. L. (Roxy) Rothafel in his private penthouse atop the theatre, and back again still later to the Biltmore for dancing, two stalwart members of Commissioner Bolan's police force acted as escort. They did not, however, brush aside the news photographers and working reporters—indeed, for once they were welcomed. All this was duly reported in the press of the city on Wednesday, with column after column of type and photographs—and no advertising charge—as she went from shop to shop. Mother McCarthy was allowed to pick out lingerie, an evening dress of Spanish lace and black silk, a corsage of orchids, gold-heeled slippers, a set of sable and other apparel.

Nonchalant Wave, Too

Playing her part with grim determination, "Apple Annie," as she has been known for years along Broadway, acquired a nonchalant wave of the hand that was extremely de rigeur.

Nellie McCarthy lives with her husband, Tom, a former shoe salesman, in a garret at 156 West 45th street, and has been selling apples to theatregoers and showgirls under the fire escape of the Astor theatre for many long and weary years. Before that, she was a lady's maid.

Like the girl in Columbia's "Lady for a Day," Nellie was snatched from her apple stand, given one glorious whirl for 24 hours, and then returned to the stand. It cost Columbia $500 for 24 hours, but the net free space was worth ten times as much.

At a press interview, early Tuesday morning in her gilt-edged suite at the Waldorf, she was asked if she was nervous over the prospect of being a lady for a day.

"No," she replied tremulously. Later, when reporters had made her feel more at ease by swinging the conversation to apple-selling matters, she sidetracked them briskly with tales of her excellent peach season of the past summer.

"But peaches is passé now," she said with a deprecatory flick of her hand. "How d'ya like my French?"

$10,000 Offer to Judge Crater

From three other sources came different campaigns intended to drive theatregoing New Yorkers into motion picture palaces. Outstanding was a "bona fide" offer of $10,000 to the now-forgotten former Supreme Court Justice Crater, for his return to New York.

Warner Brothers made this gesture in connection with the appearance on Broadway of a new motion picture, "Bureau of Missing Persons." There is, of course, little likelihood that Judge Crater will return—if he is still alive—following his long and mysterious absence, along with others, as Samuel Seabury sought to question them some three years ago in connection with the Tammany investigation. And so Warners need not worry too much about the cashing of a $10,000 check, which they already have made out to the missing judge, photostatic copies of which they obligingly sent to the press.

On Wednesday morning, Warners had inserted in the Metropolitan press large, blackface display advertisements, reading as follows:

> This is a bona fide offer to . . . Ex-Judge Joseph Force CRATER. We will give you $10,000 . . . if you will deliver yourself to the Bureau of Missing Persons, care of the Strand Theatre, during the week of September 8th to 14th, inclusive.
> If you have been deterred from coming back because of lack of financial resources, this sum should help you.
> You are one of the 25,000 people who disappear from New York City every year. Most of these are discovered by the Bureau of Missing Persons; others vanish forever.
> If you are still alive and could see First National's great picturization of the "Bureau of Missing Persons," based on the actual records of the department, and realize how earnest and efficient are their efforts to discover the missing, you would immediately make known your whereabouts —because the BUREAU OF MISSING PERSONS brings them back ALIVE—or dead!

News and trade paper offices were flooded at the same time with copies of a long publicity story explaining various tieups with New York's Police Missing Persons department.

A Telegram to Huey Long

Recognizing the fact that the editorial pages of the New York press are not always open for reportorial accounts of the attraction current at the old Roxy, or at any other theatre, Howard S. Cullman, operating receiver for the 7th Avenue Roxy, and his enterprizing publicity director, Morris Kinzler, sent the following telegram to Senator Huey Long in New Orleans, and without waiting for a reply, despatched copies to the city desks:

> Huey Long,
> New Orleans, La.
> Would you be interested in appearing on the stage Roxy Theatre New York for one week beginning Friday September 22nd STOP We understand Aimee Semple McPherson will appear in competing theatre during that week and we know of no other outstanding attraction comparable with your pulling power STOP If interested please wire us collect your terms for this appearance STOP We are sure New Yorkers would relish an opportunity to hear your viewpoints on matters on which you are so importantly involved
> Roxy Theatres Corporation
> 7th Avenue and 50th Street

Evidently Mr. Cullman and Mr. Kinzler feel that the recent fistic encounter on Long Island of the Louisiana Kingfish and a budding young architect, and the resultant publicity from the press, might serve to alleviate the box-office situation. The invitation to the senator is comparable with that extended by several of Hollywood's imaginative moguls to such prizefighters as Jack Dempsey, Max Baer and the man-mountain, Primo Carnera.

Even the conservative old Broadway Capitol management went out and got itself a daily press headliner for its bill, in the person of that militant evangelist, Aimee Semple McPherson, aforementioned to Mr. Long. But, in keeping with the dignity of the cloth, they decided on a less sensational method of advertising their future wares and confined any publicity regarding Aimee to simple announcements of fact.

THIS "OUGHT TO MOVE IN EVERY SPOT"

Is Comment on "Shooting Star" by De Casseres as New Season of Broadway Stage Is Started

by BENJAMIN DE CASSERES

SHOOTING STAR

"Shooting Star," by Noel Pierce and Bernard Schoenfeld, starring Francine Larrimore, is a play based on the tragic life-story of Jeanne Eagels. It has thirty-two characters and ten scenes—from a pump-town in Montana to Broadway.

It is going to make a mighty interesting picture both from a b. o. angle and for sheer entertainment. It has almost every element that has ever gone into the success of the Modern speaking picture—epical quality, tears, humor, sex angles, the theatre, the child. The play dragged. The picture will, or ought to, move in every spot.

Julie Leander, barn-storming on a Western circuit, marries her manager in order to land the job of leading woman.

Julie gets tired of train-riding with her baby, and after two years of it she quits her family and hits the trail for the white lights on Broadway.

Manoeuvres now for self-promotion. She becomes the mistress of Herman Mordecai. For four years she squeezes him to an eggless omelet, and then bunks in with Grantland North, a Social Register attorney.

Julie is now at the top. Managers and agents spill over one another to get to her.

Julie takes to brandy and drugs. Her past begins to ride her conscience—the child, the first husband. Also Equity begins to ride her. She jumps several performances. Here are some real drama and comedy moments. And there are a dozen good character parts in "Shooting Star."

The end is death, an "overdose." For all Julie's wild doings, we feel a profound sympathy for her. There was something all wrong in the girl's blood.

GOING GAY

"Going Gay," a somewhat smelly farce by William Miles and Donald Blackwell, started the New York season. From early appearances, the season is going down.

This is the sort of thing, in pace and subject, that Mack Sennett has taken up in his now maturing years. And done Mack Sennetty in the films by a raft of gay and not over-nice comedians it might net some income tax for the producers.

The theme is Vulgarity breaking into the Newport corral. Some say there is no difference nowadays. "Going Gay" would bear out the contention of these iconoclasts.

We have first a scene on the train to Providence, where a Mary Bolandesque mother is taking her low-born daughter to hook a High Light in society in Newport. There is an in-and-out washroom scene here in the best manner of the vintage of 1907.

Newport. Here we have a huddle of horsey aristocrats, among whom is a bogus countess who is really a disguised society reporter with a pocket camera snapping the doings of our acid-laden blue-bloods. A lot of fast hokum and cross-fire between the base-born and the Bailey Beach sand-lizards.

The third act is a straight-out bedroom rendezvous scene, closets, and four doors, that harks back to the good old Al Woods salacious masterpieces.

Midnight hall-walkers get into bed with one another in a grand mix-up of Vere de Veres and split infinitives. Memories of "Charley's Aunt" and all points south.

The audience seemed to like it the night I decorated the show; but it was a flop.

Innuendoes and double-meanings drip from "Going Gay" like Scotch from the bar of a British liner.

THE GHOST-WRITER

Hal Skelly and William Frawley are a corking team for comedy. And they pulled out many laughs in the farce-comedy, "The Ghost-Writer," by Richard Hopkins and Walter Heyer.

But I fear that the theme as it stands is a bit too lit'rary for the picture clientele, unless the script plays down the writing and plays up the sex and alimony angles in the production. There is a lot of rowdy language here out of the mouth of Frawley that ought to send Ben Hecht right to the script. It is a kind of Hecht-MacArthur set-up anyway.

Bill Harkins is the ghost-writer and Joe Gordon his promoter. Bill writes highbrow stuff. All rejected, of course. So Joe conceives the idea of having Bill ghost for a former popular novelist who lives upstairs but who has lost his grip. Bill's girl, however, is for Bill bein' himself even under the penalty of dispossession.

But Bill falls, and things happen fast. His alimony end comes down on him. Bill is jugged. Meanwhile the seedy ex-Dumas upstairs has gasped out.

Joe, the promoter, has a new idea—iodine pills. Bill's girl meanwhile has got one of Bill's books published under another fellow's name. It's a clean-up.

The play is weak in the hams, clumsy, and gives the death-gargle at least three times. But in the hands of a slick plot and dialogue currycomber out in Brain Alley it could be made amusing, I think.

A PARTY

Ivor Novello gave the party, with some raspingly smart dialogue and a plot so thin that it would slip through any code. Mr. Novello admits, in the program, that the curious concoction, in which Mrs. Patrick Campbell, Cecelia Loftus, Lora Baxter and Olive Reeves-Smith are the main props, is not a play in the ordinary sense of the word.

There is, however, a flicker of drama when Miranda Clayfoot, a celebrated London actress, who is flirting with a married male guest, leaves her dope lying around loose in the bedroom.

The wife, who has retired to the bedroom because she has been flayed by the brilliant bon mots and other cheesy remarks by the late supper guests at Miranda's house, takes the dope ("sleeping-powders," as we say politely) when she sees Miranda being gymned on a lounge by the husband.

Doctor is called in, and all ends rippingly in a party composed of the very crême de la skim of a first-night London audience, including two dramatic critics, who must have worked on monthlies from their dolce far niente looks.

The part taken by Mrs. Campbell, an aging super-famous actress of the Boer War era, is a grand part for Alison Skipworth. Among other things, this shelved Rachel wants to play King Lear because she has always wanted to wear whiskers—à la Lionel Barrymore-Rasputin.

For the rest, it is highly sophisticuty, inane boloney.

THE BLUE WIDOW

This comedy by Marianne Brown Waters is a Queenie Smith show, although the part of Willie Hendricks was obviously intended for Ruth Gordon.

Its smart angle is the exploitation of a champion week-end female necker.

If sex has not disappeared from screens by the time this sees the light, I see in Willie Hendricks a grand part for Una Merkel, or any other little girl in Hollywood who can dress up as languishing innocence and mushy sentimentality while she is secretly burning up all the male guests—and there is a raft of them, of all ages and odors, in this brittle comedy.

The scenarist and director who will squeeze all the comedy and dramatic angles out of the character of Willie Hendricks will have a going picture that will delight both bald head and bobbed head.

The Talbots, writers, are giving a house-party at Darien, Conn. Smart men and quasi-smart women, all littered from the Muses. Naturally there is some crackling dialogue.

In swings Willie, a friend of Mrs. Talbot. She palms herself off as a weeping widow, whereas she has been living in sin. She is as arch and coy a liar and as hypocritical a tear-dripper as ever plugged for alimony or swiped a chaste husband from a chaste wife.

The drama is here: one of the male guests knows about her high-jinks past in Bermuda and all points west. This is good menace. But Willie loves to dangle over the abysm, and after trying to "make" every man on the stage, Willie's game blows up. But charming? A lot!

Grand stuff (properly developed) for the necking trade.

BIG CIRCUIT AND ADOPTION OF U. S. METHODS PROPOSED FOR MEXICO

Would Establish First-Run System to Increase Rental Revenue to Distributors, Also Apply American Exploitation

The Mexican government is understood to have under advisement the feasibility of lending federal cooperation to a plan for constructing a circuit of "de luxe" theatres in each of the important cities of the country's 30 or more states. Principal sponsors are Albert L. Godoy and his Duplex Theatres Construction Company, Mexico City. According to Mr. Godoy's New York representatives, establishment of such a circuit would raise the rental possibilities for American distributors $100,000 weekly, without interfering with present income in that country.

Mexico does not exhibit motion pictures according to the system of first, second, third and fourth-class runs which is in effect in the United States. All Mexican theatres get "first runs," releasing simultaneously, it was said, and thereby much revenue is lost to distributors. Mr. Godoy and his associates would change this system and establish the proposed "de luxe" circuit as the principal first-run channel, while most other houses would receive films subsequently.

Would Use U. S. Exploitation Methods

However, Mr. Godoy's circuit would concentrate only on the outstanding domestic and imported product, embracing American-style exploitation methods, heretofore unused in the country. In tracing the antiquated system of merchandising in Mexico, Mr. Godoy pointed out that there are no "first run" theatres in Mexico in the true sense of the word, much less pre-release houses, and, consequently, the more important motion pictures released in the country lose much of the "cream" of their rental value. As an example, there was cited the case of a Mexican-produced feature, "Santa," which was the only film that had a run of three weeks at the large Palacio theatre in Mexico City, because it had the benefit of the American method of widespread exploitation and presentation. As a result the distributor and exhibitor grossed much higher profits than under ordinary methods.

Mr. Godoy said that his circuit will be in a position to pay the distributors three times more rental on the important pictures booked, than any other combination of theatres in Mexico.

At present, distribution in each Mexican territory is controlled by certain theatre owners, who at the same time are distributors of the product which they book. These distributor-exhibitors fix a price, ranging from $500 to $1,000 for 60 to 90-day showings, at their own or competitive theatres. These prices are regardless of how much is grossed. As a result, it was said, no film, regardless of its value, can gross more than $20,000 to $30,000 in rentals throughout the entire country.

It was said that Mexico's President Rodriguez is interested in the Godoy plan for building new and modern theatres throughout the Republic, and that capital will come from Latin-American interests.

Mr. Godoy, son of a former ambassador from Mexico to Washington, is an international attorney and for years is understood to have studied closely, both in Hollywood and in New York, the workings of the American motion picture business.

Mexican Exhibitors Ask Lower Rentals

by JAMES LOCKHART
Mexico City Correspondent

Seeking to induce foreign producers, especially Americans, to reduce prices all along the line on their product as a means of enabling the exhibitors to increase their profits and by so doing spare them the pain and trouble of having to slash the pay of their employees and even dismiss faithful workers from time to time, is one of the objects of the first organization of its kind established in Mexico. This ambitious body is the National Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors and Motion Picture House Owners and Managers. It is a consolidation of several small groups that function in various cities and states throughout the country.

The Association thinks that imported films, which constitute about 95 per cent of those being exhibited in Mexico at present, cost too much, that all concerned will profit by reduced film rentals—foreign producers will be able to continue to do business with Old Mexico, the distributors and exhibitors will wear smiles instead of scowls when they count up at the end of the day, and numerous clerks, house attaches and others will be spared the category of being unemployed.

Inspection Systems Planned

The association hastens to assure the public that this move to get foreign pictures at lower rates is not intended to be a slap, back or otherwise, at the struggling national production industry. Until this gets on its feet, Mexico must pretty well look abroad for the wherewithal for her film entertainment, the association argues, so why not try to obtain lower charges?

The association's program has two other points, which it contends will be to the advantage of both distributors and exhibitors. One of these calls for the appointment of an inspector, an association man, to drop in every now and then upon the distributors and examine films and discs which they propose to ship to distributors in the provinces. The idea, the association explains, is to prevent films and discs in bad shape being shipped into the hinterland, a thing which it charges has often happened and has greatly hampered exhibitors, especially in the small towns.

This inspector thing has another side: the association proposes to name another inspector whose job it will be to check up on the exhibitors. This functionary will travel from town to town where the association's members do business and carefully examine projecting apparatus to see to it that it is in perfect working order so as to prevent damage to films and discs. It is understood that both these officials will be paid by the association.

Public Turns to Drama

The fancy of the Mexican public has taken a right-about-face in regard to theme preference, in the opinion of leading exhibitors in the capital and the key cities. For some time, films that provoked laughter and inspired but little thought were just what the public wanted. Now, it is found that while the fans are still strong for short subject comedies, they get fidgety when feature comedies are shown. The public fancy has turned to drama, heavy stuff featuring a handsome thing or a persecuted beauty getting into a jam and being kept there all through the reels and getting out in the last few feet. If plenty of tear provoking scenes can be introduced, that is sure fire.

The national producers have harkened to this trend. They have gone drama and how. Two of the most successful Mexican produced pictures have scarcely a chuckle in a reel. One of these is "Sobre las Olas" ("Over the Waves"), based upon the tragic life of a youthful Mexican composer. The other is "La Llorana" ("The Wailing Woman"), a shocker if there ever was one, a picture that deals with a Mexican legend about a sort of wandering ghost of a young matron who murdered her children and was condemned to hunt eternally for them, the chief kick being that all who see or hear this specter are certain to get in bad with everybody and everything. Some Mexicans have seen these productions three times each and still come back for more of them.

65% Go to Films

Motion picture theatres won hands down again last year in the amusements popularity race, in competition with bullfighting, stage shows, sports and other diversions for the public of the federal district, which includes Mexico City and has a population of 1,250,000, according to figures compiled by the Department of National Statistics. The department reported that 19,939,328 men, women and children paid 8,573,972 pesos (approximately $2,857,997.19 U. S.) last year to attend shows at the 52 film houses, 14 stage theatres, 27 sporting centers, 30 carnival tent shows, four bullfight rings, four Spanish handball courts, three circuses, three concert halls, one horse racetrack and one cock fighting arena. Of this attendance, 65.83 went to the cinemas; 10.81 per cent to the bullfight arenas; 8.15 per cent to musical comedy and revues; 6.13 per cent to comedies and dramas; 5.41 per cent to various sporting events and cock fights, and 3.45 per cent to prize fights.

Gerke Marketing Pathe 16mm. Film

Frederic L. Gerke, with offices at 45 West 45th street, New York, is distributing Pathe 16 millimeter sound-on-film productions, features and short subjects, with new releases each month. The October releases include "Night Work," 9 reels, with Eddie Quillan, Sally Starr and George Duryea, and the following short product: "Sea Goin' Sheiks," two-reel comedy with Emerson Treacy and Ray Cooke; "Feline Fighters" and "Spills and Thrills," both Grantland Rice Sportlights; "The Zuider Zee," of the Vagabond Adventure Series, with Tom Terriss in Holland; "Office Boy" and "Midnight," both Aesop's Fable cartoons; and "Two Minutes to Go," Knute Rockne Football Series.

Mr. Gerke also is marketing the Pathasound, made by Victor Animatograph Corporation. The entire equipment of Model 12A is housed in a single case, with detachable sides so that the speaker may be placed under the projection screen. The projector has 500 watt illumination and there is an electropneumatic governor. The amplifier is mounted on the baseboard with the projector, 3 stage 5 tube type, 7 1-2 watt output, with volume sufficient for 500 to 1,000 persons and equipped with tone and volume controls. The speaker is tuned to the amplifier. The price quoted is $395 complete, the total weight of the equipment in the case 52 pounds.

Delaware and Maryland Exhibitors Get Together

Members of the Independent Motion Picture Owners of Delaware and the eastern shore of Maryland have returned to their theatres after a convention at the Rehoboth hotel in Wilmington last week at which by-laws were adopted.

A. Joseph DeFiore of Wilmington presided. Among the speakers were George P. Aarons, secretary of the MPTO of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware; Gerrish Gassoway, Delaware chairman of the NRA; and Harris G. Eastburn, Wilmington attorney.

Wilson Resigns Offices In Principal Pictures

Frank R. Wilson, in charge of publicity for the NRA, resigned Friday as vice-president, general manager and a director of Principal Pictures Distributing Corporation. He retains his stock in the company. Mr. Wilson's NRA duties have been extended into the "Buy Now" campaign.

Hynes Heads Publicity Unit Of Gaumont British

Charles F. Hynes on Monday became associated with Arthur Lee's Gaumont British Productions, New York, in charge of advertising, publicity and exploitation.

Equipment Parts Included

Equipment parts which form the principal source of power, such as batteries, are included in the blanket contract which is offered by Erpi. An article in the issue of August 24 of MOTION PICTURE HERALD indicated these parts were not included.

Sturdivant Heads Publicity In San Diego NRA Drive

B. V. Sturdivant, manager of the Fox West Coast theatres in San Diego and Imperial counties, California, is "colonel in charge of publicity" on the San Diego NRA advisory committee which is winding up a signally successful two weeks' campaign. One of Mr. Sturdivant's first acts was the establishment of five publicity bureaus. S. S. Blachly, manager of Pacific National Theatres, was named chairman of the miscellaneous activities bureau. Mr. Sturdivant is a former Indianapolis newspaper man.

Johnston Back, Upholds Doubles

W. Ray Johnston, president of Monogram Pictures, returned to New York Tuesday morning from production conferences in Hollywood with Trem Carr. An informal luncheon was held Tuesday for the press and Monogram's franchise holders, at the new quarters on the 20th floor of the RKO Building at Radio City.

Mr. Johnston remarked upon his return that he "has unbounded faith in President Roosevelt and the NRA, to create a situation that will not retard or eliminate business, regardless of how small or how large." In this connection he declared that "any clause in any contract by any distribution company which inserts therein that their pictures cannot be played on a double feature bill, should and must be an unfair trade practice. Every individual exhibitor in the United States in every individual locality, city, town or community, should be the sole judge of what type of entertainment is best for him and his patrons."

Coast Strike Near End; New Scale

Striking members of the Hollywood production crafts are returning to work as needed by producers, with the general opinion prevailing in the studio center that the strikers have lost out to the producers. Victor Clarke, speaking for the producers, indicated that he is expecting final acceptance of the NRA code for the three crafts affected.

Effective this week, electrical workers, carpenters and truck drivers begin a 36-hour week and a new wage scale which represents substantially a 12½ per cent increase in hourly pay. Approximately 3,000 men are affected by the agreement, embodying a change from the eight-hour day at an average of $1.03½ per hour to a six-hour day at $1.16 per hour for electrical workers and carpenters. Truck drivers will get an average of $30 for 36 hours, which compares with a previous 60 cents per hour. Additional employment is seen as a result of the reduced hours, made possible through the amended studio agreement reached in New York last week.

Producers meeting with the Academy on the code situation are firm in their contention that actors could not be limited to 30 days' notice before negotiating new contracts. They insist the clause as originally written into the code must be retained.

First Division Adding Roadshows, Two Exchanges

First Division is planning to have two roadshows in addition to its regular releases, Harry H. Thomas, president, announced this week. The company is doubling its exploitation budget for its productions for the year, among which are "One Year Later," starring Mary Brian; "Dance Girl Dance," with Evalyn Knapp, Gloria Shea, Alan Dinehart; "I Have Lived," with a cast headed by Anita Page, Allen Vincent, Alan Dinehart; "Throne of the Gods," Himalayan expedition picture with narrative by Lowell Thomas; "Picture Brides," starring Dorothy Mackaill; and "Notorious But Nice," with Marian Marsh, Betty Compson, Donald Dillaway.

First Division's exchanges will be increased to twelve shortly by the addition of one at Boston and another at New Haven.

Rosenberg Vice-President Of Exhibitors' Screen Service

Ben Rosenberg, personal representative on the Coast of George Hirliman, president of Exhibitors' Screen Service, has been named vice-president of the company with headquarters in New York. He plans to leave for a tour of the company exchanges within a month, at which time he will appoint a successor to himself on the Coast. The company has moved its New York office from 203 West 42d street to 1776 Broadway.

Previews at Warner Branches

Thirty-seven Warner exchanges on Wednesday held previews of 1933-34 Vitaphone short product. The national preview was set by Norman H. Moray, Vitaphone sales manager, in order to give exhibitors a first-hand look at the new shorts.

CODE CLAUSES BANNING DUALS AND PREMIUMS FACE VIGOROUS FIGHT

Large Circuits Call Premiums Unfair; Small Houses Declare Practice Vital; Attorney and Editor Ready to Defend Gifts

The oft disputed merchandising practice of presenting premiums and "giveaways" to patrons will occupy a choice spot on the schedule of industry code issues to be threshed out at the public hearing on a motion picture code next Tuesday at Washington.

Clauses in the code signed by Sidney R. Kent and in that submitted by Charles L. O'Reilly both call for curtailment, even abandonment of the practice, but organized opposition by the manufacturers of novelties, and probably by exhibitors who operate small theatres, will be voiced before Deputy Administrator Sol A. Rosenblatt.

In the Kent distribution code, distributors would refuse to enter into contracts with exhibitors who do not agree to maintain a minimum admission price, or who lower the scale by giving rebates in the form of premiums, lotteries, gifts.

Zoning Factor in O'Reilly Code

The O'Reilly clause, however, would permit such methods "as approved by the local maximum clearance or zoning schedules;" but "where there is no local zoning or arbitration board, for a particular city, town or community, the ruling of 75 per cent of the exhibitors shall prevail."

A spokesman for the exhibitors' committee predicted that Washington may even eliminate completely all reference in the code to premiums and giveaways.

Those of the small exhibitors favoring giveaways and manufacturers of novelties used at theatres, will be aided in their fight by one of the nation's foremost premium advocates, lawyer and editor Frank Waggoner, who as head policy-shaper of Premium Practice,—reputedly the voice of premium makers—has already opened up hostilities along the Washington front, and elsewhere.

A committee of motion picture premium dealers will also be on hand at Washington to defend their business, which in three eastern territories alone is understood to represent gross sales totaling $5,000,000 annually.

Admittedly fighting with the purpose of preserving the premium manufacturing business which he serves, Editor Waggoner has set out to defend this form of advertising and is using as a defense an argument on the psychology of premium advertising, and its "important relation" to the small retailer, or theatre owner in competing with the large interests.

To the editors of Tide Magazine the other day Mr. Waggoner told his side of the story about premiums. It was said the squabble on the relative virtue and merits of premiums was so befuddling that Administrator Simpson proclaimed his desire to have the Government refuse to permit anything about premiums to get into codes.

Reporting, in part, on their conversation with Mr. Waggoner, whose remarks have some relation to premium distribution in the motion picture industry, the editors of Tide said, in part:

". . . With his car to the ground, Editor Waggoner listens for the leaks of anti-premium talk from trade meetings, at the first chirp gathers up his data, straightway goes to put his case before them." Tide also said that "Mr. Waggoner is scheduled to appear at the motion picture pow-wow."

Continuing, the Tide editors reported: "Brooding theme through all that Editor Waggoner has to say for premiums lies in the tragedy of the little fellow whose code is being made for him by the big fellows. . .

"In addition, thereto, Waggoner's plea (to the NRA) for the preservation of premiums stresses the financial investment in his industry, the amount paid to its workers, the number of work hours furnished to men and women 'who would otherwise be unemployed.' (1) something between $165,000,000 and $200,000,000 is spent annually for merchandise and services (at wholesale cost) for premium purposes; (2) 9,375,000 work days are given over to making them; (3) $55,000,000 is paid out to labor for its part; (4) premiums bulk up to about 800,000 tons of freight per year. . . ."

Much of the $165,000,000 to $200,000,000 which was said to be spent annually for premium merchandise is expended by motion picture exhibitors.

"On its own merits and virtues—aside for what it means to labor, little business, railroads, etc.—the case of premium advertising is delineated by Waggoner and his association in six points," reported Tide, as follows:

"(1) Premiums are fully recognized as an established branch of advertising.

"(2) They are an alternative to an equal or greater expenditure upon some other form of advertising.

"(3) They do not increase the retail price because of their use any more than do other forms of advertising, nor do they depreciate the quality of products any more than would the other forms.

There is Wrigley, for instance, than whom none is finer, who has bought 1,500,000 electric clocks to use as dealer premiums; 5,000,000 teaspoons as consumer premiums, and carloads of watches."

RKO Theatres on Wednesday came out in favor of double features. This is the first instance of a large distributor openly announcing approval of the practice. Columbia and Universal occasionally have indicated approval of duals. The company's decision lends considerable weight to the defense of double features by independents.

Harold B. Franklin, head of RKO Theatres, said, "We have theatres where patronage demands double features and they should have the right to play them."

Independents in Both Production and Distribution Ready to Fight for Double Feature as Life Preserver

The independent production and distribution branch of the motion picture industry is going to the industry's NRA public code hearing at Washington Tuesday prepared for the greatest battle over double featuring.

From Hollywood to the Atlantic seaboard, independents were gathering statistical ammunition and massing thousands of petitions from the public to defeat any clause which would curtail the showing of two pictures on one bill.

Claiming that their very business was threatened, the independents evidently were preparing documentary evidence to substantiate their charges. Some of the "evidence" follows:

1. Independent producers said they will be forced to cease production activities, and, accordingly, already have served two weeks' notice to this effect on 1,620 production employees.

2. Similar notices will be served on employees of 63 independent exchanges, according to the independent producers' association.

3. 1,400 theatres handling independent product and adhering to the dual bill policy may consequently be closed, they said.

4. 10,000 persons concerned with independent production, distribution and exhibition would be thrown out of their jobs, according to the I.M.P.P.A.

5. Ban would involve $28,000,000 a year, said W. Ray Johnston.

On the other hand, Joseph I. Schnitzer said there is "plenty of room for independent producers with single bills." Henry Ginsberg, vice-president of the Roach studios, said abandonment of dual bills would increase the demand for short features.

The Independent Motion Picture Producers' Association late last week launched a fight. Announcement was made Monday, on behalf of 13 independent producers, that two weeks notice had been given employees of these studios, totaling some 1,620, together with the advice that they "look for new jobs," in the event double features are barred.

The action was taken to mean an attempt to convince the National Recovery Administration that the very purpose of the code would be defeated through automatic unemployment of so many persons.

Independents Favor Double Bills

Independent producers and distributors for years have defended the double bill policy.

Typical of the opinion of independent producers and distributors was the statement made this week by W. Ray Johnston, Monogram president.

"The adoption of the single feature," said Mr. Johnston, "would mean that no city or town in the United States would require more than 325, and if only 325 are necessary to take care of the motion picture entertainment of the United States, it would then mean the elimination of approximately 225 features to be made by many of the smaller major companies as well as all independent producers. These 225 will gross in the United States $28,000,000. Let

ADMISSION RAISES UNDERWAY, BUT ONLY AS LOCAL SITUATIONS MERIT

Exhibitors Point to Increased Operating Costs with Higher Wages and More Employees, and Growth of Buying Power

With the buying power of the nation reputedly increased by almost $5,000,000,000 over what it was a year ago, exhibitors both large and small, affiliated and unaffiliated, are for the second time within three months seriously considering the advisability of increasing box-office admission scales.

According to the American Federation of Labor, which is responsible for the computation of the nation's increased purchasing power, more than 2,033,000 men and women have returned to work since March 4, when President Roosevelt set out on his program. Combined incomes for the month of July of wage-earners and salaried workers have been placed by the Federation at $287,000,000 more than last March.

That this ultimately must mean more money at the box-office is a fact that the theatre man is not overlooking. In addition, major circuits, independent theatres and small circuits all over the country have signed the President's blanket agreement to increase wages for theatre employees, to hire additional help and to reduce working hours. These factors, they point out, call for increased theatre operating cost, and many exhibitors now feel that, in line with generally rising commodity prices, they should be entitled to cover, in some measure, this increased cost.

Increases Underway

In many sections appreciable increases in admission prices already have been made. National circuit headquarters in New York are contemplating parallel action but they are giving careful consideration to local conditions. No blanket raising of admissions on a national scale is considered advisable by most exhibition executives in New York. They are unanimous in advising exhibitors in every type of locality to give close study to their communities, their needs and conditions.

In July Harold B. Franklin, president of the RKO Theatre companies, said: "While I feel confident that prices eventually must be raised, this is not the correct time."

Last week Mr. Franklin announced that RKO will increase admission prices wherever possible in the next few weeks. Loew, Skouras and Warner's also are committed to the move.

"During the depression," Mr. Franklin said last week, "admission prices were reduced on an average of approximately 11 per cent, but with increased buying power on the part of the public, coupled with a corresponding increase of theatre expense under NRA provisions, it is apparent that the reduction must be regained. The dollars and cents reduction in average admission prices was about 4 cents, and some of the reduction can be accounted for by the fact that certain theatres playing stage shows were shifted into a straight picture policy."

Publix is planning to leave the entire question of admission scale raises to local conditions, according to Ralph A. Kohn, Paramount Publix vice-president, and head of theatre operations. Mr. Kohn's office declared this week that there is a very definite need for increased admissions, due not only to added theatre operating costs under the NRA, but to the exorbitant overhead costs of elaborate stage shows.

Warner's already has begun to raise prices in key situations where conditions warrant. Joseph Bernhard, head of the company's theatre circuit, said this week: "An additional increase affecting approximately 20 per cent of the circuit will go into effect this month," he said. "The individual theatre man knows his situation better than anyone else; we in the home office can only advise him. If this action is feasible in localities where costs demand it, then prices should be raised."

Gradwell Sears and A. W. Smith, Warner sales directors, for some time have been advocating increased admission prices. In many instances, they pointed out this week, exhibitors have been able to raise their admission scales for a special picture and maintain them after the picture has finished its run.

Not Warranted, Says O'Reilly

A different view is offered by Charles L. O'Reilly, president of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce, who feels that despite the vast increase in employment, wages, salaries and buying power, the public generally, or a great majority of it, has been through too long a siege of unemployment and hard times.

"Just because there have been a few more people at the box-offices of the country during the past few weeks is no excuse for raising admissions," Mr. O'Reilly said.

While George Skouras intimated that discussions among theater men in his circuit scarcely had passed the evolutionary stages with no set policy resulting as yet, he did say he believed prices have been reduced unwisely and far too much.

"As a whole, admission prices never should have been cut the way they were," he said. "Now is the time to recoup what we have lost for so many months. Distributors have never asked such high prices for their film product as they are now, and for that reason, if for no other, the exhibitor is entitled to an appreciable increase in order to protect his business. It would be a ridiculous way of doing business—and some of us have been doing it—to sell product for less money than we pay for it. Of course, if prices are raised they should be raised proportionately according to the requirements of the individual theatre."

Jay Emanuel, national treasurer of the MPTOA, said: "There should be a minimum admission price restriction of not less than 15 cents for adults, for matinees, afternoons or evenings. This business has always been at the mercy of cut-price and cut-throat fly-by-night individuals."

In both industry codes, submitted to Washington two weeks ago, exhibitors are specifically granted the right to increase or decrease scales as they see fit, except under certain prohibitions.

"It is my frank opinion that in almost 85 per cent of the total theatres involved, admissions have been lowered to a ruinous degree," said Ed Kuykendall, president of the MPTOA, this week. "In complying with the NRA code it may be necessary for some theatres to increase admission prices. I am not prepared to say whether the public is ready for this or not. I do know that in a large percentage of areas in the United States, the general public, or the average working man is not earning enough to justify an advance in admissions."

Speaking generally, Mr. Kuykendall said that commencing with early autumn theatres should advance their scales to a reasonable degree, depending on what they are able to do in this respect.

"In the Southern territory nothing can be done until cotton and other products begin moving, the latter part of September and early October," he said.

Circuits Adding to Prices, and So Are Independents, but With No General Blanket Policy; Exhibitor Leaders Urge Care

In the field, in small and large cities, admission price raising is well underway. In many instances increases have been made by affiliated theatres, but in most it appears that the independent exhibitor has launched out upon the program by himself.

Theatre owners in Akron, Ohio, last week named a committee to take definite action on admission price advances and film clearances, and 23 neighborhood exhibitors, through the Akron Theatre Owners Association, have formulated a plan, subject to approval and acceptance by the exchanges, covering a graduated upward revision.

Increased admissions in Birmingham, Ala., averaging 20 per cent went into effect at several downtown houses. In Cincinnati, however, three first-runs inaugurated reduced price scales, on account of the 10 per cent state tax on admissions of 41 cents and more.

Cleveland subsequent runs advanced prices late in August and double bills were cut to once a week.

Ohio Increases Urged

The MPTOA of Ohio sent a letter to all subsequent-run exhibitors in Columbus urging them to increase admissions proportionately with increases made in other parts of the state. An agreement by a committee of several major and independent circuits, stated that on or after September 1, the availability of pictures to subsequent runs would be based upon a definite scale of minimum adult prices in effect after 6 p. m. daily, with the minimum admission at 28 cents, including tax, on a picture having 30 days clearance. All Columbus first-runs have made appreciable increases in prices.

The first raise in prices in the Denver territory in several months has been made at the Fox in Longmont, from 25 to 35 cents. The Fox in Detroit has raised its scale from 25 to 55 cents. In Detroit subsequent runs have been asked to follow the same policy set in Columbus, with a 40-cent minimum at night for pictures with 28 days clearance. First-run houses having vaudeville or stage shows are asked to set 50 cents as a minimum after 6 p. m.

Attempts by the independent and downtown houses in Kansas City to stabilize admission scales hit a snag by refusal of a majority of the Independent Theatre Owners to abide by a previous agreement to raise their minimum to 15 cents, provided first runs would adopt a 40-cent low. Wholesale rises are not expected in Kansas and Missouri, though upward revision may follow recovery in individual cases.

In New York City, RKO increased the Radio City Music Hall admission top from 75 to 85 cents for weekdays, the Saturday and Sunday top of 99 cents remaining. Loew's Metropolitan and the Brooklyn Paramount are said to be contemplating boosting their prices from 65 to 75 cents for matinees, and from 75 to 85 for nights.

In Seattle one first-run, the Fifth Avenue, already has increased its prices 25 per cent.

Independent San Francisco theatres are understood to oppose admission increases now.

Increase to 40 cents for general evening admission for all theatres in the Independent MPTO of Delaware and eastern Maryland was voted, effective September 11.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

THE stage is getting no place in a hurry. From Minsky burlesque on Broadway to Highland in upstate New York may be no distance at all, geographically or otherwise, but the theatre has negotiated the three-hour run on the Central quicker than it takes to unloosen a hook-and-eye on a pair of tights of a Minsky "mamma."

Last Saturday evening, weather and sheriffs permitting, the nudist Out-of-Door Club at Highland gave an "undress" rehearsal of "Barely Proper," one-act comedy in which the characters wore nothing. The non-member public could not buy tickets, even from speculators. The loss in ticket sales, however, was made up in savings in costume costs.

The story is that of a young Englishman engaged to a German girl who neglects to inform him that her family are nudists. He is alone in his fiancee's living room when her two brothers walk in in their birthday suits. They cannot understand his pleas with them to leave quickly before someone sees them.

Cousins and aunts begin arriving, in the all-together, and he is convinced momentarily that he has gone mad, or something, until the girl tells him that unless he drops his "horrid English thoughts" and gets ready for tea by undressing, the engagement is off. The relatives had been given to understand that he was a nudist, and the tea is in his honor. Evidently the prospective groom stayed for tea and enjoyed it immensely.

A LETTER, purporting to come from someone representing John D. Rockefeller, Sr., asks Robert Benchley how he expects to spend his forty-fourth birthday.

"Mr. Rockefeller," says the letter, "is getting pretty sick of having his birthday routines pried into, especially as he is always doing the same thing, and he would like to get a few fresh ideas on birthday spending, just to spring on the reporters (and newsreel men) on his ninety-fifth, next year."

Mr. Benchley advises Mr. Rockefeller to spend his birthday noisily for a change. This alternative to the usual "quiet" birthdays of most prominent people would find Mr. Rockefeller banging tin pans, twirling watchman's rattles and screaming at the top of his lungs.

"On my forty-fourth birthday," said Mr. Benchley, "I expect, as is my custom, to arise at eleven, drink four glasses of ice water and go back to bed again until noon. Anybody who speaks to me to offer felicitations does so at his own risk. I now bite, instead of just snarl."

After rambling on at length in this ferocious vein, Mr. Benchley concluded with the observation that a red rag is soporific to a bull compared to the effect of a birthday on his nervous system. And so, at the end of his forty-fourth birthday, he expects to retire very late in perfectly terrible condition, so that when he awakens on the first day of his forty-fifth year, he shall hardly be able to face it. In fact, he may not face it.

The efforts of a half-dozen super-showmen would be needed by motion picture theatres on Atlantic City's boardwalk to compete successfully with the entertainment program offered by the management of the Steel Pier, where, for a half dollar, one may be amused continuously for some 16 hours. A recent bill was typical, offering—all for the one general admission—three of the newest motion pictures: "Pilgrimage," "Paddy - the - Next-Best-Thing" and "The Kiss Before the Mirror." In addition, Rudy Vallee and his Connecticut Yankees played dance and concert music, likewise Rimac's Havana orchestra and Bert Estlow's band. There was a four-a-day vaudeville show, headed by Morton Downey; a complete minstrel show; Hardeen, "the master mind of mystery"; circus acts; an opera ("Pagliacci"); Larry Funk's orchestra; "thrill acts"; animal nursery; dozens of exhibits; "Hollywood Exposition"; museum of war relics; sea elephants, and what not. The maximum daily capacity is about 75,000. Weekly revenue could run as high as $400,000.

THERE USED TO BE an ancient, eminent Roman deity named Janus, who had two faces. A glance at ten little photographs in the current issue of Vanity Fair would seem to indicate the revival of Latin mythology in the socalled "artless" little Hollywood.

Midway in Conde Nast's smart magazine there are presented to the reading and star-worshipping public, ten of the cinema's better known "beauties"—as they look on the screen and as they are au naturel, when caught on the hoof—sans makeup (Greta Garbo, Elissa Landi, Jeanette MacDonald, Janet Gaynor, Joan Crawford, Constance Bennett, Katharine Hepburn, Tallulah Bankhead, Clara Bow and Lupe Velez).

After a peek at the freckles, crooked noses, thick lips, spotchy skin and painful expressions adorning the faces of this group of "young" Hollywood "beauties," we lost forever our very last illusion about the maidens of our production capital. And, lest any stray distorted vision remain intact, the editors advise that the ten "real" photographs which are compared with "reel" ones, "are by no means isolated phenomena, chosen with malicious intent."

Furthermore, we learn from the accompanying caption that one beautiful Hollywood lady—not shown in the group—has a cast in her eye and is bow-legged; a famous male heartbreaker had to be outfitted with an entire new set of teeth by his company before they could allow him to face a camera; another devastating Don Juan recently had his ears trimmed down and pinned back, thereby removing his resemblance to a clipper ship, full sail; and the number of handsome young "juveniles" who wear toupees is what keeps the wig-makers going these hard times.

Even Vanity Fair admits that the thought of what our glorious stars must look like when they first go to Hollywood—prior to all eye, ear, nose, throat and figure transformations—is somewhat appalling, albeit encouraging to the rest of us.

TEXT OF SUPPLY DEALERS' CODE

lations and shall designate such agents and delegate such authority as may be necessary to effectuate such purposes.

4. Such Administration Board is also set up to cooperate with the Administrator in making investigations as to the functioning and observance of any provisions of this code, at its own instance or on written and signed complaint by any person affected, and to report the same to the Administrator.

5. If formal complaint is made to the Administration Board that the provisions of this code have been violated by any dealer, the proper supervisory agency shall investigate the facts and to that end may cause such examination or audit to be made as may be deemed necessary.

6. As and when any question shall be deliberated upon by the Administration Board with respect to the unfair trade practices by dealers, which involve manufacturers of such equipment, two duly authorized representatives from The Theatre Equipment and Supply Manufacturers Association shall thereupon and only with reference to such questions in the interim become members of said Administration Board.

7. The Administration Board may from time to time present to the President recommendations based on conditions in the industry as they may develop from time to time which will tend to effectuate the operation of the provisions of this code and the policy of the Act.

8. After the completion of any investigation that the Administration Board may make upon the signed complaint of any person, if the findings of the investigator show that the complaint was unfounded, the party making the complaint may be assessed the expenses of the investigation and the cost of the same shall be billed immediately and shall be payable upon receipt of the statement. If the investigators report that the complaint is warranted and justified, the party guilty of violation of the code, or any amendment thereto or any rule or regulation issued thereunder and approved by the Administrator of the National Industrial Recovery Act shall pay all expenses of the investigation.

9. Any dealer may participate in any endeavors of the Administration Board in the preparation of any revisions of, or additions or supplements to, this code by accepting and paying the proper pro rata share of the cost and responsibility of creating and administering it.

10. The Administration Board is hereby designated the agency for administering, supervising, and promoting the performance of the provisions of this code for dealers in motion-picture theatre supplies and equipment.

ARTICLE IV

Participation in Code

Any existing dealer as herein defined, or dealer who shall become such hereafter, whether a member of any association or not, may participate in the code and any subsequent revisions, additions, or amendments thereof, by indicating his intention of fully subscribing to the provisions of the code and by assuming the responsibilities of such participation.

ARTICLE V

Unfair Competition

1. No dealer shall sell at a price destructive of the capital investment and likewise of the earning power of labor; and no dealer shall enter upon or engage in any price cutting.

2. No dealer shall sell, offer for sale, or advertise any service, or exchange any product, at a price or upon such terms or conditions that will result in the customer paying for the services or goods received less than the "cost" to the dealer, determined in accordance with the uniform and standard method of defining "costs," hereinbefore prescribed, provided, however, that dropped lines of merchandise, seconds or inventories which must be converted into cash to meet emergency needs may be disposed of in such manner and on such terms and conditions only as the Administration Board may approve and as are necessary to move such products in the buyer's hands.

3. No dealer shall sell directly or indirectly by any means whatsoever any service or any product of the industry covered by the provisions of this Article at a price lower or at discounts greater or on more favorable terms of payment than those provided in current schedules set up by the Administration Board with the approval of the Administrator of the National Recovery Administration.

4. Nothing in the preceding paragraphs shall be deemed to prevent the extending of quantity discounts for quantity purchases, provided, however, that such quantity discounts must be predicated on actual quantity purchases and not on estimated requirements over a period of time, and provided that no increased discounts for quantity shall reduce the price below the fair minimum prices defined in paragraphs 1, 2, 3 of this article.

5. Quotations and billings to purchasers by Dealers shall be at unit prices. The practice of lump-sum bidding and billing shall be deemed to be unfair competition.

6. The following practices shall also be deemed to be unfair competition within the meaning of the Act:

A. Advertising (written, verbal, printed, radio, or display) which misrepresents merchandise, values, or services; or selling methods which tend to mislead the consumer.

B. Reference in Dealers' advertisements to the goods, services or prices of competing retailers shall be regarded as an act of unfair competition.

C. The use of, participation in, publishing or broadcasting of, any statement or representation which lays claim to a policy of continuing practice of generally underselling competitors.

D. The sale by Dealers of any product of a penal institution.

E. The giving of secret rebates, refunds, credits, or unearned discounts, whether in the form of money or otherwise, or the giving of premiums or extending to certain purchasers special services or privileges not extended to all purchasers under like terms and conditions.

F. The offerings of allowances on trade-in equipment in excess of the allowances scheduled by the Administration Board shall be considered a violation of this code. The Administration Board shall set, from time to time, a schedule of allowance prices on used equipment, such prices to be based on age of equipment and model of same. Identifying factor shall be serial number of such equipment taken in trade.

G. The defamation of a competitor by words or acts, falsely imputing to him dishonorable conduct, inability to perform contracts, or questionable credit standing, or by the false disparagement of the grade or quality of his merchandise.

H. The payment to an employee of a customer or prospective customer of a commission or consideration of any character for the purpose of inducing, or compensating for, a sale.

I. The absorption of freight charges or any portion thereof.

J. Commercial bribery in whatever form it may be attempted, whether by giving commissions, prizes, premiums or excessive entertainment as an act of commercial bribery to anyone in connection with the sale, purchase, or use of merchandise, or as an inducement thereto.

K. Sale or contract to sell in violation of the provisions of this Article shall be deemed an unfair method of competition within the meaning of the Act.

L. The practice of rebuilding used equipment and selling it as new, the changing of any factory serial number, shall be a violation of this code.

M. No dealer shall misrepresent or make oral or written guarantees that conflict with or exceed the manufacturers' guarantees or recommended applications of his product.

N. Original manufacturers' identification make or number on equipment or accessories shall not be altered.

ARTICLE VI

Statistics and Reports

1. With a view to keeping the President of the United States and the Administrator informed as to the observance or nonobservance of this code and as to whether the dealers are taking appropriate steps to effectuate in all respects the declared policy of the National Industrial Recovery Act, each dealer shall, not less than once in each year, prepare and file with the Administration Board an earnings statement and balance sheet in a form approved by said Administration Board or in a form acceptable to any nationally known banking institution. Each Dealer shall likewise prepare and file with the Administration Board such current information concerning wage and salary rates, hours of work, stocks on hand, sales and prices as the Administration Board may from time to time require for the purpose of determining conditions within the industry. The failure to furnish the required data, or the furnishing of false or misleading information, or the making of false statements relating thereto, shall be regarded as a violation of this code of fair competition.

2. Except as otherwise provided in the National Industrial Recovery Act all statistics, data, and information filed in accordance with the provisions of Article III shall be confidential, and the statistics, data, and information of one dealer shall not be revealed to any other dealer except that, for the purpose of facilitating the administration and enforcement of the provisions of this code, the Administration Board or their duly authorized representative shall have access to any and all statistics, data, and information that may be furnished in accordance with the provisions of this code.

3. The Administration Board shall establish uniform credit practices, including a uniform plan of installment sales, which when approved by the members of the Administration Board and by the Administrator of the National Industrial Recovery Act shall be binding upon all dealers.

ARTICLE VII

Amendments

1. This code and all the provisions thereof are expressly made subject to the right of the President, in accordance with the provision of clause 10 (b) of the National Industrial Recovery Act, from time to time to cancel or modify any order, approval, license, rule, or regulation, issued under Title 1 of said Act, and specifically to the right of the President to cancel or modify his approval of this code or any conditions imposed by him upon his approval thereof.

2. Such provisions of this code as are not required to be included therein by the National Industrial Recovery Act may, with the approval of the President, be modified or eliminated as changes in the circumstances or experience may indicate. It is contemplated that from time to time supplementary provisions to this code or additional codes will be submitted for the approval of the President to prevent unfair

CERTIFICATE SYSTEM IS PROPOSED TO REDUCE BRITISH QUOTA ILLS

Graham Suggests Distributors Be Permitted to Buy Certificates in Respect of Product Above Their Quota Needs

by BERNARD CHARMAN
of London Correspondent Staff

A foreign renting house is the latest medication proposed for that irritant pricking the skin of the British motion picture industry—the Quota Act.

Exhibitors are chafing at the demand the act imposes upon them of screening product whose only effect is to lose them business; producers are distressed by the manner in which cheap Quota productions are discrediting British pictures generally; and American distributing companies are racking their brains to find a way out of the impasse which obliges them to handle product which in many cases lacks commercial quality. This was even mentioned as a possible subject for discussion at the ill-fated World Economic Conference.

A deputation of the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association has visited an official of the Board of Trade to discuss the possibility of an amendment to the Act to guarantee the quality of quota pictures.

The Film Group of the Federation of British Industries, representing the producers, also has for a long time been endeavoring to impress upon the same government department the necessity for setting a minimum production cost (nominally £10,000 sterling) on quota films.

Graham Proposes New System

Now J. C. Graham, chief of Paramount activities in Great Britain, has set the cat among the pigeons with a revolutionary proposal, which, says he, will regulate the situation to the satisfaction of all parties. Comes into the field, therefore, the foreign renting house.

In brief, what Mr. Graham suggests is that foreign—let us say, rather, American—distributors should be permitted to purchase Quota certificates from major British producers in respect of British product above their own quota needs, allowing the producer to retain rights of distribution for his own affiliated organizations, plus, of course, the profits of such distribution.

The major British studios, he argues, are producing films far in excess of their own requirements to fulfill their Quota obligation, and his plan would insure maintenance of the desired ratio of home product against imported pictures, without encouraging over-production of English-made films of a quality frequently well below present accepted standards.

Advantages of the Graham proposal work out, according to its author, as follows:

It would eliminate production of a surplus of films of doubtful quality—additional finance would accrue to the more stable production outfits, enabling quality to be still further improved—would provide a steady supply of box office product of British origin for the exhibitor, and would maintain the spirit as well as the letter of the Quota Act.

The proposal is indorsed by two of the leaders in the home production field—John Maxwell, chairman and managing director of British International, and Michael Balcon, general manager in charge of production at the Gaumont-British studios, both of whom claim to have figured out the problem on parallel lines. Balcon says that an identically similar scheme was put before the then President of the Board of Trade when the Quota plan was first under discussion some years ago. The President, he says, was strongly in favor of it, but it was not put into the Act for a variety of political reasons.

His opinion is that the small producers, with their "quickies" made strictly to the letter of the law, prejudice the recognition of the better class British pictures and affect the reputation of the entire programs of the American houses that buy them in. "I believe that Mr. Graham's scheme would go a long way towards standardizing the quality of British pictures on a much higher basis," declares Mr. Balcon.

See Inducement to Producers

John Maxwell also holds the view that the holding of Quota certificates, and not distribution, should be the crux of the Act. He had, he says, made a suggestion about eighteen months ago that Quota certificates should be transferable—and that they should be granted to American renters here on the understanding that they would give British releases in the United States, in the proportion of one British film for four Quota certificates.

The proposal outlined by Mr. Graham would be simpler to operate, Mr. Maxwell admits, and would be an inducement to the producers to make more and better product. He doubts that the independent producer would be any worse off. "He is in the business to make money," says Mr. Maxwell, "and, as he has no subsidy at the moment, I fail to see that this proposal will affect him adversely."

Of course there is the reverse side of the picture. Naturally both Gaumont-British and British International Pictures are interested in the proposal, as they would be in any that suggested putting money into their pockets, but what of the independents who have found in the manufacture of quota films for American renting concerns a profitable field of exploitation?

Their point of view already has been forcibly expressed by Sam Smith, chief of British Lion (which also distributes its own output), and Julius Hagen, who operates the Twickenham studio. Both declare Mr. Graham's ideas unworkable and his arguments fallacious.

Sam Smith argues that the plan would react to the advantage of three concerns only (his own being the third), and that it could not be expected that legislation would be introduced to discriminate in favor of specific companies. The only practical way to insure better quota product would be by fixing a minimum production cost as guide, though even this could not be expected to be infallible.

Hagen characterizes the plan as "a gratuitous insult to the British industry—because it reflects the prevailing contempt felt for the product of British studios by the American renting firms." He accuses the distributors of deliberate efforts to discredit British films, and says they expect quota films to be made for them at a cost of £1 a foot! Reciprocity is the only real solution to the problem, he affirms. If Britain takes American films at high prices, the United States in return should take British pictures on equal terms, if they are of the same merit, as in many cases they undoubtedly are.

What attitude the exhibitor is going to adopt has not yet been made clear, though Sam Smith outlined part of the showman's case when I discussed the matter with him. And this was it:

When the independent exhibitor complains that he cannot get good British pictures for quota purposes, because the best product is controlled by the circuits run in conjunction with Gaumont-British and BIP, his real grouse is that he cannot get the best films, either British or foreign, owing to circuit opposition. If the available quota product is to be concentrated in the hands of the British distributors he will be even worse off than before, as he will be more at their mercy than ever.

Paramount's London Executive Says Large British Studios Are Producing Far in Excess of Requirements under Quota

Film Business Develops In Dairen, Manchuria

The demand for American motion pictures in Manchuria has grown in spite of the increasing production of Japanese films, according to the American vice-consul at Dairen. While most of the American films shown are talkers, not more than 40 per cent of the Japanese imports are sound films.

No American companies have direct representatives or branch offices in Dairen, but three American concerns have their main offices in Shanghai, distributing through a Russian agency. The demand for projectors in the Manchurian city, which has a population of 275,000, has been largely satisfied, the vice-consul reported. Most Dairen theatres are equipped with Japanese projectors. Three houses use American makes.

Creditor Meetings Postponed

The meeting in New York of creditors of Paramount-Publix, scheduled for Tuesday, was postponed until this Friday, when the meeting will be held in the offices of Referee Henry K. Davis. An adjourned special meeting was scheduled for Wednesday and an adjourned meeting of Publix Enterprises creditors was set for Thursday.

Laboratory Code Is Up to Johnson proposed that overtime work be paid for at 1½ times the regular rate.

Mr. Scoppa also proposed that the number of apprentices be fixed at not more than 5 per cent of all employees. Laboratory representatives expressed thir willingness to limit the number, but preferred 10 per cent, and also were willing to have established a shorter period during which apprentices would receive less than the minimum rates of pay.

Questions by Mr. Rosenblatt brought out that the total number employed in laboratories is about 3,500. Of this number, Mr. Scoppa declared, 1,558 normally are employed in plants in New York and New Jersey. The employment in that area now is about 1,000, two-thirds of whom, he said, are receiving more than the minimum rates proposed in the code, some of them twice as much. Other laboratories, however, he added, are paying about one-half of the proposed scale.

Some of the plants have increased pay rates during the depression, it was said, and most of them are attempting to care for all employees by staggering the work, one plant guaranteeing its employees pay for 26 hours a week even though they may work only a fraction of that time.

At the suggestion of Mr. Scoppa, the code will carry a provision that no pay rates applicable to July 1 shall be reduced as a result of the shortening of hours of labor. He also sought the inclusion on the code control committee of two employees, to be elected by the employees, to which the association representatives willingly agreed.

A number of changes were suggested by Herbert A. Huebner, of the laboratory association, most of which were minor changes in wording, but providing also for the expansion of the list of unfair practices to include the making of unauthorized copies and the acquisition by a laboratory of a substantial interest in a raw stock manufacturing business which would enable the purchase of raw stock at a lower price than that charged competitors.

A communication was read into the record from Cinema Laboratory Association seeking exemption of producers operating their own laboratories and not engaged in commercial work for others.

Eastman Seeks Exemption

Exemption of Eastman Kodak laboratories handling 16 mm. film was asked by Adolph Steuber on the ground that the laboratories did no commercial work but merely developed narrow film for amateurs, the cost of developing being included in the film. This was subject to some opposition from labor representatives, and it also was pointed out by Mr. Rosenblatt that plans were under consideration in the trade for the establishment of theatres using 16 mm. film, in which event Eastman might become a competitor of the commercial plants.

Opposition to weekly rates as against hourly wages was voiced by Alan E. Freedman, president of the laboratory association, who declared weekly rates would result in a marked reduction in the number of employees, since they would make the cost of operation fluctuate and under the existing scale of rates it would be impossible for the plants to operate. There was no objection to a weekly rate, he said, but it should not be "far in excess of our ability to pay."

An apparent effort to enlarge the scope of the jurisdictional dispute between the various laboratory unions was seen in a letter from D. W. Trace, president of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, demanding a five-day week of six hours, Monday to Friday, "without exception," and a rate of 90 cents an hour for mechanical workers with one and one-half time for overtime.

Consideration of any such representations of the brotherhood was opposed by Fred Dempsey, general secretary of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes and Motion Picture Machine Operators, who declared no electrical workers were employed in the laboratories.

Universal commendation of Mr. Rosenblatt's work in handling the hearing and in bringing the several groups in the industry to a prompt agreement thereafter was voiced, not only by representatives of both the employers and workers, but also by his advisers from the recovery administration.

The laboratory code will become effective within ten days following its formal approval by the President. Assisting Mr. Rosenblatt at the hearing were: R. H. Cochrane, Universal Pictures, industrial advisor; H. F. Fraser, of the NRA consumers' advisory board; L. M. Wicklein, of the NRA labor advisory board; William P. Farnsworth, of the NRA legal division; Donald K. Wallace, of the NRA research and planning division; Emanuel J. Rosenberg, special advisor.

Mr. Herbert J. Yates, president of Consolidated Film Industries, one of the largest laboratories in the business, was spokesman for the laboratory association. Mr. Scoppa is an official of Local 66 of the laboratory workers.

3. This Code shall become effective not later than ten (10) days after its approval by the President.

ARTICLE VIII

Violations

Violations by any person subject to the publication of this code or any provisions of this code, or of any approved rule or regulation issued thereunder, or of any agreement entered into by him with the aforementioned Administration Board to observe and conform to this code and said rules, is an unfair method of competition and the offenders shall be subject to the penalties imposed by the National Industrial Recovery Act.

ARTICLE IX

Saving Provision

If any court of competent jurisdiction shall finally determine that any Article or section of any Article in this Code shall be invalid, all other Articles and sections of this Code shall nevertheless remain and continue in full force and effect in the same manner as though they had been separately presented for approval by the President.

Hays, Breen, in from Coast, Will Attend Code Hearing

Will H. Hays will return to New York from Hollywood the end of the week and will attend the public hearings on the motion picture industry's code September 12 in Washington.

Joseph I. Breen will follow Mr. Hays to New York to act in an advisory capacity at the public code hearing.

Code Ban on Dual Bills Faces Fight

us assume that there is a 10 per cent profit on this gross—that would leave a matter of $25,000,000 that is expended by the makers of these 225 features in salaries for lithographers, printers, raw stock companies, film laboratories, accessory corporations, theatre supply companies, motion picture operators' union, camera men, directors, actors, writers, electricians, independent producers, independent distributors, employees of the various industries, and a great many other allied industries."

Warns Production Would Drop

Declaring that the object of any code is to put people back to work, Phil Goldstone, independent producer, last week said that any "railroading" of a clause for single features will decrease production and throw thousands out of work in all trades allied with the production of independent motion pictures.

"Furthermore," he said, "if duals are banned those few small theatre men who do survive will be forced to go to the public and say: 'We are charging you more money to see our shows and giving you half as much.'"

All Monogram and Majestic franchise holders received telegrams last week requesting that they mail to Eddie Golden, Monogram sales director, proxies authorizing him to represent them at the code hearings. The Federation of the Motion Picture Industry joined the proxy fight by sending telegrams to nearly 60 independent distributors seeking their support, and it was learned that earlier in the week Charles C. Pettijohn, general counsel to the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, had communicated with several independents for Washington representation.

In reply to the circular sent out by Mr. Golden two weeks ago, urging support of a mass protest against banning double features, his desk was flooded this week by more than 1,500 protests against such a prohibition.

O'Reilly to Head Parade Group

Charles L. O'Reilly, president of the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce, New York City, has accepted the chairmanship for the motion picture theatres' division in the President's NRA parade September 13, in which at least 200,000 business executives and employees of large and small manufacturing and retailing establishments throughout New York are expected to participate, Major General Dennis E. Nolan, in charge of the parade organization, has announced.

The parade, which is being organized according to trade and industry divisions representing all phases of the city's economic life, will climax the intensive effort being made by the local NRA committee under Grover A. Whalen to enlist both employers and employees behind President Roosevelt's nationwide program. Chairmen for 46 other such divisions have been obtained to date.

The industry on Wednesday organized a committee of publicists to prepare for film participation. Members are: Robert Gillham, Paramount; Silas Seadler, MGM; Charles E. McCarthy, Fox; Frank Wilstach, MPPDA; Edward J. Selzer, Warners; Al Friedlander, First Division; Ed Finney, United Artists; Helen Harrison, Monarch.

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 189.—(A) Why is the neutral of an Edison three-wire system grounded? (B) With a grounded three-wire system, will test lamp show light when connected neutral to ground? (C) Would it be possible to remove the neutral fuse of a three-wire circuit without interrupting or affecting the service of the circuit? Explain. (D) What various devices may be used in testing for grounds? (E) What is the really best testing tool and why? (F) What is the most practical testing tool for the projectionist?

Answer to Question No. 182

Bluebook School Question No. 182 was: (A) Is it advisable to try to refill old fuses? (B) What should be done with old fuses and why? (C) Why is it advisable to fuse projection circuits considerably above the normal current used and what should be the limit? (D) Give us your idea of fusing where fuses are used on both primary and secondary sides of a motor-generator serving projection circuits. (E) Should fuses be used on both primary and secondary sides of motor generator or transformer?

The answers were mostly very satisfactory. I gauge answers not always by their actual wording so much as by what range of general knowledge the writer displays upon the question subject. Those answering acceptably were G. E. Doe; C. Rau and S. Evans; D. Danielson; L. Van Buskirk and E. Kroll; W. Ostrum; J. Wentworth; L. F. Evans; B. Doe; H. Haber and A. Breaston; J. T. Tapley; B. L. Blinkensdorfer; H. D. Schofield; O. L. Daris and M. Simms; L. L. Jones; L. M. Oglesby and Son; M. G. Greig, D. V. Peterson, G. McCabe and E. Martinelli; R. Rubin and L. Hendershot; D. Little and J. H. Rathburn; G. Harrison and E. Harlor; A. M. Ginsburg and J. Clark; B. L. Tanner and E. Rymer; C. A. and D. L. Prince and C. F. Kenney; J. C. Richardson; D. L. Banks and L. Summers; D. C. and H. B. Coates; C. Cummings and T. Kelley; R. B. Hammill and E. Hart; F. Butler and D. L. Catlin; G. Johnson and N. T. Kane; A. Ilks and P. L. Jensen; H. C. Lake; L. Graf, F. S. Perkins and H. Miles; S. L. Hill; W. T. Soare and H. R. Baldwin; D. U. Grainger; D. R. Peters and D. Holler; P. K. Daniels and F. F. Franks; T. H. and J. N. Wilson; H. Rogers; D. Emerson; R. Singleton and M. L. George; L. H. Danville and R. H. Patterson; L. Jones and B. L. Banning; P. L. Danby; D. R. Lyon and L. G. Lamb; O. L. Evans; M. R. Davis; M. Spencer and D. T. Arlen; P. Jackson and D. Diglah; W. Oakland, A. T. Jackson and P. Conforti; R. Suler and R. Wheeler; D. L. Sinklow; T. McGruder; G. Farmann; O. Allbright; D. Long.

I think I will give some of the old "students," whose answers, while correct, are not so very well worded, a chance by rewriting their replies without in any way changing their meaning. We will hear from D. R. Peters and D. Holler on Section A:

"It is never advisable to try to refill blown fuses unless they be such as are made especially to be refilled. Fuses are not costly and the refilled one cannot always be depended upon for reliability, whereas the new ones can. We do not believe it is even advisable to use the kind made to be refilled. Too much depends upon fuse reliability to make it worth while. New fuses we have found always to be dependable, if they be properly installed in their contacts."

An opinion with which I fully agree.

To Section B, something like 700 said "throw them away." G. Tinlin said, "Burned-out fuses should be thrown into the waste receptacle immediately they are removed. They have no value. If retained it is always possible they may get mixed with the good fuses and an attempt be made to use them, with consequent annoying delay. When a circuit is out and the show running one usually has not time to examine any fuse except those one must remove. One should know the fuses kept in stock are all right. Heave the burned ones out, pronto."

(C) To this one O. L. Daris and M. Simms answer as follows: "Projection circuits should be fused above the normal current requirement of the arc for the reason that 'the show must go on,' and since there is always the possibility of fluctuations in current flow at a projection arc, even when one has a good and usually very steady arc controlling mechanism, if fuses were only of capacity to take care of normal current flow there would be blown fuses, or at least there most likely would be, with stoppage of the show at least for a short space of time. As to how much the over-fusing should be, the table on page 115 of my Bluebook seems to take care of the matter very well, though provided everything is of capacity to carry the added current without overload I can see no real objection to a flat 25 per cent over-fusing of projector circuits, meaning of course fusing 25 per cent above the amperage ordinarily required at the arc."

(D) This one is answered by P. Jackson and D. Diglah thus: "Fuses on the primary side of a motor-generator serving projection circuits must be of sufficient capacity to supply the set when delivering its maximum secondary d.c. current demand. These fuses may without danger be of size sufficient to supply the rated capacity of the set, but unless the maximum demand be such as will approach its rated capacity, that might call for unnecessary over-fusing, which is never desirable. In this it must be remembered that 'maximum current demand' will include the current ordinarily used by two projector arcs, as well as possibly a spot and effect projector in addition, plus the possible overdraw always present in projection arcs under some conditions.

"We would sum the whole matter up thus: Primary fuses should have only the capacity necessary to supply the maximum current the machine must deliver at any one time, plus a reasonable safety margin.

"Secondary fuses should have only sufficient capacity to carry the maximum normal current demand of the particular circuit they serve, plus such amount as may seem necessary to take care of current variations incident to projection arcs."

(E) Every one in the published list, as well as many others, answered yes to this one, except one who uses another device to replace them.

MY WEAKNESS

Fox-De Sylva Production

In this glamorous musical romance, Lilian Harvey, star of "Congress Dances," makes her American debut. Buddy De Sylva, noted songwriter and musical comedy author, in addition to supervising, is credited with the story, dialogue in collaboration with Bert Hanlon and James Ryan, and cooperating with Leo Robin and Richard Whiting in music and lyrics. De Sylva will be remembered for "Sunny Side Up," also produced by Fox several years ago. David Butler, in addition to writing the screen play, is directing.

Lew Ayres, recently in "State Fair" and "Don't Bet on Love," has the male lead opposite Miss Harvey. Chief supporting personalities are Charles Butterworth, Harry Langdon, Sid Silvers, Broadway stage star; Henry Travers, currently in "Reunion in Vienna," and Irene Bentley. A bevy of beautiful girls contribute the color and chorus atmosphere of the musicale.

Against the musical background, the romantic story, which has a deft light comedy touch, has Ayres boasting that he can take any dame, no matter how plain, dress and polish her and make her a knockout. Given Miss Harvey to prove his claim, he throws up the sponge only to have her emerge a ravishing stunner. A four cornered love affair, topically colored, follows. The girl is hot for Ayres, but he is not willing to admit that she's his weakness. She falls into the hands of Harry Langdon, Cupid in the story, who brings about the expected romance.

The production is being lavishly and modernistically mounted. The girls, Barbara Weeks, Susan Fleming, Jean Allen, Marjorie King, Marcelle Edwards, Gladys Blake, and Mary Howard, all chosen for eye-appeal, give the show a Ziegfeld tinge. Song and dance numbers, while the show is not in the current theatrical cycle, are many; three of them look to be sure-fire popular numbers.

THE WORLD CHANGES

First National

This picture contains the elements of an historical presentation of the cattle-packing industry with the romance, drama and tragedy of an American family. Told over a period of three generations, it carries a "shirt-sleeves to shirt-sleeves" moral. The story is based on an unpublished novel, "America Kneels," by Sheridan Gigney, who did the screen plays on "I Am a Fugitive" and "Two Against the World." The screen play was prepared by Edward Chodorov, scenarist on "Captured" and "Mayor of Hell." Direction is by Mervyn LeRoy and the photography is credited to Tony Gaudio.

The cast is headed by Paul Muni, of "Scarface" and "I Am a Fugitive," who plays the parts of the three successive Nordholms. Plenty of known screen names are included, with Mary Astor, Aline MacMahon, Guy Kibbee, Donald Cook, Jean Muni, Anna Q. Nilsson, Willard Robertson, Micky Rooney and Sidney Toler. Henry O'Neil, former stage luminary, makes his picture debut.

In telling its story of the rise and fall of the Nordholm family, the picture starts in pioneer days and accentuates the spirit of the American character, bringing in such spectacular scenes as the early cattle drives, the founding of Omaha, the building of the Central Pacific Railroad, the start of the Chicago stockyards and the birth of the packing industry, with such incidental characters as Buffalo Bill and Captain Custer coloring the story. It follows the "Silver Dollar," "I Loved a Woman" (Edward Robinson) treatment until the new wealthy Nordholm family, becoming socially ambitious, invade New York, look with scorn on their forbears, become involved in intrigue to collapse with that of the Stock Market in 1929. Tragedy taking its toll, the last Nordholf goes back to the soil to begin life again as his grandfather did.

Production values being incorporated into the picture gives it the earmarks of spectacle on par with dramatic tone of the theme.

ANN VICKERS

Radio

This is a character study of a woman who sought a career, but couldn't sidestep romance, most of which is tragically dramatic. The story is from the novel by Sinclair Lewis, his first since he won the Nobel literature prize and one that has had a wide sale. The screen play was prepared by Jane Murfin, recently credited with "Our Betters," "Sweepings" and "The Silver Cord." Direction is by John Cromwell, who made "Sweepings," "The Silver Cord" and "Double Harness."

Irene Dunne, as Ann Vickers, has the lead. The men who come into her life are Sam Hardy and Bruce Cabot, both of whom love and leave; Conrad Nagel, a friend and would-be lover, and Walter Huston. The supporting cast includes Edna May Oliver, Murray Kinnell, Mitchell Lewis, Helyn Eby-Roch and Gertrude Michael.

Miss Dunne, a settlement social worker, passes from one disappointing love affair to another, her career building through friendly influence until she is superintendent of a modern correctional industrial home. Drawn to Huston, a judge who has pulled wires in her behalf, she surrenders herself to him and bears a child. Huston later is jailed for graft and divorced by his wife. Miss Dunne, forced to resign, seeks Nagel's co-operation to get a pardon for Huston and is rebuffed, only to have Huston walk in on her, a free man. The two, together with their child, take up life anew.

Drama predominating, several atmospheric episodes illustrating cruelties practised on prisoners accentuate the grimness.

BROADWAY THROUGH A KEYHOLE

20th Century-United Artists

Already widely publicized via the famous Winchell-Al Jolson fistic melee, "Broadway Through A Keyhole" is a musically tinged lowdown story of a famous but anonymous Mazda Lane personality. Romantic, dramatic, topical, the story which carries an elaborate girl dance color was written by Walter Winchell, whom just about everybody ought to know, giving it a showmanship value seldom approached in present day production. The screen play is by Gene Towne, who will be remembered for "Goldie" and "Hypnotized," and Graham Baker, who has collaborated with Towne on many stories, particularly "Billion Dollar Scandal." Songs and lyrics are by Mack Gordon and Harry Kevel; dances were directed by the internationally known Jack Haskell, and photography is by Barney McGill.

To tell the inside private life story, which runs the range of radio, backstage and Broadway color, a cast which includes well-known picture and stage names as well as several new personalities has been selected. Opposite Constance Cummings, who starred in the last Harold Lloyd picture and has been in several Columbias, is Russ Columbo, dance orchestra leader and radio singer, who makes his feature picture debut. Other picture characters are Gregory Ratoff, Hobart Cavanaugh, C. Henry Gordon and Helen Jerome Eddy. From the legitimate and vaudeville stage, Twentieth Century has taken Paul Kelly, the well-known Blossom Seeley, who succeeds Peggy Hopkins Joyce, and Hugh O'Connell, who starred in the New York production of "Once In A Lifetime." Night club asides are provided by Abe Lyman and his band, Frances Williams, Eddie Foy, Jr., and Barto and man, who have been featured over many routes. This night club atmosphere is heightened by Texas Guinan, who has an important role.

The show is being spectacularly mounted. Dialogue looks to be fast and furious, and the whole thing has plenty of up-to-date color.

I'M NO ANGEL

Paramount

Mae West appears here in a lowdown torrid character comedy. The original story is by Mae herself, but as the picture is being created, any number of gag improvisions that never appeared in the script are being worked in. Continuity is by Harlan Thompson, recently credited with "The Phantom President." Wesley Ruggles, who turned out "Cimarron" and "The Roar of The Dragon," among many others, is directing. Lyrics are by Gladys DuBois and Ben Ellison and music is by Harvey Brooks. Miss West has several song numbers, one or two of which are of the same temperature as the "Guy Who Takes His Time" hit.

The modern story, with Mae West as a lion tamer, has a spectacular circus atmosphere, with its star doing everything from riding elephants at the head of the parade to sticking her head in the lion's mouth. At the same time, she's a rough and ready romantic customer with a startling propensity for making wealthy folk and big shots fall in love with her. The supporting cast includes many wellknown screen names with Cary Grant of "The Eagle and The Hawk" and "Gambling Ship" in the lead opposite Miss West. Others are Edward Arnold, Ralf Harolde, Russell Hopton, whose role in "The Little Giant," with Eddie Robinson, has made him a hot number, Dorothy Peterson, Gregory Ratoff, Irving Pichel and Walter Walker as the most prominent support.

Semi and straight blackouts coloring the gag atmosphere, the picture has the advance earmarks of being a riot of laughter. But recognizing the tremendous popularity of "She Done Him Wrong," Paramount is exerting every production effort to have "I'm No Angel" top that show, a fact that bespeaks plenty of showmanship.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

The total of theatre receipts for the calendar week ended September 2, 1933, from 108 theatres in 19 major cities of the country reached $1,212,057, an increase of $90,245 over the total for the previous calendar week, ended August 26, when 104 theatres in 19 cities reported an aggregate gross of $1,121,812.

Ladies Must Love

(Universal)

Comedy-Drama

Breezy and snappy, this is a new kind of gold digger yarn, novelly premised to permit a unique romantic angle. It introduces a new personality, June Knight, who clicked with the preview audience. Dialogue is crisp and brittle, action is fast and catchy and a couple of Miss Knight's song numbers have that tingle and tempo that should have audiences humming as they leave the theatre. The story is modern for the moderns, the kind of show that should appeal strongly to the young bloods, yet which holds plenty of sparkle to intrigue the more mature. It is a bit too advanced for the juveniles even though there is nothing objectionable in it. Without being dished up on a silver platter, there is a subdued sex angle that gives the show a peppy color.

With an atmosphere of youth prevailing, the story portrays a few weeks in the lives of a quartette of gay girls. Temporarily on their uppers, Jeannie, Dot, Peggy and Sally Lou sign a contract whereby they will share their "take" equally. Comedy, in which smart-crack dialogue majors, ensues until Jeannie, singing in a night club, has Bill fall in love with her. The cooperative deal is off as far as she is concerned. But she can't permit Bill to rush her too fast and his diamond bracelet gift is made a collar for the cat; to be stolen and pawned by Peggy and Dot. Building up to a comedy-dramatic point where the girls are offered a job in a night club revue by Joey, with Jeannie's song-specialties intervening the picture becomes exciting as all the girls simultaneously find out that each is double crossing the other by holding out. Anti-climax is an almost slapstick, furniture busting, hair-pulling, apartment wrecking melee which is brought to a tuneful finale by the consummation of the Jeannie-Bill romance.

Possessing a colorful punch, the gay girl atmosphere being made alluring by Dorothy Burgess and Mary Carlisle, a pair who have the answer for any situation; the sap-girl comedy being carried by Sally O'Neil and Miss Knight contributing the romance as well as harmony, the film is one that should hold more than usual interest for the men. Yet by cleverly constructing advertising lines that carry hints of how the girls get and hold their men, it should prove equally as exciting to the feminine patrons. Lines that recreate interest in the old "butter and egg man" gag in accentuating the atmosphere of the picture suggest the type of publicity to follow. Get over the idea that "Ladies Must Love" is refreshingly novel in a smart, snappy style. Play up the always interesting new personality angle; use the title tone for all it's worth in exploitation and ballyhoo.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Universal. Directed by E. A. DuPont. From the play by William Hurlburt. Screen play and added dialogue by John Francis Larkin. Music and lyrics by Lynn Cowan and Harry Sauber. Photographed by Tony Gaudio. Release date, September 25, 1933. Running time, 70 minutes.

Penthouse

(MGM-Cosmopolitan)

Drama with Romance

This is a good audience picture. Fundamentally a gangster yarn, an unusual story twist makes it different. Against that background, a fine character study being worked out, the picture is dramatic to the point of being thrilling. Also it develops a smart romantic angle. Mainly because of pointed, crisp dialogue, some of which can be given torrid interpretations, though it appears to be the natural thing to say, there is much comedy.

Marked by noticeable good taste in handling delicate situations, the picture moves with pleasing speed. Any hint of the sensational climax is well concealed until the psychological moment. In the concluding sequences, rigid suspense is brought to full power in an anti-climactic gangster-intimidation scene wherein George Stone gives a performance that should be fully as much talked about as the Jack LaRue horse-whipping episode in "The Woman Accused."

It is always a good-looking picture, modernistic sets and dressing reflecting high production values. The picture is well cast. Warner Baxter and Myrna Loy fit right into their parts, acting with easy naturalness. The surprises from an audience point of view, however, will be Butterworth as the butler and Nat Pendleton, a semi-heroized gangster.

Jackson Durant is ostracized by legal associates, friends and sweetheart for successfully defending Gazotti. When Siddall, now engaged to Sue, is arrested for killing his erstwhile paramour, Mimi, Durant assumes his defense. Gertie, gang-moll, and Durant meet in Gazotti's night club. Hot romance is anticipated as he takes her to his penthouse, but while Gertie wants love, Durant has other things on his mind. He evolves a theory on Mimi's murder. Alone invading Crelliman's stronghold, he proves his theory, escapes Crelliman's gunmen to round up Stevens' police, gets into Murtoch's apartment and puts him through a third degree re-enactment of the Mimi killing which brings about his confession.

The show has much in its favor to stimulate patron interest. First, it's a Cosmopolitan Magazine story by Arthur Somers Roche. Although the title is very inexpressive of the theme, it possesses a stimulating ring. Many of the dialogue lines can readily be adapted to catchline copy. The thrill should attract the menfolk, while the romantic angle is the bait for the women. The picture is too pungent for juvenile consumption.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

One Man's Journey

(RKO Radio)

Drama

Very definitely in the nature of a eulogy of the small town country doctor, "One Man's Journey" has those elements of drama and story value which serve to make it a highly appealing motion picture, one which should make the exhibitor's selling job comparatively simple, at the same time productive of a strong box office.

Taken from the story, "Failure," by Katherine Haviland Taylor, the picture is filled with box office drawing power. First is the leading player. Lionel Barrymore has built for himself an enormous popularity everywhere. It is the exhibitor's not difficult task to sell him in a picture which is virtually his own, though he has able assistance. May Robson, highly effective character actress, has the chief supporting role. In addition for marquee names there are Dorothy Jordon, Joel McCrea, Frances Dee, in a small role, and David Landau.

The setting is that of the small town in the country, always appealing, and in the case of the small town audience, a locale definitely familiar and attractive. The picture is clean-cut and straightforward drama, relieved by spots of comedy for the most part supplied by Miss Robson.

Barrymore, apparently a failure in the large town, returns to his home village, a widower, with his small son, Buster Phelps. His first case is a birth, in which the mother dies, and the father, Landau, throws the doctor from the house. He takes the child, a girl, and with the assistance of Miss Robson, who walks in and establishes herself as the housekeeper, brings up the two children. Through snow and rain, in carriage, sled, and later ramshackle automobile, Barrymore serves the community, for the most part without pay. He comes to be revered. His son, McCrea, is studying to be a doctor, and Barrymore plans to send him to Europe.

He receives recognition when, single-handed, he stems the tide of a smallpox epidemic. The girl he had brought up, Miss Jordon, and later returned to a contrite father, meets and falls in love with James Bush, and it is through the influence of Barrymore that the two are married, overcoming the objections of the boy's father. A visiting physician from a New York medical center invites Barrymore to accompany his son there for study, but Miss Jordon falls ill, and he gives up the chance he had always wanted. His life is a continuous round of sacrifices for the community. Finally, through the application of what he terms "horse sense" he cures Miss Jordon when renowned specialists have failed, and is honored by a famous doctor at a medical dinner. Finally he effects a reconciliation between McCrea and Miss Dee, his fiancee.

Barrymore here adds another striking performance to his already long list of excellent characterizations. That is a strong selling point. In addition there is the locale of the story, especially for the small town exhibitor, the drama which is the life work of the self-sacrificing doctor, which may well be tied in with the strongly significant title. Medical groups in any community should be contacted, as well as women's organizations. A strong, entertaining attraction, the picture should be sold as such. It is more nearly an adult film, yet it comes very close to being a family picture.—AARONSON, New York.

Myrt and Marge

(Universal-Foy)

Comedy

Basically a lot of fun, this show is better than usual program entertainment. Gags, jokes, situations, some of which are a little bit hot and may be toned down in final editing, really take the place of a story plot as far as catching and holding audience interest is concerned. The theme combines a radio broadcasting and backstage theatre atmosphere. It moves with satisfactory speed; the laughs come pretty fast; the romantic angle follows a fairly familiar formula and the contrasting dramatic twist carries just enough suspense to provide the proper amount of color.

While the Myrt and Marge radio team enjoys a definite popularity among radio fans, picture personalities are confined to Eddie Foy, Jr., Ted Healy and his gang, Trixie Friganza and J. Farrell Macdonald. This fact indicates that in drawing popular attention to the show, the Myrt and Marge popularity be capitalized to the limit. Tieups, where possible, with stations featuring their program are naturals, and efforts would be made to get space in radio columns.

The real story concerns the travails of a meagerly bank-rolled musical comedy troupe. Not proving very impressive to the hicks as it tours the sticks en route to New York, Myrt assumes the responsibility of digging up an angel. He, Jackson, complicates the situation by falling in love with Marge, who is very much that way about Hanley. Between the condition that Jackson finds himself in, Myrt and Marge's efforts to hold him, the antics of Hanley, Mullins and his Helpers, the angel decides he wants his money back, only to have the situation salvaged by Mrs. Minter at the psychological moment.

The film "Myrt and Marge" has enough of the familiar entertainment elements to please the ordinary rank and file theatre-goer. It must be sold. Comedy, some catchy music and snappy dancing are the big features. Some of the jokes and gags are rather ancient, but they brought laughs.

The title makes it almost obligatory that as much radio-broadcasting exploitation as possible be rung into the advance campaign. A little special showmanship, such as a talent discovery contest staged in conjunction with the picture and with cooperation of local radio stations, would fit in nicely in bringing out the crowds.—MCCARTHY, Hollywood.

The Lucky Number

(Gaumont-British)

Musical, Sports, Romance

Though the Honorable Anthony Asquith has seemed to direct this a la Rene Clair and has not quite "got it there," this production from the Gaumont British studios is notable.

It is not the best film turned out of Shepherds Bush, London, and that is a pity, for it might easily have been. British producers have been mightily slow to exploit on the screen the enormously active interest in British sports, and here was promise.

The hero is a professional footballer who is suspended by his club because he kicked a ball at his rival in love. He suffers a good deal, but while down at the lowest finds a girl more worthy of him. Then he gets a winning lottery ticket (here one thinks of Clair's "Le Million") and cashes it for a meal. How to buy back the ticket in time to get the prize provides a series of situations, some feasible and others less so. The incidental footage provides time for a good song or two, and a fair leavening of comedy. Finally love and the winning ticket reach the lottery office just in time to claim the fortune, but the man with the money bags has gone on ahead. Love and romantic inspiration urge the sporting hero to make a grand comeback to the ball game, and in the end he is kicking his way to a happiness no money could buy!

There are some excellent shots of the English ball game in progress; some glimpses of a dog race track, and of a real English Fair (Coney Island), but in the main these cannot be said to provide anything more than light atmospheric backgrounds. They could maybe have formed more important substance in the actual structure of the story, but deftness and lightness and camera trickery evidently have led Mr. Asquith away from the direct path. The net result is a really sound program offering which should please American audiences even more than British.—MOORING, London.

Produced and distributed by Gaumont-British. Directed by Anthony Asquith. Story by Franz Schulz. Music by Mischa Spolianski. Lyrics by Douglas Furher. Length, 6,535 feet.

Police Call

(Showmen's Pictures)

Drama

Designed to appeal more to the patronage of the smaller theatre in the lesser community, this independently-produced effort begins to be several different types of drama, only to change on the way, which presents the exhibitor with something of a problem in the selling.

Initially, the title is somewhat misleading, since it has a definite indication of a fast-moving police action thriller in the streets of the big city. Such is not the case, however, the title having its only significance in the fact that the story's hero is, he believes, sought by the police for a crime which was not committed.

The cast names are not very strong marquee material, the leading role being taken by Nick Stuart, the role opposite by Merna Kennedy. A familiar name is the player of the boy's mother, Mary Carr, though her role is minor.

The story opens with a punch, showing a few rounds of a really active ring battle, thereby giving an indication of a fight picture. But the direction quickly shifts. Offered a job by a racketeer, after winning the championship, Stuart turns it down, telling him he is through with boxing, planning to study archaeology, and also telling the racketeer what he thinks of him. At home comes complication, when Stuart's sister, out one night, is discovered in the racketeer's office, where she had been enticed. A fight, one of the racketeer's henchmen is thrown down a flight of stairs, and Stuart flees aboard a South American boat. Aboard he meets the great scientist, Walter McGrail, bound for Yucatan and new adventures in Stuart's chosen field. He joins the expedition, and the story's complexion once more undergoes a change.

He falls in love with Miss Kennedy, secretary to McGrail, who is also in love with her, though considerably older. They discover treasure, bandits raid their camp, and McGrail is killed. Determined to face the music with the girl, Stuart returns to his mother's home, only to find that the man he thought he had killed is well, and married to Stuart's sister.

There is a certain amount of action in the film, but there are also lapses laden with dialogue, which serve to break the sustained movement of the drama. The exhibitor would perhaps derive most from the film by ignoring the title to a considerable extent, since, though it is a promising line, may cause the patrons to be disappointed. Sell the idea of the boy who found the only girl in the wild fastness of South America, and came back to face the music. Or the angle of the boxing champion who thought more of digging the history of the ancients than becoming rich via the ring may have some effect, with some slight emphasis on the opening ring sequence. For smaller houses particularly, the film is best set in the midweek spot. There is no reason why the youngsters should not enjoy it.—AARONSON, New York.

Beauty for Sale

(MGM)

Drama

Modern and lively, this is a 1933 romance which carries just enough drama, quite a bit of comedy both in dialogue and action, a vivid trace of tragedy, plenty of character and a lot of human interest. Elaborately mounted, action is fast and punchy, and dialogue, even where talk is occasionally prolonged, is sharp. The story is well developed, building strongly to its climaxes, yet preserving an air of suspense until the finale.

The film has those entertainment elements that appeal strongly to modern-minded audiences, but there are certain phases that may not appeal so universally to some patrons. These being particularly the general theme, a young girl and married man falling in love to have their way to happiness cleared by the wife divorcing him and the situation which drives a young mother to suicide when her faithless lover deserts her.

Locale is a colorful beauty parlor, situated in New York. The story generates interest immediately when Letty chooses a job in the beauty parlor rather than marriage with Bill, gag-mouthing auto mechanic. With Carol's smart comedy, the film develops to a point where Letty and Sherwood are very much in each other's company. A domestic scene ensues as Letty turns Bill down. Catchy beauty shop asides intervening, the story shifts to the romance between Bill and Jane which culminates in Jane's suicide. Opening Letty's eyes to the futility of fooling around with married men even though everything is on the up and up, the story is made more colorful when Carol pursuades her elderly swain to give her a European trip.

Ignoring Sherwood, devoting herself to her job, Letty has Bill interested in her again in his funny way when Carol comes back with the intention of buying a love nest in the suburbs. Deserting Bill at the church, Letty goes on an inspection trip with Carol to learn that Sherwood built the house, but will not occupy it because his wife has divorced him. Then the hectic finale when Letty madly dashes to Sherwood and lifelong love.

There are names, novelty, color and thrill in this picture which should be of selling value. With Madge Evans and Una Merkle being particularly effective, Alice Brady has the kind of role that will enthuse plenty of customers. Otto Kruger, newcomer to films is impressive. Supported by such names as May Robson, Hedda Hopper, Phillips Holmes, Charles Grapewin and Eddie Nugent, they should meet the demand.

The background of the story, a modernistic, highly showmanshipped beauty parlor, suggests any number of ballyhoo and exploitation possibilities which permit a wide variety of interest creating tieups. "Beauty For Sale" is a strictly adult attraction. There is plenty in it to intrigue the curiosity of woman patrons particularly and there is glamour and color that will attract the men. Modernism is the theme to sell. Put that over in a smart snappy style, with copy lines that carry a definite hint of thrill. Don't overlook that this story is by Faith Baldwin, one of the currently most popular short story writers and that it was a highly popular Cosmopolitan Magazine feature.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Broadway to Hollywood

(M-G-M)

Comedy-Drama

A sincere story of simple, unadorned backstage life, "Broadway to Hollywood" gives the exhibitor a package of genuine entertainment, designed for all classes, with which to start the autumn season.

Packed with laughter, tears and more laughter, the astute theatre man should capitalize on the story itself, as well as the many stars, brief as some of their moments may be: Alice Brady, who flits from delicate comedy to poignant tragedy; Frank Morgan, debonair, as the old-time hoofer who dances his way through life ever confident that his generation never can be outmoded by the whirlpool of changing time and space; Madge Evans, Jackie Cooper, Eddie Quillan, May Robson, and Russell Hardie, and Jimmie Durante appears for one short moment.

The story which concerns the history of three generations of the Hackett family, opens back in the '80's at Tony Pastor's theatre down in Fourteenth street. Those were the days when life and plenty of engagements were easy for the "Two Hacketts." Then Ted, Jr., steps into the act, and the parents are outclassed by their son. When he gets an engagement with Weber and Fields they are handed minor parts and fail to make the grade, but they keep on like the grand old troupers they are. Ted takes to heavy drinking after his marriage to Madge Evans, a dancer. He plays around with other "ladies of the town" and his wife kills herself. Their baby, Ted III, goes to the care of his grandparents. Ted, jr., goes to war and is killed. The two Hacketts once more try a comeback with the added attraction of their grandson. Again their old-fashioned methods fail. Young Ted is given a contract in Hollywood but steps too lively a drinking pace and is pulled out of the fire by his grandfather just in time to avoid being "given the gate" by his studio.

The boy reforms and the last sequence shows the two oldtimers watching the shooting of Ted's big scene in a musical film. With the cameras turning, and amid the gaiety of a lively dance number, old Ted dies but Mrs. Hackett, true to the traditions of the theatre, allows the show to go on without breaking down.

Suitable for every age, the picture should appeal to both mass and class audiences.

Frank Morgan and Alice Brady are the top names for marquee billing.—Ayer, New York.

Too Much Harmony

(Paramount)

Comedy with Music

Girls and gags, music and dancing; the lively color of the stage and its folk; a romantic theme tone given a touching twist; a spectacular chorus ensemble finale; Bing Crosby, Jack Oakie and Harry Green, topping a satisfying cast, give "Too Much Harcony" the verve that makes for a satisfactory musical comedy.

More an elaborate vaudeville show, although the romantic trend provides definite continuity, specialty treatment gives most of the audience—interesting fun. There's laughter in the antics of all and everything save the Bronson-Ruth romance, but that has a twist that makes it appealing.

Comedy predominating, there's everything from smiles to bellylaughs in the show. There's a flamboyant gayety to the ham and egg vaudeville team of Day and Dixon who surrender their partner Ruth to Bronson only after they have promoted themselves into a Broadway show. A load of laughs as the relative-bedeviled Merlin rehearses his epic. A touch of sympathy as the audience realizes that Benny's girl, Ruth, is falling in love with Bronson and the poor guy can't do anything about it. A little drama as the glamorous Lucille, noting the growing Bronson-Ruth infatuation, turns on her erstwhile fiance. A bellylaugh as Patsy frames a gag on hated Lucille to show her up as a golddigger. Explosive fun as Day is introduced to her as the incognito millionaire, son of a tobacco planter and he, using an exaggerated Southern dialect, brings about the breaking of her engagement with Bronson and there's a thrill to the modernistically group song dance finale that finds Ruth and Bronson in each others' arms and Day and Dixon riding the crest of success as the hits of Merlin's show.

There's entertainment enough in this show and lots of stuff with which to sell it. Crosby has several song numbers, with "Boo-boo-oo," "Bucking the Wind" (the finale) and "Thanks" possessing that rhythm that reflects popularity. This may serve as a reminder that it might be well to have a loudspeaker broadcast of the numbers as part of the advance ballyhoo. Supplementing the music, fun and color are the elements to concentrate upon, also the disappointed-lover romance to intrigue the ladies, the girl spectacle that always clicks with the men. The show needs to be circused. The names Crosby, Oakie, Gallagher, the newcomer metta, Ned Sparks and the odd angle of having Jack Oakie's mother in the cast with him, make that easily possible. The more hip-hip-hoorah that's put into the introductory campaign the better the box offices. Word-of-mouth advertising should be valuable too.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Directed by Edward Sutherland. Story by Joseph L. Mankiewicz. Dialogue by Harry Ruskin. Music and lyrics by Arthur Johnston and Sam Coslow. Dance ensembles by LeRoy Prinz. Photographed by Theodor Sparkuhl. Running time, 75 minutes. Release date, Sept. 15, 1933.

Lullaby Land

(United Artists)

Splendid

Another of the brilliant Walt Disney Silly Symphony numbers, this subject almost outclasses the others in cleverness, pictorial beauty by virtue of the color work and entertainment value. It tells the story of the little boy, rocked to sleep by his mother, who dreams of being in lullaby land, where everything is as little boys like it. Then he wanders with his little dog to a forbidden land of spouting fountain pens, fighting knives and scissors, pins, clocks and hammers, matches and goblins. The sandman overtakes him and he falls asleep as mother draws the cover to his chin. Worth special billing, the short will fascinate the youngsters, intrigue the adults and stir them to applause.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Gordon of Ghost City

Western Serial

Universal offers a new serial, in which Buck Jones, hero of many a youngster, is at his usual active task of rushing wrestlers all over the hills, and in turn being rushed by them. Important to the theme of the serial is the ghost city, deserted mining town, where Buck first encounters the other half of the inevitable romance, played by Madge Bellamy. The first three episodes of the serial, which is designed to run in 12 installments, are titled "A Lone Hand," "The Stampede" and "Trapped." Though there is the usual plentitude of gun fights, horses, and straight fist fights, the film is spotted with dialogue which occasionally slows its pace, and a serial pace should be extremely rapid. Jones is hired to bring in a band of rustlers, and finds his way accidentally to Ghost City, from which point, through the three initial episodes, follows a series of rescues of Madge Bellamy from various difficult positions. Buck Jones, of course, has his youngster following, and that fact should not be ignored in the selling of the serial. It is, after all, real kid material, and is a definitely salable serial. Each episode runs approximately 20 minutes.

Walter Donaldson

(Vitaphone)

Good

A brief but effective number is this, in which Walter Donaldson, well known composer of popular melodies over a period of years, supposed to be taking a sea voyage, does some work on deck. With that for excuse, various of Donaldson's most popular numbers are played and sung, with a dance or two for pictorial effect. With Donaldson's name as the draw, the subject should be worth billing.—Running time, 10 minutes.

JENKINS' COLYUM

Denver, Colo.

Dear Herald:

We slipped up on A. F. Kehr of the Princess theatre at Ogallala, Nebraska, when he wasn't looking. Heretofore he was off hunting or fishing when we called. Before prohibition butted in and raised such a rumpus, A. F. used to be a professional mixer of incidental, oriental, occidental, ornamental and mostly detrimental drinks over in Plainview, Nebraska, one of the suburbs of our home town of Neligh. His reputation for mixing Manhattan cocktails reached far and wide, but of course we couldn't furnish any personal proof to substantiate the claim.

When he isn't hunting or fishing, he runs the Princess, and the Princess is good enough for a town five times the size of Ogallala, and the Princess seems to be run about as it should be. A. F. is an ex-Nebraskan and that makes him all right.

Mr. Guild, who operates the theatre at Holyoke, Colorado, says that if Nature doesn't want to send 'em any rain that's Her business. It seems that Nature has been on a vacation for three or four years and Holyoke is beginning to wonder when She's going to get back on the job. Conditions are bad in that locality but Guild still keeps up his nerve.

Akron is located right out on the arid plains of Colorado, and all you can see in every direction is country and more country.

M. S. Beach, who operates the Variety theatre, says that scenery doesn't mean a thing in this day and age, that what people want is an expansive view, and the more expansive the better. Akron has it.

M. S. says he hasn't shot a film salesman or exchange manager in over thirty days but that he has hopes of doing better.

J. C. Anderson, who operates the Cover theatre at Ft. Morgan, says he has been trying to reduce his avoirdupois (or something like that), but we told him he couldn't reduce by eating six pounds of beefsteak, a half peck of potatoes and two huckleberry pies each day. We prescribed a diet of dill pickles, spinach and buttermilk, all of which he won't pay any attention to, and we wouldn't blame him if he didn't.

Ft. Morgan is located in the irrigated district and crops are fine and the outlook for business excellent. It's in the heart of the beet sugar industry and one can see great fields of beets in every direction. Ft. Morgan looks like a snappy town.

An Open Letter to Ned Sparks:

Dear Ned: We have seen you in several pictures lately, the last one being "Gold Diggers," and the more we see of you the more we want to congratulate your father and mother. There's a pair who has contributed something worthwhile to this picture industry.

We don't know whether you are married or not, but if you are we want to commend Mrs. Sparks for her excellent judgment and foresight in chasing you into the matrimonial stall and throwing the harness on you. And listen here, Old Timer, should our chickens ever get into your garden and scratch up your onions and cucumbers, and our bulldog get ugly and want to bite you, please notify us and we will shoot 'em on the spot. That's the kind of a guy we are.

Dave Morrison is managing the Rex theatre at Greeley. The Rex formerly belonged to Fox but was recently turned back to the original owner. Mr. Morrison seems to know about what Greeley folks want in entertainment, and that's what he gives them.

Temple De Vilbise operates the Kiva theatre in Greeley for the Griffith circuit out of Oklahoma City. Mr. De Vilbise recently came here from managing a theatre in New Mexico.

A. H. Vincent operates the Sterling theatre, one of the Fox houses in this district. Mr. Vincent showed us every courtesy and we had a very pleasant visit with him. Greeley is about the snappiest town we know of for its size.

Three years ago when we were going through Brighton to Denver Glen Miller saw our sign on our car and he drove by and honked his horn at us. We didn't stop because we didn't see a theatre when we drove through the town. He met us at one of the exchanges in Denver and proceeded to give us a panning for not calling on him. We stopped this time and had a delightful visit with Mr. and Mrs. Miller and from then on everything was all right.

When we were introduced to Thomas Love of the Hanna theatre at Hanna, Wyo., he said, "Boy, renew my subscription to the Herald before you draw another breath." We did. Thomas is one of those western boys who loves the wide open spaces, and Hanna is in the wide open spaces. He is harmless, like the rest of the herd out there, because they have all been dehorned. Thomas is our type of a westerner. To know him is to know the West.

Paul H. Hoppen of the Plaza theatre, here in Denver, was formerly a Nebraskan. We can always tell 'em by that far-away longing look in their eyes. Paul used to manage a theatre at Albion and Columbus, Neb. The Plaza seems to be the rallying place for those seeking entertainment at depression prices.

Jack Langdon, exchange manager for Universal, scented a hot trail of an exhibitor down in New Mexico who wanted Universal pictures. Jack hit the trail and left us to talk with the hired help.

Jimmy Morrison, of the Fox exchange, knew us the minute we stuck our mug in the door. Jimmy has a wonderful memory, also a tremendous appetite for business and liver smothered in onions. We are to go to dinner with him tomorrow out to the Country Club. Now, can you beat that?

Wayne Ball handles Columbia's business in this territory. Wayne says Columbia has wonderful service. There are two of us, Wayne, who hold to that opinion.

We didn't get to see much of Joe Ashby of the RKO exchange. Joe was busy and we never like to interfere with a man when he's working.

Earl Bell has been a globe trotter from New York to Los Angeles and back. He stopped in Omaha for some years and sold Warner-First National and is now located here in Denver with the same concern. Earl knows Nebraska like some husbands know the hired girl and Earl's word is better than our bond. He's a square shooter and that's why Warner-First National covers this territory like an April shower.

Henry Friedel, who handles MGM's business, used to ship us one-sheets and cans of film out of the Metro office in Omaha away back when. Henry came up to our town on his wedding tour to sell us some Metro pictures. Can you imagine a couple going to Neligh on a honeymoon? Henry's family consists of one canary and two Angora cats, but he says he still has hopes. He should have stayed in Nebraska where the weather isn't so changeable. All right, Henry, we're for you.

What the Picture Did for Me
MOTION PICTURE HERALD
1790 Broadway, New York

Chesterfield

PROBATION: Sally Blane, John Darrow—Excellent play and cast. We were complimented on it very much. Our patrons were more than pleased. Mark this one up with the best. Running time, 70 minutes. Played August 1-2.—Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

Columbia

AIR HOSTESS: Evelyn Knapp, James Murray, Thelma Todd—Swell plane shots. The story is not up to snuff, nor does the cast appeal, but it will pass. Played August 25.—Frank Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

AIR HOSTESS: Evelyn Knapp, James Murray, Thelma Todd—A very good flying picture. Good story, well acted.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

BITTER TEA OF GENERAL YEN, THE: Nils Asther, Barbara Stanwyck—Well made and timely. It's a right smart show all through. Played July 28.—Frank Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

CALIFORNIA TRAIL, THE: Buck Jones—Good western with draw above the average for westerns. Played August 19.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

CIRCUS QUEEN MURDER, THE: Adolphe Menjou—Very good program picture but it has poor drawing power because of the title. The word "murder" means only disaster at my box office. If you can get them in they will like this. Played August 10-11.—Edith Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

DECEPTION: Leo Carrillo, Barbara Weeks, Nat Pendleton—This is a good action picture. One of the best wrestling pictures we ever have played. Story good and all the cast fine.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

MAN AGAINST WOMAN: Jack Holt—Good gang type picture. Holds interest. Hard to get them in. Played August 11.—Frank Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

OBEY THE LAW: Leo Carrillo—Fair patronage. Our patrons were satisfied that came, but it was no crowd drawer. All right for a big city, but not much good here. Running time, 68 minutes. Played August 5-6.—Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

SILENT MAN: Tim McCoy—A very good western. Pleased a Saturday crowd—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

WAR CORRESPONDENT: Jack Holt, Ralph Graves—A dandy picture. A great team. Plenty of story, action, romance and all that goes to make a good picture. I know several big companies who would have made it a road show had they produced it. I was late playing it, but you tell 'em brother, it's a real picture.—Ned Pedigo, De Luxe Theatre, Garber, Okla. General patronage.

WASHINGTON MERRY GO ROUND: Lee Tracy—This and "State Fair" are the two best shown this year. It's a perfectly grand picture. Tracy perfect. We salute him. Played July 14.—Frank Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

WHAT PRICE INNOCENCE?: Willard Mack, Jean Parker—Excellent play and a very good cast. Our patrons complimented us on this play very much. We would like to thank Columbia for this play. Running time, 64 minutes. Played August 19-20.—Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

Crusader

SHOULD A WOMAN TELL: Lew Cody, H. B. Warner, Evelyn Brent—Good enough for any theatre. Good names. Well handled and well acted. Will not appeal to children.—C. D. Armentrout, Iowa Theatre, Mason City, Iowa. General patronage.

First National

CENTRAL AIRPORT: Richard Barthelmess—A very fine picture, the star and cast splended. Story interesting, good satisfaction.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

HEROES FOR SALE: Richard Barthelmess, Loretta Young—This is good entertainment, but not outstanding. Star has slipped the last few pictures.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

LILLY TURNER: Ruth Chatterton—I advertised this as the poorest picture Ruth Chatterton has made for years and people came out to see if they could call me a liar. Most of them agreed.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

LILLY TURNER: Ruth Chatterton, George Brent—A fairly good picture, a little better than the average program picture. From previous reports we did not expect as good a picture as this. Chatterton and Brent do their best, but that is not enough to build up the poor story. We did a little better than average business on this one and pleased the majority that saw it. Running time, 64 minutes. Played August 17-18.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

LITTLE GIANT, THE: Edward G. Robinson—This is one swell show and people liked it. Robinson is no great box office draw, but he does have good stories and you can depend on this to please them.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

MIND READER, THE: Warren William—This is just another picture. Can fill in without hurting you, but no one will get hurt in the rush to see it.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

SHE HAD TO SAY YES: Loretta Young, Lyle Talbot—This is a dandy little show. I believe twice as many people liked it as enjoyed "Baby Face" or "Ex-Lady." The title is a millstone around its neck, but if you get them in you can charge them when they come out and be able to collect 100 per cent.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pieere, S. D. General patronage.

Fox

BROADWAY BAD: Joan Blondell, Ricardo Cortez—The title is against this picture. It should have been "Broadway Good," for it turns out Joan Blondell was really good. A nice story in spite of that. Tell 'em it not bad at all or some mothers are going to object to it, as they did with me till they saw it. Poor business. Ran this with double bill. Weather hot. Running time, 58 minutes. Played August 21-22.—Wm. A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

CALL HER SAVAGE: Clara Bow—Clara is all washed up here. Played July 21.—Frank Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

CAVALCADE: Clive Brook, Diana Wynyard—This picture is a wonder. But we did a very poor business on the picture. A small town cannot put over pictures of this kind. All that saw it called it great, but we just cannot get them in on pictures of this type. I call them too good. The acting wonderful. Played August 13-14.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

HAT CHECK GIRL: Sally Eilers, Ben Lyon—Played this rather late, but seemed to give satisfaction. Business fair. Played August 19.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

HOLD ME TIGHT: James Dunn, Sally Eilers—This is a dandy. Draws well and pleases 100 per cent. Played August 4.—Frank Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

I LOVED YOU WEDNESDAY: Warner Baxter, Elissa Landi—Pretty good picture to pretty good business. They are trying hard to thaw out Landi; put her opposite Gable for a couple of pictures. Press book on this had great scene on cover. This not available to exhibitor for resale to public. Other mats terrible. Big scenes suppressed, and as is the custom with the incompetents who make press books, clinches and clutches are substituted for intelligently selected scenes. No brains.—H. J. Brown, Majestic Theatre, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

I LOVED YOU WEDNESDAY: Warner Baxter, Elissa Landi—A box office flop. Failed to please majority. Recording not too good. Sorry I showed this one. Liberty added too many stars. Played August 18.—Frank Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

MAN WHO DARED, THE: Preston Foster, Zita Johann—They don't make any better entertainment than this picture gives you. Story interesting and well acted.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

MAN WHO DARED, THE: Preston Foster, Zita Johann—Here is another one for your cut-rate admission night. Sorry to discourage you, but it will not draw and it will not entertain. I see no excuse for offering such as this to exhibitors who advertise entertainment for sale. I have no bargain nights, so when I get a picture like this I hardly know what to do with it. Played August 12.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

PLEASURE CRUISE: Genevieve Tobin, Roland Young—Very good comedy with one very broad scene. Business below normal. Played August 16-17.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

SAILOR'S LUCK: James Dunn, Sally Eilers—This picture kept our patrons in an uproar through the entire first half and again toward the end. It is a knockout for rural or small town patronage. Played July 15.—George Lodge, Green Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. General country patronage.

STATE FAIR: Will Rogers, Janet Gaynor—I have never shown a picture which registered as well with all patrons as "State Fair." Thanks Fox, you're O. K. Played August 21.—Frank Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

STATE FAIR: Janet Gaynor, Will Rogers—This is a natural. With one like this about once a month the showman's dream of getting out of the red would come true. You can't go wrong on this one. Plug it all you can stand. Warm or rather hot weather made little or no difference to us. Packed 'em in and they liked it. Running time, 97 minutes. Played August 18-19.—Wm. A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

TRICK FOR TRICK: Ralph Morgan, Victor Jory—Mr. Sidney Kent (who everyone says wouldn't fool you for worlds) says that block booking is necessary because it makes the dumb exhibitor run pictures bright men like Kent make, doubtless had this gem in mind when he last eulogized block booking. Their block booking did as much to ruin Fox Theatres as even Bill Fox's incredible lack of financial horsesense.—H. J. Brown, Majestic Theatre, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

ZOO IN BUDAPEST: Loretta Young, Gene Raymond—A very nice story. Drags a little up to the last two reels, which are full of excitement when the animals in the zoo escape. No murders in this for a change. Ran this double billed. Poor business. Weather hot. Running time, 85 minutes. Played August 21-22.—Wm. A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

Majestic

VAMPIRE BAT, THE: Lionel Atwill, Fay Wray—A good mystery story. Spooky, with plenty thrills and chills. Patrons well pleased. Played three days to excellent business. Admission matinee 15 cents, evening 20 cents.—C. D. Armentrout, Iowa Theatre, Mason City, Iowa. General patronage.

MGM

GABRIEL OVER THE WHITE HOUSE: Walter Huston—drew much more than average business and was well liked. In my estimation this is a picture that should be exploited to the skies. Your efforts will be repaid in all ways and you will be glad that you were privileged to exhibit it. Played August 8-9.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

HELL BELOW: Robert Montgomery—Here is a picture, mates, that you should hop aboard with both feet, exploit and dynamite your towns over. It is a wonderful picture sold at a fair percentage and if you don't miss the fact that this is one of the Great Ones for small towns you will be pleased and so will your public.—H. J. Brown, Majestic Theatre, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

HOLD YOUR MAN: Clarke Gable, Jean Harlow—The answer to the exhibitor's prayer. I doubled my efforts in my advertising campaign because I knew the picture would please. It drew wonderful crowds and they simply ate it up. Step on this to the limit. Your fans will adore both Harlow and Gable after they see this. It should appeal to all classes. Play it on your best day. Played August 13-14.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Salem, La. General patronage.

LOOKING FORWARD: Lionel Barrymore—A flop. Don't try to sell by tying in Roosevelt's name. I did. The public want entertainment, not economics, and they suspect this. Metro has the world's worst press department. Their press sheets are twenty years behind the times, their mats are terrible. They should buy a few current magazines and study modern advertising. Their pictures would gross twenty per cent more if they used photographs instead of terrible drawings.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic Theatre, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

LOOKING FORWARD: Lionel Barrymore—Satisfactory program picture. No drawing power. Played August 24-25.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

MADE ON BROADWAY: Robert Montgomery, Sally Eilers—A fair picture that will get by all right, although it's the old story of the high pressure Broadwayite that make a poor girl a star with the accompanying dialogue. They won't pan it and they won't cheer it.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

NUISANCE, THE: Lee Tracy, Madge Evans—This is a great entertainment; action and lots of it. Pleased them all.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

PEG O' MY HEART: Marion Davies—This one is a honey at the small town box office. It holds up so they must like it.—H. J. Brown, Majestic Theatre, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

RED DUST: Clark Gable, Jean Harlow—This was a return engagement played in the place of "The Outsider." It drew very well and pleased. Played August 5.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

REUNION IN VIENNA: John Barrymore, Diana Wynyard, Frank Morgan—Excellent acting. Miss Wynyard hard to understand at times. They shout at each other at times, which is too loud, and immediately they talk in regular tone, then it's too low. Recording very unsatisfactory. From the time John comes on until near the end he rants around like a wild bull scheming to get her in his room. If you call this entertainment than I can't play golf. Played August 17-18.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

TUGBOAT ANNIE: Marie Dressler, Wallace Beery—They have finally done it! Queen Marie and Clown Prince Wally have given us another "Min and Bill." Far better draw than recent Dresslers. Personally thought Wally did himself proud in this one. Marie as usual "good" and direction superb and just look who directed this picture. Youngster Mervyn LeRoy, who also megged "Gold Diggers," which after all proves that Warner Brothers have "Not" lost all their directorial genius. This boy LeRoy is sure a whiz. Of course in "Tugboat" he had pretty good artists to work with together with a good story, but in "Gold Diggers," with good artists also, he had some man's job in a vastly different story and it shows LeRoy's true versatility. Running time, 87 minutes. Played August 20.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. General patronage.

WHITE SISTER, THE: Helen Hayes, Clark Gable—A wonderful picture. Both stars great. A picture you won't forget. We did not do the business on the picture it deserved, but it will do your house good to play it, if you don't make a cent. Played August 20-21.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

RETURN OF CASEY JONES: Charles Starrett, Ruth Hall—A good railroad story. Played on a double bill with a western and gave satisfaction on Saturday.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

Paramount

BIG BROADCAST, THE: Bing Crosby, Stuart Erwin, Leila Hyams—I started to pass this one up because it was so old, but I ran it and am mighty glad. My house was packed the first night and almost full the second. Many came to see it for the fourth and fifth time. This should be good for a repeat booking. Pleased 100 per cent. Played August 17-18.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

COLLEGE HUMOR: Bing Crosby, Jack Oakie—A little late in playing this one, but it was box office and real satisfaction combined. Just the type of entertainment our patrons want and they did not hesitate to tell us so. Jack Oakie stood out in this. All the others were good, too.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. General patronage.

DEVIL IS DRIVING, THE: Edmund Lowe, Wynne Gibson—You will make no mistake in booking this one for either first part of week or last half. It will make suitable entertainment any time or any place. The picture is cast by best set of screen folks that have ever been thrown together. Story deals with hot car traffic in a big way.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

DISGRACED: Helen Twelvetrees—Excellent play. Our patrons were very well pleased with it. The name fooled several, but were more than satisfied. Handling time, 70 minutes. Played August 8-9.—Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

EAGLE AND THE HAWK, THE: Fredric March, Cary Grant, Jack Oakie—Excellent production and a fine cast. Our patrons were very well pleased. We hope Paramount makes many more good plays like this one. We thank Paramount. Running time, 72 minutes. Played July 12-13.—Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

GAMBLING SHIP: Cary Grant, Benita Hume—A good program picture. Has no drawing power. Business fell off 20 per cent. Guess the name killed it for small towns.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

GIRL IN 419, THE: James Dunn, Gloria Stuart—This is just another program picture, but one that will please all types of people. It is a good one day picture and is entirely different from the usual run of pictures. Practically all of the picture is filmed in a public hospital. A great love story together with a gangster background and an excellent supporting cast. Well acted and business about average. Running time, 62 minutes. Played August 22.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

HER BODYGUARD: Wynne Gibson, Edmund Lowe—We ran it on a merchant night. Very good play, but not much of a crowd drawer. The patrons we had enjoyed it very much. Paramount should give Wynne Gibson a break. Running time, 70 minutes. Played July 15-16.—Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

JENNIE GERHARDT: Sylvia Sidney, Donald Cook—Good woman's picture to fair business in spite of great heat and heavy nature of picture. I asked Paramount to make this title three years ago, they are three years late making a tragedy on a tragic year when comedy is wanted. It would soon have been utterly passe. Wait a year for "Sister Carrie." Give the unfortunate maltreated public a break, let them laugh.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic Theatre, Nampa, Ida. General patronage.

LADY'S PROFESSION, A: Alison Skipworth, Roland Young—Very good comedy, ably presented. Our business was way off on account of rain. Played August 23-24.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

LADY'S PROFESSION, A: Roland Young, Sari Maritza, Alison Skipworth—Another good program picture from Paramount. Not a special, but a picture that will please all who see it. Sari Maritza is a coming star and she puts in some good acting in this picture. We played this on bargain day and our patrons thought it well worth their time and money. It is good clean entertainment with plenty of comedy. Running time, 72 minutes. Played August 16.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

MAMA LOVES PAPA: Charles Ruggles, Mary Boland—Excellent play with amusement and entertainment every minute throughout the show. Paramount should have starred Charles Ruggles years ago. We are glad to see Paramount waking up and recognizing talent. Running time, 68 minutes. Played August 26-27.—Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

MIDNIGHT CLUB: Clive Brook, George Raft—Fine play, and excellent acting. These are the kind of plays that we want and need. Paramount made a very entertaining play when they produced this one. Running time, 70 minutes. Played August 22-23.—Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

SIGN OF THE CROSS: Fredric March, Elissa Landi, Charles Laughton, Claudette Colbert—Draw below average for Sunday and Monday. This was indeed a surprise to me. I don't think anybody liked it because it is so very cruel and depressing. It is another one of those pictures that you are glad to ship. Played August 20-21.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

RKO

BILL OF DIVORCEMENT, A: John Barrymore, Billie Burke, Katharine Hepburn, David Manners—This is just another program picture. The acting is very good, but the story is rotten. Entirely too many sad scenes. Many of our patrons left the theatre with red eyes from crying, and they told us that the picture did not meet with their approval. Billie Burke. Katharine Hepburn and David Manners are very good as the supporting cast. Running time, 71 minutes. Played August 14.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

CONQUERORS, THE: Ann Harding, Richard Dix—A very excellent production, that appealed to our patrons. Good action and good photography. Played August 12.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. General country patronage.

CROSS FIRE: Tom Keene—One of the best westerns of the year. Excellent comedy.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

DIPLOMANIACS: Wheeler and Woolsey—This drew well above the average and pleased fairly well. It is not as good as most of their pictures have been, but if your patrons like Wheeler and Woolsey you will do well to play this. August 6-7.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

DOUBLE HARNESS: Ann Harding, William Powell—A nice title for the first picture with these two co-stars and they have made a nice picture of it. You can use it on any day of the week and please the majority well.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

HEADLINE SHOOTER: William Gargan, Frances Dee—An imitation of "Front Page" and a good show, but they have had plenty of these newspaper racket stories and think the public is fed up on them.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

INDIA SPEAKS: Richard Halliburton—Did all right. Worth running. Halliburton a shoddy fifth rater who hypnotizes jittery old ladies, has interpolated bum hokum that is in poor taste and done so rottenly that people commented on it. He failed to intelligently film his subject. He smeared religions untruthfully, that he lacks brains to understand. Picture men in spite of fun poked at them have more brains. Could have done this job better. No Jain Temple; no Taj Mahal. Beauty and goodness left out, dirt and drainage shown. Why? England?—H. J. Brown, Majestic Theatre, Nampa, Ida. General patronage.

KING KONG: Fay Wray, Robert Armstrong, Bruce Cabot—A sensational picture. Kids just eat this up and yell for more. The ladies think it rather gruesome in spots but stick it for the excitement. This is something different. A marvel of trick photography. Did very well with this in spite of hot weather. Running time, 98 minutes. Played August 23-24.—Wm. A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

MELODY CRUISE: Phil Harris, Charles Ruggles—Good picture for one reason. Charles Ruggles was in it and as usual stole the picture. Plenty of genuine pudding in this nine-reeler. Could have been done nicely in six reels. For some reason the director of the picture didn't let Phil Harris use his great pleasing voice to best advantage. Don't let 'em tell you it's a special. Played August 25.—Ned Pedigo, DeLuxe Theatre, Garber, Okla. General patronage.

MELODY CRUISE: Charles Ruggles, Greta Nissen, Phil Harris—Nice little picture chock full of entertainment. Recording good. Played August 20-21.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

NO OTHER WOMAN: Irene Dunne, Charles Bickford—A very good entertainment. A program picture. Story good and acting fine. Will satisfy any class of patrons and it is clean, too. Played August 10-11.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

RENEGADES OF THE WEST: Tom Keene, Betty Furness, Roscoe Ates—Just a western, but what men these western boys are. They can judge at a Baby Show, love like Clark Gable, and lick six men fully armed in a room 10 by 12. What men and the amount of brain power that it takes to produce a western. Oh, yeh! That is what is wrong with the westerns today. There is too much similarity in the stories. If they would get some new ideas in them there is still a market for the good ones in the small towns now that the farmer is beginning to get a break.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

SONS OF THE BORDER: Tom Keene, Julia Haydon—A good western. Tom knocks several out, but is consistent because they come one at a time. Recording good. Played August 19.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

SWEEPINGS: Lionel Barrymore—Poor name spelled poor business. Great character study with dwindling finish, which was evidently intended to cheer one up with the idea that the son would follow his father and save the good name of the business by working girls until midnight and driving them to hysterics. A showman should have told them that a known author can sell 50,000 books to his followers and still title it "Sweepings," but that you can't resell 120,000,000 who never heard of Cohen and won't buy "Sweepings." Run four book stores of my own so don't pooh pooh my remarks about books and authors.—H. J. Brown, Majestic Theatre, Nampa, Ida. General patronage.

TOMORROW AT SEVEN: Chester Morris—Another mystery. This is number one hundred for the season. Business fair. Independents who think they can really make picture and avoid cycles should plunge into production they will have little opposition. Page J. D. Williams, why doesnt he take exhibitor money and make us some pictures. Hurray for Joe Schenck; he is 100 per cent right.—H. J. Brown, Majestic Theatre, Nampa, Ida. General patronage.

TOPAZE: John Barrymore—A great piece of acting by Barrymore. A classic. Not an ordinary picture; will not please 50 per cent of the people. "Grand Hotel," that greatly over advertised piece of cheese, rather hurt the drawing power of Johnny. Terrible mistake on his part being coazed into that thing. We call it a frame-up.—Ned Pedigo, DeLuxe Theatre, Garber, Okla. General patronage.

NATIONAL RELEASE DATE of JOHN M. STAHL'S Great Production for

UNIVERSAL—

ONLY YESTERDAY

Roadshow

SINS OF LOVE: Got business and does a valuable work that the University extensions lecturers should do. Too bad we live in a Puritan land. The Puritans should have had the Plymouth rock land on them instead of vice versa. Two good lecturers with this—one man and one woman. Unlike many of our features, neither the picture nor lectures were dirty.—H. J. Brown, Majestic Theatre, Nampa, Ida. General patronage.

United Artists

CYNARA: Ronald Colman—Very fine production. Acting and direction excellent, but the recording is not very good. It did not draw because of the title, but it pleased well. It is a pleasure to show a picture like this. Played August 22-23.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

Universal

COHENS AND KELLYS IN TROUBLE: Charles Murray, George Sidney—A funny picture. This team of old-timers can make me laugh any time.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

DON'T BET ON LOVE: Lew Ayres, Ginger Rogers—The picture has wonderful possibilities, and with a little careful cutting could have been made a lot better; as it is does fairly well because story is teeming with loads of human interest material, box office is better than average.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

HER FIRST MATE: Zasu Pitts, Slim Summerville—They have gone nautical now, but it is the same old line. You can get too much of a good thing. Pitts is being used in too many pictures. These stars with the same line need a better supporting cast if they are to keep their popularity. Another George Sidney, Charles Murray complex that Universal has. A cycle picture from the same producer.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

HIDDEN GOLD: Tom Mix—I would call this a thrill a minute production. It was most generously applauded and it kept our patrons on their toes all through it. Played July 29.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. General country patronage.

OUT ALL NIGHT: Slim Summerville, Zasu Pitts—This outstanding team brought the business. Many laughs, but I see no good reason for all the suggestive stuff. These people don't have to pull the shady stuff to get a laugh; only the amateurs resort to that. Better cut it out, Slim and Zasu. You know the fate of the others, gone and forgotten. Played August 22.—Ned Pedigo, DeLuxe Theatre, Garber, Okla. General patronage.

PRIVATE JONES: Lee Tracy, Gloria Stuart—We consider this Lee Tracy's most satisfactory presentation. Thoroughly enjoyed by average audience. Played August 26.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

REBEL, THE: Vilma Banky, Luis Trenker, Victor Varconi—Since Hollywood went indoors with sound, it was refreshing to see a picture with some of the most marvelous shots of the Alps. This scenery was gorgeous, and there is no question that it was appreciated by the audience as a change from the cut and dried one-room scene pictures. Whoever did the photography did one swell job in "The Rebel." But this star, Trenker, who is plenty good, is not known and none of the cast but the principal, and hence it did not do the business that it should have done. It has action, and good story, but the war angle may have hurt it, too. It is an atmospheric picture with just some shots that are in costume. As far as I am concerned, the sooner they take a few of them out in the open again, the better I think that the audiences will be pleased. Why doesn't some one film the Service story, "Shooting of Dan McGrew"? That was one swell picture, the last that Barbara La Marr made.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

SECRET OF THE BLUE ROOM, THE: Lionel Atwill, Gloria Stuart, Paul Lukas, Onslow Stevens—Run as a midnight show. Good mystery entertainment, recording good. Played August 19.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

Warner

BABY FACE: Barbara Stanwyck—This star seems rather washed up to me. I don't care for her and no one else seems to. Did one of the poorest weekend businesses I have ever done. Perhaps it should not be run on Sunday, but it was rated as big league stuff so thought it was good enough, though I wouldn't waste another Sunday on this star.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

BABY FACE: Barbara Stanwyck, George Brent—This is a very good picture, but strictly adult entertainment. This is the modern version of how the ambitious country girl goes to the big city and gains worldly success. It is full of interest and decidedly sexy in atmosphere. It is well acted and will please the majority of your patrons. Business about average. We played this one day, but it would stand two better than some. Running time, 74 minutes. Played August 21.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

EX-LADY: Betty Davis—I didn't think so much of this, but the theme is overdone and guess it is as good as the average of this "fallen woman" type of picture.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

GOLD DIGGERS OF 1933: Warren Williams, Joan Blondell, Aline MacMahon, Ruby Keeler, Dick Powell—This is the best box office bet of the year and pleases every one who comes. It did third day business and more money than "42nd Street" and was good enough to please them all. It is worth the biggest price you pay for anything. I liked it twice as much as "Kid from Spain" or "College Humor," though they are good.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

KEYHOLE, THE: Kay Francis, George Brent—This pair of actors got away nicely in this picture. They are not a box office draw, but then with the hot weather and conditions it takes another "Gold Diggers" to bring them out.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

MAYOR OF HELL, THE: James Cagney—This is great show. Was a terrible disappointment at the box office, but tie up with the local boy scouts or some other worthwhile organization and sell it as a lesson as well as an entertainment and it will click. Name is only criticism.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

MAYOR OF HELL, THE: James Cagney, Madge Evans—This is one of the best pictures that I have ever seen, and should prove to be one of the best of this season. It is a picture showing the existing conditions of the state reform schools. Let the kids know that it is a kids' picture and that 500 juvenile stars appear in it. Warner is the only producer that could have put this over and they deserve credit for it. Running time, 80 minutes. Played August 15.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

A BROKEN LEG— AND SALES HINTS

A hint or two on methods of exploitation, plus a problem along the same lines, comes from Ray W. Musselman, veteran of the "What the Picture Did For Me" department. Even a broken leg didn't deter Mr. Musselman from meditating on his pictures and their value for the department, we gather, since his reports came "en masse." We are glad the limb has mended. From the gentleman from Lincoln, Kan., and the Princess theatre:

"Have been nursing a broken leg for the past five weeks and forgot to send in my reports, so am enclosing reports on everything to date.

"We used the Mat on Metro's 'Stranger's Return' to find all the different articles beginning with C and in three days we had over fifty lists turned in. Believe it created interest in a picture that is going to do business.

"We use a lot of banners, get them out of Omaha for 60 cents each, and find them to be very good advertising. Our monthly calendar is mailed over the whole county and on the big pictures we use a lot of tack and window cards. Ballyhoo is hard to put over as most of our crowd comes in on Saturday evening and it's expensive, when the picture is just shown for two or even three days.

Yours very truly,
RAY W. MUSSELMAN."

NARROW CORNER, THE: Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.; This picture is better than I expected. I would rank it as a good picture that will please more patrons than the average.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

PARACHUTE JUMPER: Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.: This was a good show and pleased a Saturday crowd. It has more story than lots of action pictures and considerable excitement and comedy.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

PICTURE SNATCHER: James Cagney—Cagney is good and so is the story and supporting cast. Overdone story but well told and nicely produced.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

PRIVATE DETECTIVE 62: William Powell—This was entertaining all right, but as is usual on a hot Friday and Saturday, people stayed out on the curb and talked about the weather instead of buying tickets.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

SOMEWHERE IN SONORA: John Wayne—None of them has anything on this man for making westerns. He has everything the rest have to make a he-man picture and they have all been good we have played. Gave satisfaction.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

TELEGRAPH TRAIL, THE: John Wayne—One of the best western pictures we have had the pleasure of running in our theatre in the past several months. We cannot too highly recommend this picture. It is packed full of action and thrills, just the kind they all want to see. Frank McHugh adds a few laughs, as usual. These Warner westerns are all good and we only wish there were more. Running time, 55 minutes. Played August 19.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

KRAZY KAT: Very good but not much to it. Running time, 10 minutes.—Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

SCREEN SNAPSHOTS: Different in the way of entertainment. Running time, 10 minutes.—Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

SHINDIG: Micky Mouse—A Micky Mouse re-issue that is a knockout.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

SNOW TIME: Krazy Kat—Very good cartoon.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

Copley Pictures

FELIX THE CAT: Very good and entertaining. Running time, 10 minutes.—H. J. Brown, Majestic Theatre, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

Educational

BOY, OH BOY! Andy Clyde—Here is a two reel comedy that will make any audience laugh and please them all. I believe this is the best comedy Andy Clyde has ever made, but all of his are good. It is a little old but still better than most of the new shorts. Running time, 19 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

KEYHOLE KATIE: Gale Seabrook, John T. Murray—A dandy old fashioned slapstick comedy. Great for Saturday night in the small towns.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

OUR NOBLE ANCESTORS: Bray's Naturgraphs—A very fine two reel. Comparing man to the gorilla and elephant. Good anywhere.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

ROBIN HOOD: Terry-Toon—A very fine cartoon and good for Sunday.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

TORCHY'S KITTY COUP: Ray Cooke—Another good comedy and full of laughs. Torchy and Franklin Pangborn handle the entire film and give you some very good laughs. This is the kind of comedy that everyone enjoys and we hope to have more of them. Running time, 18 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

Madison

BAER-SCHMELING FIGHT FILMS: Got business.—H. J. Brown, Majestic Theatre, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

SHARKEY-CARNERA FIGHT FILMS: Got business.—H. J. Brown, Majectis Theatre, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

SHARKEY-CARNERA FIGHT FILM: Good film and showed the fight in great style. Running time, 20 minutes.—Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

MGM

DAUGHTERS OF THE SEA: FitzPatrick Traveltalk—Mostly about Copenhagen. Very interesting. Good if you like traveltalks.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

LUNCHROOM, THE: Flip the Frog—A fair cartoon.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

MOTORCYCLE MANIA: Sport Champion—Stunt riding on motorcycles. Fine entertainment.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

NATURE IN THE WRONG: Charlie Chase—Very good Chase comedy with Charlie playing the role of Tarzan. This always pleases.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

SWING HIGH: Sport Champions—This is the best of the series so far.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

TECHNO-CRACKED: Flip the Frog—Fairly good cartoon.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

Paramount

AGGRAVATIN' BEAR, THE: Sports Eye View—This will please any audience.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

ALOHA OE: Royal Samoans—Fair short and good enough to fill in. We want something more American here. Running time, 10 minutes.—Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

BETTY BOOP: Talkartoon—Very good short. Very entertaining. Our customers enjoy this short. Running time, 10 minutes.—Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

JUST MENTIONING THE UNMENTIONABLES: Paramount Pictorial No. 2—An excellent short.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

LET'S DANCE: Burns and Allen—A fairly good one reeler with Burns and Allen doing their same familiar wisecracking. If your patrons like them, this one is bound to please, but my patrons do not like them and therefore only a few stayed till the finish. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

MAKING FRIENDS IN THE DESERT: Paramount Pictorial No. 3—Excellent.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

PARAMOUNT PICTORIAL: No. 9—Not so good as they usually are. Running time, 10 minutes.—Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

SINGING BOXER, THE: Donald Novis—Good two reeler. Very entertaining and excellent singing. Running time, 20 minutes.—Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

TOO MANY HIGHBALLS: Best comedy that Paramount has given us yet. We are glad and hope they keep it up. Running time, 20 minutes.—Grand Theater, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

WRESTLERS, THE: Sennett Star—Fair comedy as comedies go but not extra. Running time, 20 minutes.—Grand Theatre, Dunkirk, Ohio. General patronage.

RKO

CENTURY OF PROGRESS, A.: Pulled extra business.—H. J. Brown, Majestic Theatre, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

MERCHANT OF MENACE, THE: Edgar Kennedy—A good two reel comedy, very funny.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

MICKEY'S BIG BROADCAST: Mickey McGuire—Good. Recording good.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

SO THIS IS HARRIS: Phil Harris—Three-reeler starring Harris. It is a novelty musical (without dancing.) This is 100% entertainment. Play it with a weak picture and they won't mind the weakness of the feature.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

United Artists

THREE LITTLE PIGS: Silly Symphony—One of the greatest cartoons we ever played. —Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

Universal

LUMBER CHAMP, THE: Pooch Cartoon—Good where a cartoon is needed—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

MARRIED OR SINGLE: Little Jack Little—A fine two reel subject.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

SHOULD CROONERS MARRY?: Frank Albertson—A funny comedy.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

Warner Vitaphone

ALONG CAME RUTH: Ruth Etting—Another very good comedy. Ruth Etting at her best and plenty of music and singing. This is the best she has made this season. She sings several popular song hits and has an excellent supporting cast with her. Play it and see for yourself. Running time, 19 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

BOSKO'S MECHANICAL MAN: Looney Tune—This is a very good cartoon comedy with plenty of music and a few laughs. A good filler on any program and is sure to please. Running time, 9 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

BOSKO'S WOODLAND DAZE: Looney Tune—Another good cartoon comedy featuring Bosko. Has good music and will make a good filler on any program. A little better than the average cartoon and will please 100 per cent. Running time, 9 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

BUZZIN' AROUND: Fatty Arbuckle—This is a funny comedy. Too bad this comedian had to die as he was needed to put the laughs in comedies. A very few of the comedies are real funny nowadays. Comedians are born.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

FROM BETHLEHEM TO JERUSALEM: E. M. Newman World Adventures—Another World Advertures one reeler showing the scenes of the Far East in and around Bethlehem and Jerusalem. Contains some very interesting and educational shots. Running time, 9 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

I LIKE MOUNTAIN MUSIC: Merry Melody—A very fine Merry Melody. Good cartoon. Excellent singing.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

LOVE THY NEIGHBOR: Pepper Pot—This is another rotten comedy of the Pepper Pot series. Too silly to be funny and no story. This series of shorts are the worst that Vitaphone has made and we cannot understand why they do not discontinue them. Running time, 9 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

RAMBLING ROUND RADIO ROW: Pepper Pot, No. 6—This is about the best short in the Pepper Pot series. We have played several of these and they were all good. They show shots of the popular Radio stars at work in the studio. Plenty of music and some dancing. Running time, 9 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

SPORT THRILLS: No. 6—This is a very interesting one reeler. Showing the art of trout fishing, hunting and ice hockey. These shorts are interesting and educational, but our patrons do not care for them. They leave when these start. Running time, 9 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

All Claims Are Filed Against Fox West Coast

All claims against Fox West Coast Theatres were filed in Hollywood on Monday of this week in the office of Referee McNabb. Creditors, when questioned, placed the total of claims at $50,000,000, indicating at the same time that the situation is in such a disorganized state that three years may be required before it is completely clarified.

WABASH AVENUE

CHICAGO

Two deaths last week spread grief over Film Row. One was the sudden passing of Fred Cleveland of the Circle theatre. Mr. Cleveland had been down on the Row Monday morning and left for his theatre about noon. The same afternoon word was received that he had been stricken by heart disease. Mr. Cleveland was a director of Allied Theatres of Illinois and one of the city's most popular exhibitors.

Joe Daly of the Southern theatre, Oak Park, also died last week following an illness.

The Film Relief fund is in need of replenishing. After many discussions as to how to proceed—a dinner dance as previously, a Monte Carlo night or some such thing, the committee have concluded to dispense with all hocus-pocus. They have decided to compile a list of 150 names and request of each of these an outright donation of $10. It's a simple, direct and economical way of meeting an urgent requirement.

Gollos Bros. are getting ready to reopen the Hyde Park theatre. The building originally was built for theatre purposes and later converted into a bank. Now it becomes a theatre again with new projection equipment and Ideal seats being installed by Joe Goldberg.

Theatre owners who were fortunate enough to win a trip to Chicago's Century of Progress Exposition in the July Exploitation Contest sponsored by the Managers' Round Table Club of MOTION PICTURE HERALD were greeted by many old friends in the film colony here.

Roy Adams of Mason, Mich., reported that business for him suddenly jumped 50 per cent about the middle of July and had continued good ever since. "I am seeing a great many farmers coming into my theatre for the first time in three years," he said.

Mitchell Conery of Kingston, Pa., said that things were looking up steadily in Pennsylvania. He predicted that Fall would see a big revival of attendance.

R. D. Hutchings of Portage, Wis., was delayed getting to the Fair, as he was held at his post until Wednesday on account of personally leading an orchestra on his feature night. Mr. Hutchings is one of the most versatile managers in the business, which helps attendance but makes it doubly difficult to get away.

Thomas Jisa, a veteran exhibitor who has been out of the theatre business for the last several years, is opening the Opera House at Coal City, Ill. The house is being wired and new equipment installed.

Charles Stern, who operates the Cinema and Austin theatres, has added the Karlov.

An exhibitor from Glasgow, Scotland, was a visitor along the Row last week. He is George F. Green of George Green, Ltd., operating a number of theatres, who came here to see the Fair with his relative, J. M. Wilson, of Theatre Screen Corporation of Roosevelt, N. Y.

Herb Chatkin has been named assistant to Jack McPherson at National Screen Company.

Lou Kuttnauer and Arthur Mirchard have opened offices of Midwest Theatre Supply Company on the fourth floor at 910 S. Michigan avenue.

News was received here last week of the death in New York of Ben Abrams, brother of Jerry Abrams.

FROM RCA VICTOR PHOTOPHONE TO EXHIBITORS EVERYWHERE

FOUR 4 MESSAGES

1 GRATEFUL APPRECIATION of your discriminating judgment which made our August, 1933 sales to theatres of "HIGH FIDELITY" Photophone equipment greater than Photophone sales of any other month—an all-time high for Photophone!

2 SINCERE CONGRATULATIONS to the hundreds now equipped with "HIGH FIDELITY"—the finest sound that money can buy!

3 HEARTY INVITATION to those hundreds on the threshold of decision to join the happy host of Photophone fans who know that in new "HIGH FIDELITY" equipment they have a business builder; in fact, a genuine, self-liquidating new deal!

4 DEEP DETERMINATION to continue to shape and adopt only Four Square [4] policies, always considerate of your best interests.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

A BIT OF BARNUM

Stout words, indeed, in last week's issue, from Elmer C. Rhoden, Fox Midwest division manager, who laments the passing of the old time showmanship and clamors for the rebirth of the "Barnum" technique. Rhoden states, and justly, that there is no outward difference today between the dignified banker and the local theatre man and desires that this state of affairs be remedied immediately. Managers of his division are therefore requested to throw off the restraints of the past decade and to place more glamour around their operations.

Easier said than done. Not every manager is "barnumesque" either by instinct or inclination. That class of showman is born, not made, a statement that does not indicate any lack of managerial ability or effort in those who are temperamentally different. The "barnums" are still extant, but until now repressed by non-showmen superiors, regarded with indifference and intolerance, misunderstood by uncomprehending executives, these "sons of barnum" have been compelled to bury every instinct of old time showmanship and conform to a narrow-minded, short-sighted code of operation laid down by "business men" who for many years have ridden high in theatre operation.

Conform or die! Many have conformed, for they, too, must eat. But too many have "died" rather than surrender one iota of their genius, rather than relinquish their precious birthright for an odorous "mess of pottage."

The weakness of autocratic bungling having become glaringly apparent, many executives are now learning that though pictures come in cans, the showmanship necessary to make their exhibition profitable cannot be likewise contained. "Barnumism" is a rare quality that withers under packaging of any sort.

Rhoden's heartening words may mean the beginning of a new deal as well for those disillusioned showmen who can and are only too eager to inject the life-giving needle of glamour and color into the wasting body of the bled-white theatre.

ADDED STRENGTH

To the expanding list of top flight showmen now operating in this metropolitan area we happily add the name of William R. (Big Bill) Raynor, head man at the newly opened de luxe Brooklyn Paramount Theatre. A well-seasoned theatre man, with many years of varied experience, Raynor brings to his present connection a wealth of ability and keen judgment that should lift the Paramount to a still higher eminence.

Your chairman recalls with pleasure a tour of duty at the Fox Detroit under this capable executive where we had every opportunity to study theatre operation as is, where with these old eyes we observed the phenomena of $50,000 grosses garnered with such ammunition as local talent stage shows plus(?) less than strictly first class screen attractions.

Showmanship such as this, finds a ready and profitable welcome, and theatregoing Brooklyn may look forward to further excellent entertainment from this skilled hand that will add strength to the efforts of the other notables now functioning in the sister borough across the river.

SPEEDING UP

With this issue, your Round Table inaugurates another service for the benefit of the memberhip: key city campaigns on late releases wired "hot" from various sections of the country as soon as they are planned or completed, to be published currently upon receipt.

The advantages of this procedure are obvious to managers playing close up behind the prominent key spots, who thus may be informed of the successful exploitation used in time to utilize these ideas or adaptations for their campaigns on the same attraction. Elmer Brient, Loew's, Richmond, Va., Bunny Bryan, Belmont, Chicago, Ill., and Frank Larson, Paramount, Idaho Falls, Idaho, were among the first to respond, and to these helpful members our thanks.

However, the success of the plan depends almost entirely upon the co-operation of managers in key spots playing the new releases first. Local Western Union executives are contacting these showmen to facilitate the forwarding of their campaigns, and the response from the field will determine whether or not this service is to be a permanent feature.

Copies of our last week's lead editorial, "Att: Hon. Sol A. Rosenblatt," have gone forward to the Administrator in Washington, where we trust it will be brought to his personal attention for consideration. What provisions are to be made, if any, for the improvement of managers' working conditions, cannot be foretold, but as we have stated before, any code that does not include some measure of relief, is incomplete. Protection must be given the manager if he is to remain an important factor in theatre operation. We shall report on further progress.

SHOWMEN'S LOBBY LAFFS!

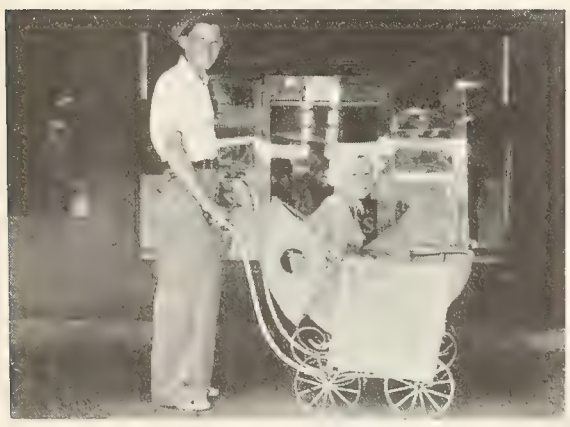
We have Ed Doane to thank for this outburst. Where are all the customers? Inside?

GROWN UP INFANTS USED BY JOHN FALK ON "BABY" CAMPAIGN

Plugging a baby angle on "Baby Face" seems to have gotten a lot for Manager John Falk, Orpheum Theatre, Eldorado, Ill., who put on a number of comedy infant gags to sell his attraction.

A week in advance, he dressed two local boys in baby makeup and had them knocking on every door in town and nearby communities, shouting "baby face" at the startled residents. John says it started lots of talk as the folks called the newspaper and theatre for the answer to the gag. A variation of this, with a bannered baby carriage bally (see below), also gathered the curious.

A bathing beauty stage contest was also put on in which the number from the picture was sung, and Falk also states that he had the mayor proclaim a "Baby Face Day" endorsed by his lunch club and commerce chamber, in conjunction with which a co-op page was put over, each ad containing the names of local babies, whose parents on presentation of the ads at the theatre were given passes. Quite a busy campaign, and John reports satisfactory returns.



Baby Bally!

KAY VACATIONING

Come on, boys, drag out your Waterman and get busy; one of our good members, Kay Kligler, asks to have all you fellows write to him. Under doctor's orders he's "vacationing," and when an honest-to-goodness showman like Kay is out of harness for a while, he's just got to keep in touch with things, so drop him a line at Derrymore Road, Quarterdeck, Nantucket Island, Mass.

SATURDAY BOOKING SWITCH GETS BROWN CAPACITY GROSSES

Figuring that a change on Saturdays from the usual western to bigger pictures might react favorably to the box office, Manager H. J. Brown, of the New Capitol, Martin (Tenn.) booked "Melody Cruise," put a big campaign behind it and rolled up the biggest gross in months.

A beaver board front, with a center circus canopy effect against a sun burst background joined to 40 x 60 posters over his front lobby frames, made an out of the ordinary flash. Lettering was cut out and tacked to the beaver board, the whole painted by "H. J." himself in yellow, red and blue.

Hanging banner in the shape of a pennant held together with thin wood was lettered on both sides, attracting both those driving and walking. Very good, "H. J." let's hear from you again.

LADY ROUND TABLER PUTS ON SOCKO CAMPAIGN FOR HER HOUSE

Theresa Nibler, one of our most gracious and charming members who manages the Paramount Theatre out in Springfield, Missouri, sends us her campaign on "College Humor" when it played her house.

For one of her street ballys, she had a boy wearing a raccoon coat distribute heralds at the State Teachers College, office buildings, street, etc. A Ford car with girls and boys in it toured the streets throwing away heralds announcing playdates. Apparently, they go for street ballys in Springfield, because another one she pulled was a tie-up with a milk products and foods company, serving free sandwiches and chocolate milk in the main foyer. The merchants gave her free advertising on all their trucks and in the street parade.

A special front display was erected with microphone hookup, playing ballyhoo records and the Crosby hits. Music store and 10-cent store tie-up was effected. Tire covers on cars, streamers on taxis, display at library and sundaes named after the pix were but a few of the angles covered by Miss Nibler.

EICHENBERG HOLDS "HOLD" EXTRA DAYS WITH CLICK IDEAS

In spite of a rigid newspaper restriction against free theatre publicity spreads, Manager A. H. Eichenberg, Rialto Theatre, Colorado Springs (Colo.), by a slight increase in his ad budget obtained much more than the usual art and story breaks on "Hold Your Man," his advance teaser ads being the same as used by the Capitol, in New York, and the current displays compelling enough to steal the page.

Merchants and newspapers having adopted a general "thumbs down" policy against theatre tieups or contest, "A. H." brought the importance of the booking to the attention of his patrons by plugging the picture from the stage before running the trailer, and he says this rare, for him, endorsement angle got plenty of attention.

The usual radio, heralds, college contacts, and dance band plugs were also made, but what impresses us most in this campaign was that Eichenberg, by persuading his newspapers to come across, made up for other stunts, as was indicated by a two-day holdover.

TWO-WAY FLIVVER

Some time ago we described Joe Crivello's campaign on "College Humor" at the Capitol, Litchfield, Ill., and in the story spoke of his two-way Ford gag that went over so well that other managers in nearby towns used the stunt. Joe dug up a shot of the screwy vehicle, and here it is.

EGAN TIES IN BIG ANNUAL "STAMPEDE" TO HOUSE CAMPAIGN

A few of the things that Pete Egan, dear old Petah, of the Palace Theatre in Calgary, Alberta, Canada, has been doing are worthy of mention.

On "King Kong" during the morning parade of the Annual Stampede which was viewed by about 100,000 he used a small Austin with a man dressed up as "Kong" drawing the car by a rope, this attracted due attention.

The Stampede was held in front of the theatre and the cowboys and Indians were judged there. Mr. Nathanson, general manager of Famous Players Canadian Corp., was made an Indian Chief at the ceremony. The cowboys drove right into the theatre, picked up "Kong" who was dressed for the occasion and took him out with a rope around his neck and hung him to one of the principal lamp posts on the main street.

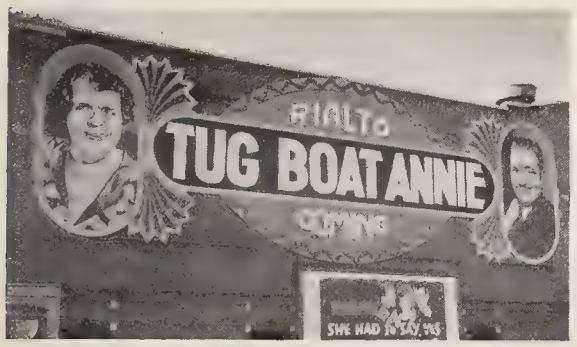
Pete also tied up with the Board of Trade, which allowed him to distribute 10,000 heralds on the picture with their Stampede invitations. He secured an Australian Phallanger (whatever that may be) from the Calgary Zoo and which is considered very lucky in Australia, put the monkey in front of the theatre and thousands stopped to touch the animal for the lucky omen. Give Mr. Phallangar a rub for us, will you, Pete? We can stand it.

Apparently Pete stood the town on its ear with his "Kong" doings.

THEATRE EMPLOYEES CONSTRUCT LARGEST ELECTRIC DISPLAY

Said to be the largest changeable electric sign on any motion picture theatre in the country, a display 81 feet wide by 24 feet high was recently placed in commission at the Rialto Theatre, Williamsport, Pa., advertising "Tugboat Annie."

This tremendous flash is of more than passing interest, as it was the product of the brain and labor of two house employees, William L. Heiss, organist, who conceived and worked out the plans, and Al Webster, chief projectionist, responsible for the complicated electrical construction.



Theatre's Largest

The panels at both ends, 20 feet high and 10 feet wide, are removable and contain the faces of the stars of each picture, these paintings made from 8 by 10's, and executed in the theatre workshop. Heiss drew the plans for five earlier signs, the first much smaller in size and built about five years ago. The Rialto is fortunate in having the services of two such versatile craftsmen, who no doubt are already planning for a display even bigger than the above.

WIRED FROM THE FIELD

The following are the first results of our efforts to speed up to the membership, publication of campaign highlights being put over by managers in prominent key spots on the new releases. Elmer Brient wires us the dope on "Broadway to Hollywood," Bunny Bryan, on "College Humor," and Frank Larson, "Moonlight and Pretzels." Wired campaigns from members in other sections will be run as soon as received. Managers in many first run situations have been requested to co-operate.

IMPORTANT

We call to your attention, "Preparing the Theatre For Winter," by J. T. Knight, Jr., in "Better Theatres" section, issue of Aug. 26, now on your desk.

Mr. Knight is one of the best known experts in the boiler field, and his advice should be thoroughly digested by every showman anxious to put his boiler in tip top condition for the coming winter.

Study the article conscientiously. Following its directions will insure perfect service in the cold weather, for there is nothing that will give more trouble than a balky heating system.

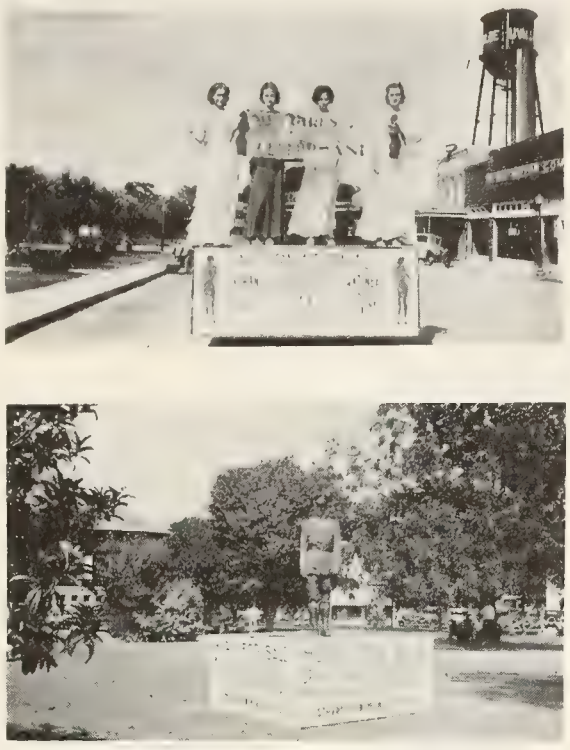
HARD HITTING TAYLOR!

Young Texas Showman Puts Over His Attractions With Many Sock Exploitation Ideas That Click

In one of the recent issues, we outlined some of the activities of Kenneth Taylor, who, among other projects, operates the Strand Theatre, in Uvalde (Tex.), the home of Vice President John Garner. Ken is in his early twenties, a manager for only a few years in spite of which he is putting over the theatre to fine business with campaigns that would do credit to houses in much larger communities.

Ken, like many other real showmen, goes for effective street ballys, and on "International House" he put out a float (see photo) with four local gals in evening dress carrying a red lettered cellophane banner calling attention to the costumes of that material worn by the chorus in the picture. Taylor put on the bally from the front seat, as he says he always does to make sure it goes over right.

Then after the bally, the signs were removed and placed above the marquee, the front further consisting of a title panel across the entrance with oil paintings of the stars, and two side panels of chorus figures in black against a light background, and very flashy.



Street Bally on "International House" and "Heroes For Sale" Platform

"Smoke Lightning"

Tieup with leading store, in which merchant gives free theatre tickets with every $5.00 purchase. This sum does not have to be bought at one time, as patrons are told to save cash receipts until they reach the stated amount. Store takes big display to advertise the hookup, and pays full price for the tickets. This deal has been on for a long time, and the store gives it credit for bringing in extra business.

Ken's bally on this was a box car effect on a truck, sides lettered, and three mounted cowboys riding behind, one with his hands in the air, and the others covering the "bandit" with guns that were borrowed from the local ranger force, which made an ace "crowd-stopper."

"Diplomaniacs"

Painted a store window white, leaving a clear circle in center, copy above reading—"For ladies only," with a picture display inside the store. Naturally, the men stopped for a look, and the gag got a good laugh while it sold the picture.

Lobby was given a barber shop treatment, with actual chair, shelves, shine outfit, wash bowl, etc., Ken again promoting everything without cost. These were also used for a truck bally, with the addition of local boys who doubled for the stars. Taylor had a job getting their costumes, and even tried to borrow one of Vice President Garner's scissor-tail coats to keep the stunt in character. That's how he goes after things.

"Heroes For Sale"

At the cost of less than a dollar, Taylor had his carpenter make up a cloth "army tank," using old beaverboard and frames, and put this out as a truck bally with three boys in uniform, guns and all, borrowed from the American Legion. A stunt that got plenty of attention was a soldier in uniform who stood on a platform in the center of town, copy advertising him as a "hero for sale" (see photo).

Title arrows were tacked all over town pointing in the direction of the theatre, and Ken planted the first one in front of the Vice President's home, figuring it would be seen by the many tourists who stop off to see Mr. Garner's residence. And to round out his campaign, this livewire put over two of the press book newspaper contests to big returns against the handicap of his paper being a weekly.

These above descriptions give you only the highlights of Taylor's campaigns, and we assure you that he backs up all his flashes with plenty of other practical exploitation. Ken keeps going from early morn to midnight, and every attraction gets some kind of a plug. He's a comer, and we are going to hear from this lad, make no mistake.

KAY PROMOTES GUM FOR DISTRIBUTION AT A WELFARE PARTY

Cultivation of the big confectionery company road salesmen is paying dividends to Manager Harold Kay, of the Utopia and Park Theatres, Painesville, Ohio, who reports that a diplomatic approach to one of the travellers netted the theatre thousands of free chewing gum slices for a giveaway on "Another Language." Each slice was fastened to a card which read—"awaken to the facts of life," the facts being the picture and theatre and also the merits of the gum.

It is a fact that the candy travelling salesmen usually have a lot of samples on hand, and that they can be promoted is something other members might take under consideration. Kay states he has the boys in the habit of dropping in to see him when in town, and the good will build up is valuable in getting the needed assistance on giveaway campaigns.

Sound thinking, Harold, and thanks for the kind words about your Round Table.

ART WORK AS IS ART WORK!

Above we are showing three dandy samples of the art work of Andy Beiter, poster artist for Jack Hodges at the Tampa Theatre in Tampa, Fla. Here's hoping that this is only a beginning of a series that we can expect from Andy. What say, can we count on you for more of these samples of real box office showmanship?

PLEASE COOPERATE!

We have close to four thousand members on record at Club headquarters. Unless we are notified of a change of address our lists will be inaccurate.

It takes but a moment for YOU to drop us a letter or post card advising of a change, either of location or theatre connection.

Please keep this in mind and help us maintain our membership lists right up-to-the-minute. You can never tell when we may want to get in immediate touch with you and then find that your letter is returned because of some change of address.

SPOOKY STUNTS PUT OVER BY JUSTIN TO BALLY "THE SPHINX"

For two seconds in advance of the trailer, every light in the Mayfair Theatre, on Seventh Avenue, New York, was extinguished, and through the house p. a. system, a voice mysteriously announced, "Beware the Sphinx," immediately after which the trailer was shown with the house flooded with dark green lights.

This spooky build up was used by Manager Leo G. Justin as part of his campaign on "The Sphinx," other effective ideas also carrying out the mystery angle. These included two large lobby cutouts of the Sphinx, to which were attached wires leading to concealed microphones and loudspeakers. Two mind readers were placed at the "mikes" and answered questions, their replies coming ostensibly from the mouths of the figures.

At intervals of five minutes, prepared announcements were made from each speaker, plugging the picture, and as the bally drew constant crowds, it gave the impression that there were hundreds in line at the box office, which, of course, helped the gross.

"Sphinx" Front

Blowup newspaper raves were planted in the lobby, and special newspaper ads with extra billing were also used.

ESTRIDGE GETS THE MEDAL FOR TIMELY SHOWMANSHIP IN VA.

We've got lots of aggressive showmen in the Club, but James A. Estridge, manager of the Virginia Theatre in Portsmouth, Va., certainly is on his toes.

When his town turned out for the NRA parade, Jimmy went right along with it by furnishing attractive floats; on one he had Uncle Sam riding a pony with banners urging the support of NRA, and on another he had his usherette and operator on a truck holding up a banner advertising his current attraction, "Hold Your Man," which created a lot of comment because a rope was tied around the usherette and operator with a sign reading "Hold Your Man" on the girl's back and "I've Got Mine" on the man's.

Estridge tells us the float got quite a bit of applause as it drove by and we're sure he deserves credit for taking advantage of the parade to the fullest extent.

H. D. McBRIDE PUTS OVER FIRST CO-OP AD IN SPOKANE IN 2 YRS.

There's no doubt but that Spokane was aware that "Hold Your Man" was playing at the Fox Theatre when Manager McBride went out to let the populace know about it.

He used the "dummy" phone call in calling every number listed in the phone book. The minute the subscriber would answer, his girl would say "What time does 'Hold Your Man' go on?" and then apologize profusely when informed she had the wrong number.

Life-savers were secured gratis and distributed in leading cafes, restaurants and hotels. Sets of rules on "How to Hold Your Man" were given out a week in advance of playdate. Jigg saw puzzles were promoted and for two weeks in advance "circuited" through beauty shops. They were also used in the mezzanine for the amusement of patrons waiting for the second show.

Inserts in loaves of bread, Baking Company bannered trucks with playdates, milk bottle hangers, laundry inserts and individual shopping bags were but a few of the gags McBride used.

And one of the best things he put over was the first cooperative ads that had been in the Spokane papers in two years. All in all, we'd say "H. D." put on an excellent campaign and we congratulate him on it.

HARMONY!

NOEL COWARD'S
"BITTER SWEET"
A "Design For Loving" by the author of "Design For Living". Enchanting! Unforgettable! From the play so successfully presented by FLORENZ ZIEGFELD for two years on Broadway!
NRA
STARTS TOMORROW 9:30 A. M.
RIVOLI
B'WAY AT 49th

To harmonize with the spirit of the Nowel Coward romance, Hal Horne, United Artist ad chief, engaged the international artist Hans Flato, to make up the newspaper displays, and the above is one of the beautiful pastel effects that distinguished the New York opening of "Bitter Sweet." Mats of these ads are available to all exhibitors.

MUSICAL GAG!

H. L. Jordan, advertising manager, Richardson Theatre, Seneca, S. C., sends along a sweet little idea he used on "42nd Street" which he writes can be put over on any musical without much expense attached. It takes the form of a stage with a shadow box effect against a background, 18 x 30, containing selling copy. Figures of the principals were cut out from two 11 x 14's, mounted and set up to represent a scene from the picture. Neon lights and lumber were promoted, and the stage set in the foyer in advance, drawing much favorable comment. Jordan's snappy work is indicative of what is being done by ad men with ideas and limited budgets.

EDITOR RUNS THEATRE

R. B. Vail Tells How He Doubles in Brass, With Refreshing Account of Effective Campaign on "42nd St."

Not often do we find editors who are, at the same time, exhibitors, and R. B. Vail, publisher of the weekly "Baldwin Times," at Bay Minette, Ala., runs the 200-seat Rex Theatre with the aid of his family and some of the newspaper staff.

The theatre-paper setup under one control is, of course, a natural, and Vail did not miss any bets on his "42nd St." campaign. In addition to art spreads and display copy, the four-page special feature broadside was inserted in every paper, a gag new enough in "Bay" to cause plenty of excitement among the town's 1,545 residents.

That the attraction played 41 per cent of the total population again proves that showmanship is not a question of favorable location, but native ability, and the following is Vail's own story of his activities:

GENTLEMEN:

The Rex Theatre, here (which we own and manage), showed "42nd St." to 41 per cent (pay customers) of our entire population last Thursday, Friday and Saturday. "Them's results!" as we see it!

Our goal was one-third of our pop. Our campaign was 99 per cent printer's ink. As we own both the show and the newspaper, we were able to put on a campaign that was a press agent's delight.

We gave it plenty, as the enclosed copies of our weekly paper show. We had a big advantage in owning the paper—a mighty good combination in a small town—show and paper. We had no money for a big ballyhoo—no outside loudspeaker, nor car with music, or such like. But what we had, we used.

Of course, this is a shirt-tail spot and our house is probably the smallest to presume to joust with the "Roxys," the "Capitols," the "Chineses" and the other million-dollar babies in this contest. But our "inferiority c." has been given a healthy wallop by a mounting ego, as a result of our very OK showing with "42nd St." last week.

Bear in mind "Forty-second Street" played in Mobile, 25 miles away, three weeks ago. It played in Atmore, 20 miles away, Sunday, Monday and Tuesday, immediately before we started it Thursday. Both spots caught some of our prospects.

The Rex Theatre has 200 seats (some King, eh!). Our town HAD, according to the 1930 census, 1,545 persons. 637 of those persons, or 41 per cent, paid to see "42d Street" the three days we showed it. If you add to this our own family, "John Law" and the passes, we played to 43 per cent of our total population. Percentagely, we are gratified, and in no way are we mortified!

We've been hanging on to the show business by our straggly eyebrows all year. Ought have closed long ago, but just wouldn't.

We manage the show personally, our daughter sells the tickets, our projectionist is also our linotype operator on the newspaper, our son is general handy man. None of us have to depend on the show for bread—neither did any of us get any out of it. But it's looking up, and we are, too! We grossed nearly seven times our average for the preceding 12 months. (And we had rain the first day, too!)

Our campaign was simple. It was based on a recipe by old John Henry Publicity himself—"Tell 'em what you are going to tell 'em, then tell 'em, then tell 'em what you told 'em!" We did. The papers enclosed will show our publicity on the picture. In addition to the papers, we saturated the community with copies of the four-page bill used in the July 27 issue of The Times enclosed. We soaked the mail routes and town box-holders with Exchange postcards.

We placarded the trees, posts, barns, barber shops and all gathering places with cards of the "42d St." ad used in the July 13 issue of The Times enclosed. We stuck out a few more one-sheets than usual, window cards, stills, a banner at the theatre, some "fire sale bunting" in the lobby, invited the Probate Judge of the county and his wife, the Mayor of the town and his wife, a popular army captain residing here and his wife, announced these in the paper as guests of honor for the first show, then ran a "dime show" on another picture at 8 o'clock, following it with the first showing of "42d St." at 10 P. M. (we usually run only one show each night) and then let nature take its course.

She did—and how pleasingly! "SRO" two nights, with 'em actually lined up at the box office to get their ducats for the first time here in over four years. It all but panic-ed the little girl at the window—her first such experience! Eighty per cent of those attending the "dime show" stayed for the other, which gave us over a hundred to start with.

We screened the picture four times during the three days, to an average pay audience of 159 persons in a 200-seat house, in the "countryest" spot outside of South Carolina.

Why, I'll bet you have never even heard of Bay Minette! "Forty-second Street" gave us our highest total gross; our two highest single show grosses and our highest matinee since we've been in the biz. (Sure, we've booked "Gold Diggers!") Why, we had 'em in there who hadn't seen a talking picture before; lots of them who hadn't been in more than a year.

The show business is looking up this bright Monday morning, boys, just have faith in your God, your job, printer's ink and the "New Deal" and there's plenty of "new highs" ahead. I've enjoyed telling you about it. Good luck.

R. B. VAIL.

JACK NELSON PUTS ON GRAND CANADIAN THEATRE CAMPAIGN

What started out to be a picture exploitation but became a city wide drive was Jack Nelson's campaign on "Looking Forward" at the Capitol, North Bay, Ontario, Canada. Realizing the possibilities of the picture's title, Jack tied in every civic organization, lunch club and merchants' association to a "Looking Forward Day" plugged by his local paper with a special six-page section in which every ad carried mention of the day and, of course, the picture. A full page smash on the opening day featured Jack's picture, with credit for the idea.

This event was announced in a masthead box for days in advance, and teaser ads were scattered all through the paper. All stores carried window banners and on the big day put on special sales featuring big window theatre displays. Thousands of title pennants were tacked around town, and the radio station cooperated with free broadcasts during which time prominent American, English, French and Italian residents delivered optimistic talks in different languages advising all auditors to "look forward."

Auto stickers were also used, and these with the pennants were promoted. A shadow box in a prominent window with spaces left for the eyes disclosed a rainbow background in front of which there were stacks of gold, and theatre cards.

Street in front of theatre was heavily bannered, and you can see in the above shot the flags and the snappy theatre Jack manages up thar' in the northland.

KENTUCKY OPENING!

COMMERCE CHAMBER AIDS EXPLOITATION OF SHORT SUBJECT

An effective exploitation campaign for "Inflation," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's timely and popular short feature explaining present economic problems, was worked out during the booking of the short subject at the Palace Theatre in Indianapolis. "Inflation" played here on the same bill with "The Stranger's Return."

The Chamber of Commerce, whose members were enthusiastic about the film after attending a preview, cooperated actively with the theatre in getting it to the attention of the public. Mimeographed messages were sent by the Chamber of Commerce to all leading manufacturing concerns and stores, requesting that their employees be informed of the showing of the film at the Palace Theatre, "so they will have a better knowledge of what the present administration is doing for the betterment of the nation." The mayor and other city officials added their endorsement of this plan of campaign.

A local paper arranged to banner its delivery trucks with copy reading "Inflation—What it is—and what it means—Read about it in the Times and Hear Pete Smith Explain It on the Screen—Now at Loew's Palace," and mention of this short was included in all advance ads on the day of the opening and the following day.

MONTEREY SITS UP AND TAKES NOTICE OF O'CONNOR'S WORK

Back a few weeks ago we reproduced the attractive lobby display that Joe O'Connor had for "Reunion in Vienna" when it played the Golden State Theatre out in Monterey, Cal.

And now we'll tell you a few of the things he did to put the picture over. Three days before "Reunion" opened, an elaborate shadow box nine feet tall and six feet wide was built. It was done in silver metallics and red and black enamel, and two of the attractive usherettes handed out two thousand invitations as the patrons left the theatre. The invitation announced that there would be no advance in price to attend one of M-G-M's outstanding pictures.

Three days in advance Joe made a personal appearance telling the audience about the coming attraction, at the end of his speech a glimpse of the picture was given and then the talking trailer on "Reunion" was shown. This is a gag that can be used on any picture and is a good one.

The streets were bannered, one at the entrance to the other and one banner five blocks from either end of the street. So that people coming or leaving the theatre were bound to see the signs.

Joe is in charge of the local district for the Golden State Theatre Circuit, an outfit that boasts of nearly 100 per cent Round Tablers.

TREASURE HUNT PUT ON BY MENDENHALL TO PLUG "DIGGERS"

To judge from the shot below, every kid and many of the adults in Boise (Idaho) took part in the treasure hunt that featured Manager J. R. Mendenhall's exploitation on "Gold Diggers" at the Fox Theatre there.

"J. R." put the gag on with one of his local papers, and a total sum of $40 was buried in varying amounts, each in a small box. Passes were also placed in other boxes in addition to lucky pocket pieces. The daily gave it a grand send off by printing a map of the district, showing the treasure field. Lettered arrows pointing to the field were put up in advance. The money and passes were buried in the afternoon, and in the evening, at a given signal, hundreds of money hunters went to work.

Radio announcements and the picture song hits were plugged weeks in advance, and during the run of the picture, these musical numbers were picked up from the theatre and broadcast together with theatre and picture credits. Mendenhall also discussed interesting sequences of the picture during other advance air plugs.

Over 200 windows were obtained, from full displays to single cards, and in exchange for a theatre foyer display, the biggest store in town, previously against tieups, went for one of their most prominent windows.

The lucky pocket press book coins were given out at the box office for weeks in advance with change for every bill, and "J. R." says the coins gave out as the demand was terrific. Two bannered cars toured the city and helped to bring in the business this campaign well deserved.

HOUSE INSPECTIONS NOW IN ORDER!

In preparation for the coming winter season we cannot urge too strongly the necessity for a careful house inspection from top to bottom. Among the items to be looked after are:

Heating plants.
Roofs to be free of leaks.
Seats to be gone over and put in good repair.
Lobbies to be brightened up and displays to be checked.
Booth and sound equipment to be in tip-top condition.
Signs to be relamped (if necessary) and cleaned up.
Curtains and drapes to be thoroughly cleaned.
Uniforms to be cleaned and prepared for present staff.
Retiring rooms to be free of odors and kept spotless.
Plumbing to be gone over carefully.
Ticket machine and chopper to be looked after.

In addition to the above few items, make up an inventory of your supplies and spare parts to be sure you have everything on hand for emergency purposes. This includes janitor and toilet supplies, tickets, lamps, etc.

A HOT POTATO

THE motion picture industry, for long years accustomed to wide margins of profit in all departments, has long been highly acquiescent and casually indifferent in its relations with various union labor organizations. A striking case in point is afforded by the widely known and recently officially revealed interior affairs of the operators' union in New York. The indifference of the employing motion picture interests, or their lack of solidarity, or both, has at times, as amazingly revealed in many instances, given opportunity and nourishment to a type of labor official who has profited much for himself and little indeed for his clients.

Now that all operations in the industry are being considerably more subject to scrutiny, and now that cost sheets are presumed to bear a somewhat more intimate relation to subsequent grosses, the labor element assumes a much larger importance and will mayhap get more attention.

All of which is a timely matter for consideration in connection with the increasing activity of production in the New York sector. An expert looking over the costs on a recent New York made picture decided that ten percent of the total expense of producing the negative went to pay for charges on labor resulting from the arbitrary enforcement of agent's rulings in nowise concerned with productive work — a ten percent, observed the expert, due entirely to a local condition.

If the application of such policies by labor agents were found ultimately to the profit of the workmen concerned there would be at least that to be recorded in favor of them. But when the policies and scales inhibit activity there can result nothing but complete loss. The history of the roadshow, mostly unwritten, affords an unhappy example. It is the commonly told story that the rise of the feature motion picture put the roadshow out of business. That is only a fraction of the facts. Paralleling the rise of the motion picture, inexpensively presented with a machine and a can of film, the legitimate theatres were confronted with a rising scale and set of requirements for stage hands which vastly increased the discrepancy in cost between the picture and the stage show. There presently arrived a time when in many road stands the stage hands took a larger proportion of the gross than the dramatic company and its players. And in sequel one day there was no longer any roadshow. The opera house went dark or into the movies and the stage hands' jobs were no more.

The problem is one that the motion picture industry has ever handled gingerly as a hot potato. With the important forces and interests now involved in the movement toward eastern production, it appears likely that the potato will now have to be dealt with in some fashion.

IT'S TODAY'S IDEA

OVER on Long Island at Eastern Service Studios, Mr. Eddie Dowling, erstwhile actor, playwright and showman, is now in the role of the executive and business head of a project which seeks to set up a bridge between the screen and stage and in some fashion make the making of motion pictures mayhap a bit more of Broadway's business. So it comes that Mr. Arthur Hopkins, stage producer of note, is currently making a picture of Arnold Bennett's "The Great Adventure," and appears with a by-line on the dramatic page of The New York Times to say that "It may be that out of the picture business the theatre producer can siphon the funds to keep the theatre and its people active and repay the picture business by the steady development of talent."

The thought is interesting and its presentation ingenious. However, it really represents an endeavor at a device to prolong the career of the ancient and outmoded art of the stage by an artificial support instead of by the natural and direct nourishment of public patronage. Relief from resort to such methods can obtain for only the briefest intervals in the evolution of the art and industry. We have here in fact yet another involved evasion of the fact that the motion picture is the superseding tool, medium and instrument of the dramatic art. The theatre is not and never was an art. It was the frame, not the painting, the page, not the story. Our talking screen is the new frame, the new page, for the telling of the same stories. It is the story that is the art, and it has always been the story. Only the method of the telling has changed.

One obviously must admit that in the current state of development the screen is very much the borrower from the stage. That means hardly as much as the fact that once upon a time the airplane was a heavy borrower of motive power from the motor car. Today the motor car is borrowing from the airplane, in motive power and body design.

And one is reminded whimsically that while Mr. Hopkins speaks so fluently of the potential service of the stage in "the steady development of talent" he casts most importantly in his production the screen-made Miss Lillian Gish.

It will be yet a while, but the venerable glories of the stage will become dim history, and what of the stage ultimately survives will in certainty be found drawing its materials, in both players and their vehicles, from the screen.

The idea upon which Mr. Dowling and Mr. Hopkins are now basing their effort is good and sufficient unto this day, which is enough for any idea, but it can ordain no tomorrows.

DESPITE the fact that the films are now made in dark and insulated studios, entirely by electric light, the current and public manifestations of the code hearings in Washington most poignantly reveal that the motion picture still lives in a glass house.

CANNED EDUCATION

Worthy of public attention, producer consideration, is Producer Jesse L. Lasky's thought concerning a possible public use for the once-successful motion pictures which today lie almost forgotten in the storage vaults of Hollywood, today costing thousands in insurance, once costing millions to produce. The Lasky idea: to the educational authorities of the nation would be turned over many of these films, for use in the teaching of history, geography and the like. Said the producer last week: "My plan would not bring a cent of profit to the producers. It would provide the means for turning over . . . such old films as have educational merit." He named "Abraham Lincoln," "The Covered Wagon," "Old Ironsides," "The Rough Riders," "America," as examples. To school children would thus come an unprecedented treat in canned education. Playing "hookey" would be a rarity. . . .

MUSIC "MONOPOLY"

With keen interest will exhibitors watch a new federal court suit this week in New York brought by the Pennsylvania Broadcasting Company, operating WIP, Philadelphia, against the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, charging the society "aims to fix prices and to monopolize and control . . . public performance of all forms of musical entertainment, especially . . . broadcasting." Supporting conspiracy charges, the plaintiff cites compulsion in signing a standard agreement, an annual fee, royalties from three to five per cent, an "all or none" acceptance clause on compositions. Famed film attorney Nathan Burkan, often defense counsel for the ASCAP in the early days following its 1913 founding by Victor Herbert to protect song writers, foresees no great difficulty adding one more legal scalp to his belt as ASCAP attorney in the case. Long annoyed, exhibitors will be quick to press the advantage, should the Society fail in defense. . . .

POPULAR CINEMA

More than a tear or two is shed by England's able St. John Ervine, recently in the London Observer studying a report of the Edinburgh Cinema inquiry committee, contemplating the love of children for the cinema, their lack of knowledge of the theatre. Even adults, he finds, know little or nothing about the "legitimate." He is "depressed by the thought that all this agility and vigor (toward pictures) is not being trained for the theatre." In his sadness the notable St. John fails to see what the screen offers which is beyond the power of the stage, venerable as it may be. Mentioned in the report so contemplated by Mr. Ervine are the screen personality references of the younger generation of the English. Significant is one remark from the playwright: "For years, I have insisted that unless the theatre adjusts itself to the conditions of the actual world, it will one day discover that it has no audience at all. The younger generation will not endure the discomforts of playgoing." The film likes and dislikes of children, he finds, are "entirely healthy." Healthy, also, then, appears the future of the cinema in Great Britain. . . .

STICKLERS

Strict sticklers for the letter of the law are the Kansas censors, attested by their latest ultimatum to harried exhibitors of the state. Under a recent reform of existing law, exhibitors were required to run a censorial certificate of approval of films shown at each performance. Careless, numerous exhibitors failed to comply. The result: the warning that unless showmen obey implicitly, there will be restored the old law whereby the censor will attach the long-annoying tags to films. A committee of exhibitors and distributors, meeting with Governor Landon, wrought the change at the legislature's last session. No easier are Kansas theatremen making their lot by failure to comply with existing statutes. . . .

BY A WHISKER

Chewing its upper lip last week was Germany's motion picture trade journal, Film Kurier, and all over Charles Chaplin's mustachio, as reported by London's Daily Herald. The reason: reports that the comedian had determined to discontinue the use of his long famed insignificant mustache, because it too closely resembles that worn by Adolf Hitler. Drawn was a sharp contrast between Chaplin, mere film comedian, and Hitler, the "intellectual." Chaplin still retains his popularity. . . .

NICKNAME

"I care not what others may do, but as for me, give me" the right to my name—or else. Thus, in effect, did Samuel Lionel (Roxy) Rothafel, Radio City generalissimo, last week react personally to the general assumption that RKO would drop its action legally to gain the use of the name "Roxy" for its Radio City house, when it announced a name change to the RKO Center. Filed by the Rothafel attorneys in United States supreme court was a writ of certiorari, appealing a recent circuit court decision giving the original Roxy theatre exclusive right to the name. Determined is "Roxy" Rothafel to fight for his nickname. . . .

SHORT CUT

Long and wearisome is the path of the dreaming American girl toward her Mecca, Hollywood. To many a screen-struck youngster from the farm, the city streets, the short cut on the path is the perennial bathing beauty contest. Last week in Atlantic City was consternation the reigning queen among beauties, as several in a Pageant contest found themselves suddenly disqualified, for lack of residence in the state each represented. To one only came satisfaction, in the form of an RKO player contract at a starting salary of $300 per week. That one, a Miss Elsa Donath, selected as Miss New York, earlier withdrew from the national contest, leaving an annoyed Miss America minus a film contract, plus a title. No deterrent are such fiascoes to longing, dreaming young feminine film fans. . . .

SELLING PROBLEM

Stringent have become the rules, regulations governing the long contentious outdoor advertising along the highways of California. Recently was a measure passed by the legislature. Now are steps being taken to enforce that measure. All signs within view of the public highway, outside incorporated village and town limits, fall within the law's provisions. For outdoor advertising is a license fee of $50 annually assessed. For each billboard, sign are additional fees required. Large users of outdoor space are theatres. . . .

PROBLEM OF LABOR LEADS DEBATE AT CAPITAL'S HEARING ON CODE

by TERRY RAMSAYE

Written in Washington

For two long days now, as we approach the end of this sultry Washington September Wednesday afternoon, there has been a torrent of motion picture speeches flowing through the three golden horns of the amplifier system in the great general assembly hall of the United States Chamber of Commerce building.

Dark, pale, eagle-faced Sol A. Rosenblatt, deputy administrator, sits, listens, rules, all with a judicial maturity, a certainty that throws into pictorial contrast his young vigor.

Here on the judgment seat is a Broadway lawyer, versed in the ways and byways of the amusement world and its people, a lawyer thus abruptly rendered detached, impersonal, abstract, in the service of the National Recovery Act. Before him sits the motion picture industry and all of the rest of the amusement world which pertains, with accredited representatives of its several branches, its endless warring factions, its two hundred and seventy and more trades and crafts, rising as they are called to speak their pieces and enter their pleas.

IT IS A STRANGE KALEIDOSCOPIC PAGEANT OF great and small. The issues range from the great basic problems of production, distribution and exhibition, to a contention of the scene painters that they should have jurisdiction over hairdressing and rouge on the stages of Hollywood, to a demand of hod-carriers and huskies to be classed as "semi-skilled" labor.

Gravest and widest in importance of the issues before the Code session is that of the handling of the relations between organized labor and the motion picture exhibitor. On the platform of these open meetings before the listening hundreds this subject and issue of labor affecting the twelve thousand operating theatres of the country has been handled with a curiously competent and deft technique. These meetings are the publicity floration, the place of blowing off steam and airing opinions, views and purposes.

And so upon this platform the representatives of organized labor have been given the spotlight of attention for demands and declarations. And with that the problems of labor have been shunted into committees, the conferences and caucuses when whatever is to be really done will be done. These divide into two sets of committees, the first representing the issue of labor and production, set at work Tuesday night, and the second, put in motion Wednesday afternoon, to deal with labor in exhibition, the bitterest and biggest of the struggles involving in total the larger number, and in gross the most dollars, extending to every hamlet which has a screen. The basic demand for an operator for every projection machine every shift. And alongside are the demands of other allied and related unions pertaining to theatre operation, including stage hands, maintenance electricians and the like.

What the industry can expect with respect to regulation of labor relations in its final Code may be measured by what is to be found in the accepted codes of other industries gone ahead. In keeping with the general NRA policy, Section II, Article 1 of the production-distribution draft of the Code, providing the stipulation for "open shop" policy, was removed and obliterated as the first official gesture of Mr. Rosenblatt at the first session. It is exceedingly clear that the Administration is not to be involved in specific issues between the employers and organized labor. The great unsolved general problem, in which the motion picture will presently be found to share, centers on the one term "collective bargaining." It is held that the employer must deal with the chosen representative of his workers. Nowhere in the record is there yet a decision as to how many groups, each with their separate representatives, might be formed in any one organization or establishment. In reduction to an absurd example, each two workers might form a collective group and demand negotiations and settlement.

Typical of the demands of labor in studio production is the proposal for a thirty-hour week and increases in wage scales.

The political and economic weight of organized labor being what it is, it is difficult to see what may be expected of code regulations save a cautious and gingerly neutrality, phrased in broad general terms in the final document.

WILLIAM GREEN, PRESIDENT OF THE AMERICAN Federation of Labor, speaking Wednesday, poured much of the oil of optimism on the subject of motion picture relations in an address which touched no issues. Meanwhile, here to strive for the new demands are the more belligerent and professionally aggressive William C. Elliott, interestingly accredited to Local 683 of the Film Technicians IATSE and MPMO of Hollywood, and Lew C. Blix, business agent of the same organization, along with sundry others. While on the employers' side of course—and conspicuously and outspokenly—is Pat Casey, "chairman of the producers committee." Among the witnesses officially listed are three major studio managers, Jack Gain of Fox, Frank Brandow of Paramount and Fred Pelton of M-G-M. The studio managers were but lightly heard from in the public meetings. They, too, are likely to be considerably more emphatic and specific in the seclusion of the closed conferences.

The exhibition element of the labor problems before the Code hearing was detached for star chamber treatment in the midst of

"DYNAMITE"

R. B. Wilby, an exhibitor leader in the Southland, evolved from the celebrated Steve Lynch school of showmanship, more recently in partnership affiliation with Publix and now in the reconstruction era the master of Valatenga Theatres, Inc., headquartering at Atlanta, detonated the dramatic highlight of the Code hearing in Washington late Wednesday when he was called to the stand.

"I protest the acceptance of the labor scales embodied in the Code presented," said Mr. Wilby, "because these existing scales have been extorted by duress and physical violence. Further, this violence has been addressed at and aimed toward the intimidation of the public."

Sol Rosenblatt, Deputy Administrator and the voice of the N R A, raised an arresting hand.

"I refuse to hear this," he proclaimed.

Mr. Wilby, unsurprised, unperturbed, went dryly on.

"Here is a telegram," he continued. "One of my theatres was bombed again last night and dynamite was planted at my home."

Again Mr. Rosenblatt firmly and officially refused hearing.

"Take that to the Attorney General, that's where that belongs," he insisted.

Mr. Wilby went on down the aisle. And as he went, John P. Frey, labor adviser on the rostrum with the Deputy Administrator, leaned over with a demand that the matter be stricken from the record—and it was so ordered.

"All of which," observed Mr. Wilby later, "was as I anticipated, but stricken or not, it is of record."

Hearing Centers on Labor Problem

the Wednesday session, when at the instructions of Mr. Rosenblatt the exhibitors went to an adjacent assembly room to organize. Jack Miller of Chicago presided at what flamed immediately into a stormy session, with half a dozen floor speeches going on at once and filled with high tension. The air was cleared presently when Charles R. Metzger of Indianapolis moved for the naming of a committee to be charged with forming a committee. This resulted in the delegation to that delicate task to James C. Ritter of Detroit, Ed Kuykendall of Mississippi, Abram Myers and Mr. Miller. The committee on the committee was thus made up entirely of Allied States Association and Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America officials. However, when this committee went into session in the afternoon at the Hotel Mayflower, the concentration headquarters of the motion picture groups, it appeared that the final committee would be made more widely representative. Among those most diligently and ardently industrious on the labor problems of the exhibitor at the Code hearing conclave is R. B. Wilby of Valatenga Theatres, Atlanta. M. A. Lightman of Memphis, in attendance, has also recently been considerably engaged in labor controversies, and is likely to be a militant figure in the labor conferences.

The labor problems of the motion picture have always previously been, at the widest, sectional and usually intensely local. Now for the first time, the NRA brings the motion picture to look at labor in national terms.

One of the most strikingly effective special presentations in the banner-bedecked assembly hall of the Code hearing came Wednesday in the remarks of Edward Golden of Monogram Pictures, who concerned himself more especially with the much mooted double bill question.

Mr. Golden scored heavily in the direction of the purposes of the National Recovery Administration when he pointed out that regulations aimed at the elimination of double bill programs would inevitably reduce, if not completely inhibit, the activities of many independent studios and reduce employment importantly in the production community.

Further, Mr. Golden answered contentions variously embodied in the carefully prepared remarks of clubwomen concerned with uplift, presented the day before, that double billing rendered the selection of "Family Programs" and shows for children difficult because of conflicting moral contents on the bill.

"Our pictures are made for the masses and we can not afford to take the chances on sophistication of the type that characterizes some productions," he observed. "There has been some mention of 'Oliver Twist' as one of the more wholesome pictures, handicapped on a double bill. We made 'Oliver Twist.'"

There was reminiscence of the embattled days of old when national censorship was a more ardent issue, in the attendance of Canon William Sheafe Chase, then of Christ Church, Brooklyn, and now superintendent of the International Reform Bureau in Washington. Canon Chase made a speech, his old speech, on the iniquities of the screen and put the Patman bill into the record. But the light of censorship flickered only feebly in the session. Utterances of the sort had been anticipated considerably and prepared against by certain aspects of the speech by which Will Hays became the first "witness" of the hearing at Tuesday's opening session. The record was further supplied with exhibit material in behalf of the uplifting and cultural values of the motion picture in the carefully prepared expressions of an array of clubwomen, including Mrs. William Baldwin Smith of the New York State Federation of Women's Clubs,; Elizabeth M. Brennan, president of the International Federation of Catholic Alumnae; Mrs. Arretus Franklin Burt of St. Louis; Camille Kelley of Memphis, Tenn., and others.

The assembly hall at the Chamber of Commerce building, all bedecked with silken banners embroidered with the arms of the explorers and discoverers, from Cabot to De Soto is so for the day the arena of this amazing pageantry of the first great conscious, purposely designed impingement of the motion picture industry upon the institutionally organized United States. It is a part of that vastly greater picture in which industries are being admitted to and drafted into a new citizenship. The movies are reciting their saga while they get their papers.

An alphabetical listing of the names of representatives of all the industry at the Code hearing will be found beginning on page 44.

Labor the Highlight of First Session

Delegates and appointed spokesmen, coming from all over the nation, stormed the opening session of the hearing, to present to Deputy Rosenblatt, on behalf of some 60 different union groups, their individual and concerted ideas of what the industry code should contain in the matter of labor requirements, maximum wages and minimum hours.

There were spokesmen for the hod carriers and the wardrobe workers, projectionists, musicians, stunt pilots and upholsterers; stage hands and cameramen, and studio helpers of all kinds and descriptions, to say nothing of the creative workers in Hollywood, who were represented independently and by the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences.

Aside from a few other problems of issue—principally the matter of motion picture morals, premiums at theatres, poster exchanges—the labor question was the thing of moment during most of Tuesday's session, and concluding arguments of labor interests were presented Wednesday.

The combined efforts of labor's spokesmen left little doubt that it wants a code with provisions for maintenance of normal wages, and a reduction of hours.

Almost without exception, the labor groups all asked inclusion of provisions which would prevent producers, distributors and exhibitors from reducing salaries and wages from the levels reached in August under the President's blanket re-employment agreement.

OPEN SHOP PRINCIPLE IS RULED OUT

Probably one of the most important occurrences at Tuesday's session was the announcement by Mr. Rosenblatt in opening the meeting that the "open shop" principle is to be ruled out of the film industry's code. Section II of Article I in the production-distribution code, giving employers and employees the right of bargaining together free from any third party, had been withdrawn, he said, but declined to give any reason. At the same time Father Francis Haas, of the NRA Labor Advisory Board, told the code hearing for the shoe industry in the Mayflower hotel that any declaration for an "open shop" was not proper in any code.

Sub-division A of Section I of the National Industrial Recovery Act itself makes it clear that employees shall have the right to organize and bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing.

Academy vs. Equity

Since 1929 virtually at each others' throats, the long-standing bitterness between the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences and Actors' Equity came close to an open outbreak Tuesday when Frank Gillmore, Equity president, charged that the Academy was little more than a company union for the producers. J. Theodore Reed, Academy president, emphatically denied this charge. Mr. Gillmore then said that 54 per cent of the actors in Hollywood getting screen credits are Equity members and that the Academy could boast of but 296 actor members and 148 producers. Under these circumstances, Mr. Gillmore asserted, "players cannot possibly get fair representation through the Academy."

Replying to this, Mr. Reed said that associate producers, studio managers and other studio officials are classified as producers by the Academy for its own purposes, as they have employment authority, but actually there are but 14 major producers on the Coast.

Mr. Gillmore's statement that 54 per cent of screen credit players are Equity members would mean that of 2,583 actors who received credits in a 1933 production analysis, 1,418 are members of his organization.

Further than this, Mr. Gillmore declared that 80 per cent of character and small part actors whose names do not appear in credit lists also were Equity members and that for this reason Equity should have jurisdiction over films and sound pictures.

"Gillmore said the Academy was apparently strong and powerful," Mr. Reed said later in the day. "He stated our case exactly for us. We have, however, no quarrel with Equity."

Among other points submitted in the Academy's brief to Mr. Rosenblatt was an entirely new proposal regarding "star raiding," which would prohibit producers from negotiating with contract artists of other producers prior to 30 days before termination of their contracts, provided the artist has been under contract for a minimum of one year or for a minimum of three pictures and receiving a minimum of either $1,000 a week or $15,000 a picture. The Academy also must be the recipient for registration of all offers made within the 30-day period and in turn will undertake to notify the employing producer of the existence of any such registered offers.

A new agent clause submitted in the Academy brief states that agents who violate the code shall be suspended and prohibits producers from negotiating with these agents during the period of their expulsion. It also calls for adoption of the Academy's code for artist-agent-producer negotiations and prohibits negotiations with agents not parties to the code.

Speaking for the actors' branch of the Academy, Lionel Atwill revealed that the five branches of the Coast organization are not in accord among themselves over the proposed amendments to the artist-producer-agent provision and the "star raiding" clause. Mr. Atwill emphasized the actors' contention that bidding for talent should be kept free of all entanglements.

Other recommendations in the Academy brief included a maximum working hour amendment providing for 60 hours weekly for assistant directors with reimbursement for emergency overtime unless they are under contract for more than six months; putting all laboratory employees, except department heads and assistants, sound recorders, sound stage engineers, sound grips, "key" men and second and assistant cameramen under the classifications of the 40-hour week. First cameramen and art directors are added to the list of "emergency workers" whose hours are not to be restricted. Art directors, however, would be prohibited from handling more than two feature length pictures at any one time and supervising art directors from handling more than one, providing more than two art directors are under his supervision.

The Academy, represented by Frank Wood and Allen Garcia, pleaded Tuesday for a complete re-registration of extras in Hollywood under a new system which would insure a sufficient number of extras for ordinary calls and minimum wages that would add about 2.8 per cent to the costs for extras to major studios and about 2.1 per cent to those of the independents.

Minimum salaries asked for extras are: $7.50 a day for individual parts and atmosphere persons; $15 for dress extras, and $25 daily for bit parts and parts with lines. Hour limitations also are requested.

Further recommendations made by Mr.

JUST ONE OF 1,600 CODES

The motion picture industry and its troubles are in session in Washington under the wings of the Blue Eagle. The objective is a code of operation to apply through the period of the application of the National Recovery Act. The motion picture's several hundred special interests, ramifications, trades and crafts seek a solution of the accumulated woes of three hectic decades of growth and in many instances seek too selfishly to capitalize opportunity for special privilege. The NRA Administration meanwhile proceeds toward the primary objective of reduction of unemployment accompanied by the establishment of minimum wages and maximum hours.

Ostensibly it is a set of public hearings. In reduction to practice, the work is being done and will be completed by secluded conferences and caucuses. When they have done their work, presumably by the end of this week, the NRA will take the result in hand and winnow it. What will remain and appear in the Code will be what the caucuses have really agreed upon, plus NRA decisions upon such controversial material as is deemed relevant.

Much and perhaps most of the debates and presentations of the week's spectacular public sessions will be found to be no part of the final document. Of the much that is being said little can result. The NRA does not contemplate taking over the motion picture business and its problems. After the furore of the Code excitement is over the motion picture industry will return to the theatre, the studio and the home office with a recollection of Washington, a few admonitions and the same job to do as ever, with the same persons, the same problems and the same flow of product.

To the NRA the Motion Picture Code will be one of the sixteen hundred and odd presented so far, of which something like twenty-five have gone through the final process of Presidential approval. The motion picture, grandiose as it is, is only a little part of a vast parade of industries on the national screen. The NRA sees it important as one of them, just one. The motion picture will likely be found to prosper more through a general success of the NRA program affecting the amusement buying power of the masses than through any special permits of its own special Code. The aim is the recovery of the United States. —TERRY RAMSAYE

PARAMOUNT GROUP NAME DR. JULIUS KLEIN

Studying Reorganization Plans for Group Representing $25,000,000; Ralph Kohn Testifies $2,250,000 in Bonuses in 1929

Several important developments in the Paramount Publix receivership and financial situation took place during the week, as follows:

1. A study of Paramount Publix reorganization plans was undertaken by Dr. Julius Klein, former assistant secretary of commerce under former President Hoover, on behalf of a group of bondholders representing about $25,000,000.

2. A warning was issued by Referee Davis to bondholders to file their claims before September 14, the deadline under the law.

3. A minority group filed a motion for leave to file action for removal of the trustees in bankruptcy, to be heard October 2, on grounds of disqualification.

4. Revelation by Ralph A. Kohn, vice-president and former treasurer, that in 1929 bonuses paid to Paramount executives aggregated $2,250,000.

5. Irving Trust, trustee for Publix, announced it will contest certain lease claims.

Previous indications that Paramount Publix's financial entanglements and reorganization of its corporate entity may be finally smoothed out before the end of the year were given added stimulus this week with the announcement that Dr. Julius Klein for many days has been in constant touch in New York with Charles E. Richardson, Eugene W. Leake and Charles D. Hilles, the company's trustees in bankruptcy, and also with many Paramount executives.

Sir William Wiseman, partner in Kuhn, Loeb & Co., returned to New York from England Tuesday and went into immediate conference with Dr. Klein. It is expected that Sir William and Dr. Klein will work out specific recommendations together for general reorganization of Paramount's financial structure.

The next meeting of the company's creditors will be at Referee Davis' offices September 22.

Because of a wide knowledge of financial, economic and industrial affairs, gained through his former position in the Department of Commerce and because of his work recently in reorganization of the United Cigar Stores chain, Dr. Klein was asked by the bondholders to study the Paramount Publix situation for them.

Dr. Klein originally was named a member of the bondholders' protective committee of which Frank A. Vanderlip is chairman. Kuhn, Loeb & Co., Chase National Bank and First National Bank of Chicago are among Dr. Klein's principals, along with a number of other but less important holders of Paramount Publix bonds, whom he will represent.

Dr. Klein was born in San Jose, Cal., in 1886, and educated at the University of California and Harvard. He also studied at the Sorbonne in Paris and in Berlin. In 1931 he received an LLD. degree from Lawrence College, Appleton, Wis. After completing his studies Dr. Klein undertook special investigations in Latin America and made a survey of Spanish history and economics. From 1917 to 1919 he was chief of the Latin America division of the Department of Commerce and from 1919 to 1920 was U. S. commercial attache in Buenos Aires. From 1921 to 1929 Dr. Klein was director of the U. S. Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, and in 1929 he was appointed assistant secretary of commerce, which post he held until 1933.

At a hearing in the bankruptcy proceedings of Paramount Publix Corporation last week, Referee Henry K. Davis pointed out that September 14 (Thursday) ends the six-months period from date of bankruptcy during which the law allows creditors to file claims. He said only about 55 per cent of the company's bondholders have filed.

Samuel Zirn, attorney for a group of Paramount bondholders, made a motion for leave to file an action for the removal of the trustees in bankruptcy, Charles D. Hilles and Eugene W. Leake, on the grounds of disqualification, and to remove Referee Davis on the grounds of bias. The motion does not mention trustee Charles E. Richardson. It will be heard on October 2, in the U. S. circuit court of appeals, New York.

Ralph A. Kohn, vice-president and former treasurer of the company, last week in testifying before a creditors' meeting, said that in the year 1929, almost $2,250,000 were paid five company executives in bonuses.

Questioned by Saul E. Rogers, attorney for a creditors' group, Mr. Kohn said like bonuses were paid in 1927, 1928 and for three months in 1930.

"We decided then," he explained, "that business did not warrant the payment of bonuses and for that year we paid a stock bonus for the first quarter only."

The five executives were Adolph Zukor, Jesse Lasky, Sidney Kent, Sam Katz and Mr. Kohn.

Mr. Rogers asked for specific data concerning the salaries and income of the five executives, and also of John Hertz and Emil Schauer during their connection with the firm. Mr. Kohn agreed to try to have all such figures for the next hearing, which was tentatively set for September 14.

Netting $14,000,000 Then

Mr. Kohn pointed out that when the bonuses were being paid the company was showing net profits of $14,000,000 and more. It was brought out that in 1931, when no bonus was paid, the company showed a net profit of $7,000,000.

Questions on the company's method of writing off depreciation revealed that, according to the consolidated balance sheet of Paramount and its subsidiaries, in 1930, $10,731,000 was written off in depreciation; $11,755,000 in 1931, and in nine months of 1932 about $8,000,000.

Mr. Rogers asked Mr. Kohn if he knew of any purchase of Paramount bonds at more than the prevailing market level. The witness replied in the negative, adding that he bought bonds regularly for the company's sinking fund account until a short time before the bankruptcy, and that he paid the market price at all times.

Additional developments included an effort by Irving Trust Company, as receiver for Pictures Realization Corporation, to obtain the release of a $15,300 trust fund set aside by Paramount from rentals of the film "Honeymoon Lane." Tobias A. Keppler, attorney representing Irving Trust, appeared before Referee Davis seeking an order for release of the fund. Referee Davis deferred a ruling.

Meanwhile Irving Trust, as trustee for Publix Enterprises, announced last week that it will contest certain lease claims against the bankrupt Paramount Publix subsidiary, aggregating $620,000, which have been filed by the owners of three Missouri theatres formerly operated by Publix—the Paramount at Springfield, Paramount at Joplin and Electric at Kansas City.

A compromise $6,000 settlement of an $11,000 lease claim against Paramount Publix for rent due on the Empire theatre, Broadway and 40th Street, New York, was tentatively approved. Lessor is 1,432 Broadway Corporation.

BRIEFLY . . .

The $100,000 plagiarism suit brought by Mrs. Sadie Witwer against Harold Lloyd in connection with his production "The Freshman," has been dropped on order of the circuit court of appeals, San Francisco. Terms of settlement were not made public. . . .

Suit Against Eastman Kodak Reinstated in Philadelphia

The circuit court of appeals in Philadelphia last week reinstated the suit of Charles B. Gray against the Eastman Kodak company for alleged infringement of his patent on a "push-button type of camera shutter mechanism.

The suit recently was dismissed by Federal Judge William H. Kirkpatrick on the ground that Mr. Gray's device lacked invention. Previous to that he had won a judgment for $153,553, which would have been trebled against Eastman, but Judge O. B. Dickinson, who tried the case, set the award aside because of technical irregularities during the trial.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

WHEN Paramount's Florence Roberts toured Africa with a "rep" company, back in 1915, she had a neat experience. During the Zulu uprising around Mafeking, Miss Roberts was in the interior with her Zulu houseboy, "Sixpence." One night when the rebellion reached a climax, the black tribe held a secret meeting at which it was determined that every houseboy was to slay the family for which he worked.

"That night," she reports, "'Sixpence' came in and introduced me to 'Sausage,' the servant of a neighbor. He told me that inasmuch as I had been so kind to him, he wished to do me no harm, and thereafter divulged the conspiracy.

"Now that's fine, 'Sixpence,' I said, trying to keep from shaking. I knew you wouldn't kill me after I had been so good to you."

"'Thank you, thank you, Miss Roberts,' replied the houseboy. 'I wouldn't kill you. I kill "Sausage's" mistress; he kill you!'"

And just at the crucial moment there arrived on the scene four boatloads of U. S. Marines, or maybe it was Col. Teddy Roosevelt's Roughriders, or was it Al Capone's boys from Chicago?

It is true, as General Johnson says, that the radio and the moving pictures have enabled the people to know instantly what is going on, and more nearly to think and act as one. "And what does it mean to most of the American people?" asks F. P. Adams. "It means that the folks in Maine see a Dietrich or Cooper film synchronously with the folks in Oregon; and they hear the same silly words to the same torch song at the same moment."

Maybe, as Mr. Paul H. Oehser, suggests, the whole idea of the code originated in Revelations 13:16, 17:

> And he causeth all, both small and great, rich and poor, free and bond, to receive a mark in their right hand, or in their foreheads.
> And that no man might buy or sell, save he that had the mark, or the name of the beast, or the number of his name.

And while the nation's motion picture industry was at Washington speaking about the rights and wrongs of double bills, premiums, giveaways, two-for-ones and other box-office lures, we were reminded of the old showmen's theory, "Successes are always successes; failures are always failures"—regardless, ad infinitum.

Someone asked Paramount's Fraulein Dorothea Wieck, who had just moved into a little hilltop bungalow, when she was going to have a house-warming.

"Of course I have it warm," she repeated with a puzzled expression. "I just press a button, the furnace it lights."

Miss Wieck has been in Hollywood but a few weeks. Give her time.

WITH extra time for play available under the application of NRA codes, many will spend the added hours profitably by developing a useful hobby.

And so, ever on the alert to keep pace with the trend, National Broadcasting Company launched on Wednesday afternoon a series of broadcasts properly captioned, "Hobbies for the Larger Leisure." Subjects: Swimming as a Hobby, yachting, hunting, fishing, golf, writing, painting, poetry, etching.

Each and every hour spent on any one of these hobbies means dollars to N. B. C.'s allied companies, Radio Pictures and Radio-Keith-Orpheum, both of which are trying to do a yeoman's job in getting the public away from competitive influences and into motion picture theatres; to say nothing about fewer listeners to NBC's radio program.

But then they may have in mind—as a surprise—the recommendation of motion pictures as a hobby.

Daughters that give their mother ten dollars, even when they have it, are rare.*

"Did I know I was stealing the picture?" repeated May Robson, who, after half a century on stage and screen, suddenly finds herself a star at 74, as a result of her work in Columbia's "Lady for a Day."

Miss Robson's recollections stretch over the old Madison Square Garden, in New York, and Terry's in London. And Frohman never once heard her say, "I can't do it, Governor," even when he asked her to do something she'd never thought of doing—dancing. Instead, she went out and bought herself an artificial leg. Frohman watched her dance and exclaimed, "Don't you dare do it again—until I patent it," and thus was born her once sensational three-legged dance."

An old lady in New York, called "Apple Annie," because she sells apples, and is very poor, taken in hand as part of a motion picture advertising plan, is told that she is to have "one glorious day." Apple Annie has had it—a suite at the Waldorf, fashionable gowns, silk underwear (see MOTION PICTURE HERALD, September 9, page 11). All of which reminded Arthur Brisbane of a story, which he follows with a bit of advice:

"When the old London busman had his yearly holiday, and really wanted to enjoy himself, he climbed up beside another bus driver to ride back and forth over his own route, delighted with freedom from responsibility. Something like that might have suited Apple Annie better, for instance, a present of $50, a comfortable seat and a comfortable day's gossip next to some other busy apple lady. But there would have been no advertising in that."

The nation's biggest socialized business is education, spending yearly $3,000,000,000 in good times. Erpi's management has been patiently awaiting the return of those good times. They want to divert some of this business to the purchase of sound equipment.

THE dancing girls appearing with Eddie Cantor in Mr. Goldwyn's "Roman Scandals" are now rehearsing what is known (to Mr. Goldwyn) as "The Beauty Scene," in which the captive slave girls are bathed, shampooed, massaged, anointed, manicured and otherwise made attractive for the Emperor. The main point in the announcement is that this set is built entirely of glass, which is not surprising.

Another "Roman Scandals" company is on location at Calabasas, shooting the chariot chase—and wotta chase. Sam Goldwyn lined up 36 hosses for the "roaring climax." He says it tops the bullfight in "Kid From Spain." No less than three cameramen were injured and $25,000 worth of equipment was destroyed last week when four chariots—"roaring down the 'homestretch' at 45 miles an hour"—failed to dodge the camera set-up.

Torch singers, who have been immortalized of late in celluloid, first assailed the eardrums of an innocent and unsuspecting public during the California gold rush of '49. There is no record of sentimental vocal torches setting fire to the female aorta before the beginning of 'Frisco's famous Barbary Coast.

There, in one of the most notorious dives operated by one John Allen, a group of entertainers, whose principal purpose was to wheedle drinks and money out of miners and sailors, did their stuff for 18 hours a day (NRA take note.)

Among them was an entertainer known as "The Galloping Cow," another "The Little Lost Chicken," a fragile girl, who knew but one song. The girl sang in a quavering falsetto, invariably breaking into tears, about the lover she supposedly left on the Ohio banks.

"The Galloping Cow" was so called because of her enormous heft. The height of her career was reached when, in her own saloon, she broke a bottle of beer over the head of a sailor, threw him over the balcony rail and broke his neck.

20 POLI HOUSES GO ON AUCTION BLOCK

Federal Judge Orders Foreclosure and Sale of Fox-New England Theatres in Three Separate Divisions Starting Oct. 16

Probably one of the most important developments to date in the breakup of the Fox nationwide theatre structure took place Monday in Hartford, Conn., when Federal Judge Edwin S. Thomas ordered foreclosure and sale to the highest bidder of the 20 theatre properties in Connecticut and Massachusetts owned by Fox-New England Theatres, Inc., bankrupt subsidiary of Fox Theatres Corp.

In 1928 the Fox group bought the theatres from Sylvester Z. Poli for a sum reputed to be $26,000,000. Today, according to court testimony, they are worth approximately $2,350,000. The foreclosure sale probably will signal the disintegration of the old and famous Poli Circuit, unless the successful bidder, which may even be interests headed by Mr. Poli, is prepared to keep the properties intact.

The Fox New England circuit has figured prominently in recent weeks as the subject of reported sale to numerous other circuits and individual theatre interests. With the original bankruptcy of the circuit, early in the year, Harry C. Arthur took over operation of the houses for the trustees, Thomas J. Spellacy and Samuel Spring, of New York, and Benjamin Slade of New Haven. Shortly thereafter, Mr. Arthur relinquished operation of the theatres, and it was reported that N. L. Nathanson, of Canada, and Louis M. Segal were negotiating for the properties.

The order issued Monday stated that the sales should be in three separate divisions: 1, the first mortgage bonds amounting to $3,326,000, which are in the hands of New York Trust Company and Boyd G. Curts of New York, as trustees; 2, all of the Connecticut theatre properties; 3, all of the Massachusetts theatre properties.

The first group is to be sold at the door of the Capitol theatre, Hartford, on or about October 16; the second at the same place a few days later, and the third at the door of the Palace theatre, Springfield, Mass.

Mr. Spellacy was named special master by the court to handle the sales.

Attorney Charles Israel, of White & Case, New York, appeared for the trustees at the hearing in Hartford Monday and called witnesses to testify as to the value of the Fox holdings. Mr. Segal, for 35 years with Mr. Poli and now managing the theatre circuit for the receivers, listed the lowest price to be considered at the sales as follows:

Palace theatre, Waterbury, Conn., $290,000, with equipment valued at $10,000; Lyric, Bridgeport, $70,000, equipment $5,000; Bijou, New Haven, $95,000, equipment, $5,000; Globe, Bridgeport, $120,000, equipment, $5,000; Majestic and Palace theatres combined, Bridgeport, $315,000, equipment, $10,000; a vacant lot at Bridgeport, $25,000; College theatre, New Haven, $70,000, equipment, $5,000; Palace, New Haven, $220,000, equipment, $5,000; Broadway, Norwich, $15,000, no equipment; Strand, Waterbury, $100,000, no equipment; Capitol, Hartford, $370,000, equipment, $5,000; Palace, Meriden, $20,000, equipment, $5,000; Poli, Meriden, $10,000 (lease); Palace, Hartford, $10,000 (lease); personal property, not otherwise mentioned, at the Broadway theatre, Norwich; Strand, Waterbury; Poli, Meriden, and Palace, Hartford.

Massachusetts theatre properties were valued by Mr. Segal as follows:

Plaza Theatre, Worcester, $70,000; equipment, $5,000; Poli, Worcester, $70,000, equipment, $5,000; Palace, Worcester, $245,000, equipment, $5,000; Poli, Springfield, $295,000, equipment, $5,000, and a vacant lot at Springfield, $125,000. Personal property in Massachusetts not otherwise mentioned: $1,000.

Mr. Israels told the court Monday that "there is a plan in existence for the reorganization of the old Poli properties," and continued by saying that "whether the reorganization planners will be the successful bidders on these properties, we do not know at this time."

Mr. Segal disclosed that Mr. Poli plans to bid for his old properties at the public sales next month.

Reoch Appointed RKO Executive

A. E. Reoch, formerly in charge of RCA Photophone, was appointed on Monday to head the commercial real estate department of RKO Theatres, according to Harold B. Franklin, president, who said the appointment will not conflict with the operations of Louis Cohen, who will continue to supervise certain theatre activities.

At the same time, Marshall Beuick was appointed by Robert Sisk to be in charge of the publication department of RKO Theatres. In this capacity he will have editorial charge of the theatre house organ, "Now," and of "Radio City News."

Prices were increased five and ten cents this week in a dozen RKO houses following announcement of such a policy last week.

Warner Gets Fourth House In Wisconsin Territory

Warner Bros. last week strengthened its position in the Milwaukee sector by taking a five-year lease on the Lloyd theatre in Menominee, Mich. This makes the fourth house leased by the company within the past few weeks, with the State in Racine, and the Capitol in Madison, both dark, scheduled to go under the Warner banner shortly. Cyrus Lord continues as manager of the Menominee house.

Meanwhile there are reported many individual negotiations by independent theatre operators for theatres in the Milwaukee territory as a result of the recent bankruptcy of Statewide Theatre Corporation. Many of these houses already have been turned over to unaffiliated exhibitors, a substantial number going to Saxe Brothers, who own the properties. A creditors' meeting of the bankrupt has been continued until September 15, pending examination of H. I. Fitzgerald, general manager of the circuit.

Goetz Plans Production

Charles Goetz, former special sales representative for Exhibitors' Screen Service, plans the production of a number of independent pictures. He has formed Richmond Pictures Corporation, and will handle a series of Harold Lloyd reissues which will be synchronized. Mr. Goetz has also acquired 80,000 feet of expedition film which he plans cutting to feature length.

Clark Fox Ad Sales Manager

Appointment of James A. Clark as advertising sales manager of Fox Film was announced Tuesday by John D. Clark, general manager of distribution. Mr. Clark, well known in the industry as a result of thirteen years of activity in ad sales, booking and sales departments, succeeds Lee D. Balsly, assigned to other duties.

ASK OPERATOR FOR EACH MACHINE

Garcia and Mr. Wood include requests for women casting directors to interview girl and child extras, and condemnation of the practice of using one-time leading men or women stars at pittances for bits of acting requiring screen technique, "because they are hungry and destitute."

Georgie Price, representing the Actors Betterment Association, made specific recommendations for limiting the number of performances for artists in presentation and vaudeville houses; asked for a maximum working day of seven hours and a minimum daily wage of $10 for performers engaged by the day. Although Mr. Price made no explanation of his requests, it was generally conceded at the hearing by film executives that he was referring to the recent pact entered into by the major circuit heads which reputedly was instigated to limit the salaries of vaudeville and presentation house acts, when he asked that any agreement made by circuit heads which sought in any way to establish minimum salaries for performers be cited in the code as an unfair practice.

One of the most important subjects brought out into the open at the Tuesday hearing was the demand made by William C. Elliott, president of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees, for a projectionist for each machine in a projection booth. Mr. Elliott's demand went further than the usually accepted "two-men-in-a-booth" contention in that it would place an operator behind every projection machine in the United States. Some theatres, principally the de luxe type in key cities, have four or more projectors.

Mr. Elliott declared Tuesday that his proposal would put 58 per cent more operators to work. He also said that, under any and all conditions, the IATSE wants a 36-hour maximum work week for operators.

Make Projectionist Demands

Mr. Rosenblatt asked Mr. Elliott if he realized what such a blanket re-employment of operators would mean to the small exhibitor, and Mr. Elliott replied that he and his associates had worked out a scale which would provide for and consider the small exhibitor. The scale was submitted, but had not been made available up to press time.

Operators, musicians, newsreel cameramen, service artists and regular cameramen and others held a special night meeting called by Mr. Rosenblatt to state their objections to code proposals and make their recommendations. An authorized representation of producers, distributors and exhibitors was on hand to attempt to settle any differences privately.

Declaring that "theatre business had increased tremendously in the last month," Fred Dempsey, secretary-treasurer of the IATSE, presented the demand at the public hearing that wages of operators should not be cut nor should their working hours be increased in any instance. Again Mr. Rosenblatt put a definite question to an IATSE representative and asked Mr. Dempsey if it was his idea that wage scales in the lower brackets should be brought up to one national level and reminded him what this would mean to the small theatre. Mr. Dempsey said that a scale had been worked out for the small theatre man.

The current level of wages for newsreel cameramen and sound men should be maintained with the establishment of a 40-hour maximum work week, or not more than 160 hours in any four-week period, Harlan Holmden, an IATSE vice-president, acting for these two groups, said Tuesday. Mr. Holmden claimed that current methods are unfair, in that many men are required to work often as much as 24 hours at a time whenever necessary to cover a given assignment.

A contention in Mr. Holmden's brief is that insurance compaines have raised their premium rates for these two classifications to 1,000 per cent over that for normal classifications.

Louis Krouse, substituting for John P. Nick, another IATSE vice-president, appeared for studio labor affiliates and presented a petition arguing for a continuance of wage scales at the level in effect on August 23 of this year.

Complaints were made that such studio labor as set painters, make-up men, hairdressers, art directors and craftsmen were not consulted when the industry's code was drawn.

From Howard Hurd, business representative of the International Photographers' Local 659, IATSE, came the question of whether other union men wanted more concessions, either in wages, hours or preferential working agreements, whether the IATSE wants a spread of work to permit their men in this branch to get rest and put unemployed cameramen to work. For this, Mr. Hurd said, he was willing to take a salary cut by making the maximum work week for cameramen working at studios limited to 30 hours. First cameramen, he said, get an average of $200 weekly, second cameramen, $90, and assistants, $45.

Musicians, represented by Joseph N. Weber of the American Federation of Musicians, fought many provisions of the theatre code, declaring they put all houses into one classification.

No provision had been made, he declared, for midnight shows, rehearsals and extra working time for musicians. This would mean "sweat shop conditions for his men," he said. Mr. Weber asked for a $30 weekly minimum salary and a 42-hour maximum week.

Others who argued for special labor proposals were Moraschi Augusta Ocker, M. J. Coloran and John Blayne, for the International Union of Operating Engineers.

Rosenblatt Paves Way for Labor

Quite obviously, Mr. Rosenblatt's objective on Tuesday was to finish up the relatively unimportant points of issue—premiums, poster exchanges, etc.—aside from the labor controversies, in order to pave the way for the well known and highly important controversies of exhibitors, producers and distributors. It appeared during the first day's session that it was the Deputy's intention to throw the disputes of labor into private conferences for possible adjustment, because of the wide divergence of opinion over issues between employers and employees.

All divergent viewpoints were seeking a common meeting ground late Tuesday night at the private labor session aforementioned, which was called by Mr. Rosenblatt.

During the day Mr. Rosenblatt granted Pat Casey, labor contact for the producers, sufficient time to study the labor arguments which had been presented before his appearance on the scene.

Mr. Rosenblatt also appointed committees to conciliate the differences on all controversial subjects. Mr. Rosenblatt said Tuesday he would schedule meetings of these groups as the necessity arises and would preside at their meetings. The first of the groups to go into actual action was the committee handling union labor difficulties with producers, distributors and exhibitors.

On Wednesday William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, said: "I feel that the complexities of the labor problem will clear away because it appears to me that all concerned, all associated with this great industry are approaching a consideration of the problem in a very fine spirit, in a much better spirit than a lot of other people who have appeared on behalf of a code."

On either side of Deputy Rosenblatt at the public hearing were General Hugh Johnson's representatives from the National Recovery Administration: Donald K. Wallace, NRA research and planning division; E. N. Hurley,

BULLETIN

An echo of the recent studio strike in Hollywood was heard in California courts late Wednesday when the International Alliance of Theatrical State Employees, Local 37, filed suit at Los Angeles, for $33,950,000 against virtually all major film producers, two motion pictures unions, and the MPPDA.

The damages are sought for alleged losses and injuries resulting from alleged violations of contracts by the unions and producers. The International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers and the United Brotherhood of Carpenters are the unions named.

The suit alleged that through a conspiracy the producers and the defendant unions oppressed and boycotted the stage employees during the recent film strike. Heavy damages are asked for loss of membership through alleged discrimination against them.

A. Brigham Rose, attorney for the plaintiff, said, "Even if we lose we'll make legal history."

The motion picture industry, represented by perhaps the largest and most significant group of ranking executives and leaders of all branches ever convened at one time, takes its final steps in framing a national code for the motion picture, in the spacious auditorium of the United States Department of Commerce Building at Washington, under the guiding hand of Sol. A. Rosenblatt, Deputy Administrator of the NRA for amusements. The various factions of the industry were present in full force, each with numerous spokesmen primed to threaten, plead or cajole.

ALL GIVEN OPPORTUNITY TO SPEAK

industrial advisor; William P. Farnsworth, legal advisor; John P. Frey, labor advisor; G. A. Rennard, consumers' advisor; H. H. Thurlby, research and planning; Mrs. Emily N. Blair, also representing the consumers' branch, and Spencer Sladdin, of the legal staff.

Near the rostrum were four special consultants to Mr. Rosenblatt from the motion picture industry: Martin Quigley, editor-in-chief and publisher of Quigley Publications; John W. Alicoate, publisher of Film Daily; Elias Sugarman, of Billboard, and Joe Brandt.

Sidney R. Kent, who had been official coordinator for the code efforts of producers and distributors, and Charles L. O'Reilly, who acted in a similar capacity for exhibitors, attended, not as coordinators, but as representatives of Fox Film and of the New York TOCC, respectively. The assignment of coordinators had expired when the tentative codes were submitted to the NRA a few weeks ago.

Mr. Rosenblatt Sounds the Gavel

The deputy administrator called the hearing to order at 10:14 on Tuesday morning, and, at the outset, made it quite clear that the gathering was by no means a motion picture convention, and, therefore, he would not permit any interruption, at the same time repeating what he said in New York previously, that his job was to protect the interests of all in the industry.

Before the first day's session had concluded, five of the 11 principal industry divisions had been disposed of, and nearly half of the 208 designated and approved speakers had said their piece. Wednesday, another large block of the remaining speakers delivered their briefs.

No one who previously had filed intentions of addressing the NRA hearing was passed up by Mr. Rosenblatt, who went right down the list, according to the different divisions.

Mr. Rosenblatt's method of handling highly controversial points appears to be the conference chamber, in which the principals involved are urged to privately discuss the issues with a view to possible adjustment before the deputy's recommendations go to the NRA superiors. In any event, the conflicting factions still have time to get together, if not during the "star chamber" sessions held during the public hearing, then in private discussions with Mr. Rosenblatt following the open hearing. Labor was the first to be so treated, principals of both employer and employee groups repairing Tuesday night to an ante-chamber to undertake readjustment of their problems.

Mr. Rosenblatt is expected, following the public hearings, to bring together quickly the loose ends of the dozens of labor and trade practice clauses, and while no definite date had been set by the deputy up to press time, for the completion of the final draft for submission to the National Recovery Administration, it appears likely that the NRA will have a motion picture code within another ten days. Following the public and subsequent private hearings, Mr. Rosenblatt will append his recommendations to General Johnson on the points which remain at issue.

Hays Pledges Moral Guards

Will H. Hays, president of the MPPDA, on Tuesday opened the motion picture industry's presentation of briefs at the public hearing with the industry's promise to reinforce the regulations governing the moral standards of films.

"No section of this code is more important than the morality section," he asserted. "And under this code we are answerable to the federal government for the way we discipline ourselves. When the whole industry becomes thus pledged, I am confident that we will further progress towards the solution of one of our most difficult problems."

Of interest to the NRA representatives who presided at the hearing was Mr. Hays' statement that labor provisions of the NRA code to be adopted by producers and distributors would raise the wage scales in those divisions from 12 to 15 per cent above their 1929 levels, and that employment will be increased "to or above 1929 averages." Total increases in payrolls and personnel were not made known.

Club Women Talk Against Duals

However, Mr. Hays said, eight large member companies of the MPPDA employ 49,000; have an annual payroll of $135,000,000; spend $120,000,000 annually for supplies and other requirements; have a capital investment of $675,000,000, and spend about $90,000,000 annually on production. He referred to Warner, Metro, Fox, Columbia, Paramount, Universal, Educational and United Artists. He declared he represented 27 member companies.

Other industry statistics furnished by Mr. Hays indicated: 290,000 employed throughout the business; 474 features, 1,450 shorts produced yearly; industry pays annual taxes in excess of $100,000,000; 276 industries are involved in the production of a single picture.

Mr. Hays expressed the industry's gratification to Deputy Administrator Rosenblatt for his "patient and intelligent" aid in bringing the industry under a satisfactory code, and concluded by outlining the expectation that industry factions would compose their differences at the hearing.

WOMEN RAISE DOUBLE BILL ISSUE

picture morals were representative club women and representatives of parent-teacher associations. Canon William Sheafe Chase, who will be remembered by the industry as somewhat of a self-appointed reformer of films, spoke against double bills and for upholding of the Hays code of morals.

The industry's own controversy over the clauses which would ban double features was not to be taken up until later.

The basic opposition to doubles, voiced by 13 witnesses, on moral phases, was over the alleged complications which crop up in the selection of approved or suitable family entertainment as a result of the practice. This group also favored a 15 per cent cancellation clause on the ground that it is liberal enough to remove objectionable films.

Leading the clubwomen, who were said to represent a membership running into millions, was Mrs. Arretus Franklyn Burt, of the Missouri State Women's Clubs and the Better Films Council, who, reputedly speaking for 250,000, struck out along general lines for the Hays code and against double features.

Next to address Deputy Rosenblatt was Augustus O. Thomas, of the World Federation Education Association, of which there are 200 units, who voiced opposition to the clause which would rule out non-theatrical showings. He cited their value to classroom work. Senator King, of Utah, had filed a brief along identical lines.

Elizabeth Brennan, president of the International Federation of Catholic Alumnae, representing 100,000, appeared kindly disposed toward the industry, but voiced opposition to doubles and said her interests favored the production code of morals.

Mrs. Malcolm MacCoy, president of the New York Federation of Women's Clubs, talked along similar lines, as did Mrs. Alonzo Richardson, head of the Atlanta board of review. Mrs. William Smith, chairman of the New York Federation of Women's Clubs, sought adoption of the cancellation clause. Mrs. Edmund Barsham, of the Delaware State Federation of Women's Clubs, wanted block booking continued. More teeth in the advertising code were requested by Mrs. Willis Miner, of the New York Women's Federation.

185,000,000 See Films Annually

Backing her arguments against duals, for the cancellation clause and against block booking, with a statement that 185,000,000 people see films annually, including some 700,000 children, Mrs. Richard McClure, of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, which is said to have 2,000,000 members, also told the NRA deputies that 85 per cent of general buying power is in the hands of women.

Probably the most interesting address of the first day's session was by Mrs. Dorothy Bryant, representing the Chorus Equity Association, who described, calmly, and dispassionately, conditions under which chorus girls work in motion picture presentation houses. Eighty-six hours per week at $25 per week was the usual thing, she said, and although it was obvious that her presentation, supported by factual records, was not favorable to the operators of this type of theatre, many attending the hearing unofficially admitted that conditions as pictured by Mrs. Bryant are true. (Mrs. Bryant's remarkes in detail on page 21.

Deputy Administrator Rosenblatt indicated Wednesday that Article 51 of the exhibition code would be revised, if not cancelled. With this clause exhibitors attempted to have the code declare as unfair competition the presentation of stage shows or vaudeville in halls or auditoriums.

The William Morris agency, through Jerome Wilzin, opposed the clause. Opponents also said that the clause would limit artists in seeking engagements outside the regular theatre field. It was also said that the clause would eventually destroy roadshows.

16mm. Field May Be Excluded

Sol A. Rosenblatt, on behalf of the NRA, was expected to accede to the pleas of 16mm. interests that that branch of motion pictures be excluded from the industry's code on the ground that it is not theatrical competition.

Representing manufacturers and distributors of 8, 9½ and 16 millemeter films were Roy Winton, of Amateur Cinema League; I. R. Rehm, of the Non-Theatrical Motion Picture Producers; Willard Cook, Kodascope; Edward Curtis, Eastman; Samuel Burns, International Projector; F. M. Hall, Bell and Howell, and Fred L. Gerke.

It appears possible, however, that Deputy Rosenblatt will reserve the right to place this field under the film code if and when it

RETURN OF PROJECTIONISTS ORDERED

6,000 March for Film Industry In New York NRA Tribute

THE motion picture industry—that part of it which was not attending the code hearing in Washington—formed an impressive part of the NRA Day parade in New York Wednesday afternoon, with some 6,000 industry representatives in the line of march.

With bands blaring and flags of every description unfurled, 247,300 marchers stepped up Fifth Avenue in one of the greatest peace time parades ever witnessed in New York City.

Prominent in the line of march, and representative of practically every theatre organization and individual theatre in New York, was the motion picture division, headed by Al Jolson, Ruby Keeler and William Brandt, motion picture marshal. There were theatre bands, ushers in uniform and many civilian representatives of the industry, including home office forces of all producing and distributing companies. Radio and the legitimate theatre were represented also.

All Carry Blue Eagle Flag

Every unit of the motion picture marchers carried a flag bearing the NRA emblem, the Blue Eagle.

In the film contingent were included representatives of all home offices. Theatre bands, in colorful uniforms, were contributed by Loew's, and numerous corps of ushers from various theatres in New York, some representing national circuits, some from small independent theatres, gave a distinct note to this industry's participation.

Prominent among the individual marchers was Merlin H. Aylesworth, president of RKO, the National Broadcasting Company and affiliated companies, as grand marshal of the radio division.

One of the most brilliant touches in the film section was contributed by the Loew-MGM unit when 100 Washington-bound U. S. Army Signal Corps pigeons were released from baskets held by the Chester Hale dancing girls in the line of march. The pigeons were set at liberty directly in front of the reviewing stand.

Attached to the legs of the birds were messages guaranteeing cooperation to the President in the NRA drive for industrial recovery.

After releasing the pigeons, the Chester Hale girls, all of whom were garbed in red-white-and-blue, fell in before the reviewing stand to form the letters N.R.A. Loew theatre ushers carried a huge American flag and following them came Leo, the Metro lion, represented by a vivacious "walking lion."

Fox contributed to the general spectacle—at the same time taking advantage of an excellent exploitation situation—by engaging the services of the sight-seeing Goodyear dirigible and equipping it with a long trailer banner attached to the tail of the ship with the words "BERKELEY SQUARE GAIETY THEATRE NOW."

The Radio City Music Hall band, executives, staff, ballet, chorus ensemble and other talent gave considerable color to the spectacle as the RKO contribution.

Practically all employees at the Warner home office marched, and this group was vividly augmented by the presence of the Vitaphone studio girls and uniformed ushers of all Warner metropolitan theatres.

Paramount and United Artists supplied gaily colored bands, in addition to the home office representation, as did Columbia and Universal.

1,100 in RKO Section

The largest single contingent was that of RKO, with a total of 1,100 marchers. The Warner contingent was close to 1,000. MGM and Loew's had a representation of 850; Paramount, 500; Fox, 400; Columbia, 300; United Artists, 250, and Universal, 200.

In the Paramount division a novel departure was the impersonation of Mae West by 30 girls, marching four abreast.

The industry's participation in the parade was planned under the guidance of a committee composed of Harry M. Warner, Nicholas M. Schenck, Charles Moskowitz, George Schaefer, Harold B. Franklin, S. L. Rothafel, Jack Cohn, Harry D. Buckley, Sidney R. Kent, Robert H. Cochrane, Harry Sherman, William Small, Charles L. O'Reilly and Louis K. Sidney. Most of these executives were, however, in Washington Wednesday.

FEDERATION DEMANDS WEEK OF 35 HOURS

The entire NRA labor issue, with all industry split and organized labor presenting a solid front, was brought to the front at Washington on Tuesday by William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, who, while at the Capital observing the presentation of the labor cause at the motion picture, and other industry hearings, virtually demanded a 35-hour week, or less, in permanent codes.

Precedent on Dual Operator Question

The first real test of the National Recovery Administration's strength in its relation to motion picture theatres operating under the President's blanket code, came in New York Friday when, as a result of demands made upon Grover Whalen, NRA administrator for New York, by Local 306 of the Motion Picture Operators' Union, some 350 independent theatres were obliged to reinstate the full "safety crews" of two-men-in-a-booth. The two-men-in-a-booth question is one of nationwide importance to exhibitors and labor.

In an opinion unprecedented in NRA history, Mr. Whalen ordered members of the Independent Theatre Owners Association of New York City to reinstate new operators at the wage and hour scale which existed before they signed the blanket agreement.

The demand had been made earlier in the week by Local 306 that Blue Eagles be taken from the theatres on the ground they were reducing man power since their contracts with the union expired September 1.

The ITOA made a counter demand that Mr. Whalen deny the union members the right to picket the theatres. This Mr. Whalen refused to do, and picketing continued.

Producer-Agency Clause In Code Hits Edward Small

Edward Small, Hollywood agent and producer, whose product is released under Reliance Pictures, through United Artists, has been placed in an embarrassing position under Article 9, section 1, of the producers' code.

The provisions of this clause prohibit producers or producers' employees from engaging in the agency field, and Mr. Small, having been an agent for nearly 20 years, is trying to ascertain why he cannot continue. The question was presented Wednesday at the Code hearing through Samuel Zagon, attorney. Mr. Zagon contended that if Mr. Small's production schedule is discontinued by the code, many Coast craftsmen, who have been receiving large sums from his production, would be deprived of their income.

Joint Committee To Act On "Gold Diggers" Dispute

A committee of six representing the MPTO of eastern Pennsylvania, southern New Jersey and Delaware will meet in New York Friday with Major Albert W. Warner, vice-president of Warner Bros., and Andy Smith, sales executive, to compose objections of the exhibitors' organization to the Warner policy of listing "Gold Diggers of 1933" on the 1933-34 schedule instead of 1932-33. Private conferences held at Washington this week during the industry code hearing indicated an amicable settlement.

Heading the exhibitors' committee are Jay Emanuel, Lewen Pizor and David Barrist.

CHORUS HOURS PRECIPITATE DEBATE

2 Chorus Girls Aid Franklin Argument

Affiliated theatres entered a rebuttal Wednesday against charges made by Dorothy Bryant, Tuesday, of low wages and overwork, through Harold B. Franklin, president of RKO Theatres, and added considerable color to the day in the Code hearings. Mr. Franklin produced two members of the Music Hall Roxyettes, rushed from New York to Washington by airplane, to prove RKO's contention that chorus girls were "contented, healthy and a happy lot."

Citing the hours mentioned by Mrs. Bryant, Mr. Franklin declared that the impression so created was unfair, and pointed out that a careful check shows the average chorus girl in presentation houses is actually on the stage only one hour and a half daily. Mr. Franklin stressed the social service elements and comforts extended to them, citing the Music Hall as an example where, he said, dinner hours run approximately two hours, and that recreation and rest rooms also are made available to them. He also urged that the time spent in the Music Hall should not be construed as entirely devoted to working time.

Aside from this, he said, the Roxyettes are employed on a continuing basis which carries a guarantee working period beyond the 17½ hours a week average cited by Mrs. Bryant. Even on the basis of $552 annually, admittedly earned by the average chorus girl over this period, their average earning capacity is over $1,500 annually "and that was not so black a picture as was first presented," he said.

Mr. Franklin's idea is, apparently, that a minimum salary of $25 weekly is fair, but many chorines are getting $40 and over, he said. RKO regards the claims made by Chorus Equity as indicative of the organization's intention to make a bid for double shifts in presentation houses.

"This they cannot stand," he said. "If it happened, presentation houses would be compelled to drop stage shows for canned shows, thereby adding to unemployment in the chorine ranks."

Affiliated circuits are in favor of a 48-hour week, including rehearsals, and consider this fair, he said.

In an effort to demonstrate how well chorus girls are treated in the Music Hall, Mr. Franklin presented two Roxyettes, one acting as spokesman for both. Miss Stone was her name. Under the cross examination of Mr. Rosenblatt she said her weekly rehearsal hours are limited to 18 working hours; daily working hours to seven, on a seven-day week at a salary of $36. She also said that every sixth consecutive week is followed by one week's vacation at full pay and that of that week four days were hers, three the theatre's for rehearsals. Mr. Franklin explained that while this was true the girls were relieved of the three-day rehearsals during the week preceding their vacations, thus actually giving them a full week.

Chorus Girls Toil 86 Hours for $25 Week, Hearing Told

WITH cold but dramatic precision, and at times bordering almost on a note of defiance, Mrs. Dorothy Bryant, in charge of the Chorus Equity division of Actors Equity Association, faced some 600 motion picture executives representing every branch of the industry, on Tuesday at the Washington code hearing, and told plenty about the conditions under which she said chorus girls were forced to work in such big presentation houses as the Radio City Music Hall, the Paramount and the Capitol, in New York.

In a room crowded to capacity and containing many of the persons who were directly responsible for the conditions Mrs. Bryant charged, she enumerated facts and figures rapidly, clearly, dispassionately.

86 Hours for $25

The most flagrant advantage is being taken—even in this enlightened day and age—of those youngsters who are required to give 86 hours a week, over 50 per cent of their time, to rehearsing and working, she declared, and for this the remuneration in most instances is not more than $25 a week, Mrs. Bryant asserted.

Mrs. Bryant drove her points home in a manner that was far from being oratorical or elocutionary. The drama lay in her delivery of fact after fact and figure after figure. So authoritative and compelling was her speech that Deputy Administrator Sol A. Rosenblatt allowed her to speak far longer than he did many of those scheduled to present their views.

Slated to appear in protest against labor provisions as set up in the exhibition code to cover chorus girls employed in vaudeville and presentation houses, Mrs. Bryant mentioned several specific instances of what she termed "iniquitous" conditions for any human to work under. Among these she cited the case of a Fanchon & Marco unit which was required to rehearse from 10 o'clock in the morning until midnight—sometimes even 1 or 2 o'clock the following morning—and then report back to work at 6 or 7 o'clock the same morning. No pay is ever received for rehearsals such as these, she said.

Ninety-three hours' work in one single week was required of the Gay Foster girls at the Old Roxy theatre on Seventh avenue, New York, and girls working at the Capitol had been called upon more than once to give 81 hours in one week to rehearsals and the regular shows, she testified. For this they received only $20 a week, Mrs. Bryant said.

At the Music Hall in Radio City, she pointed out, girls usually are required to donate 86 hours of their time for the management, and at the Paramount, where the wage scale is $25 weekly, they are required to set aside 80 hours.

17½ Working Weeks in Year

Many times, she declared, the Roxyettes at the Music Hall have been told to reserve from 82 to 85 hours weekly, during which time they were "on call" by the management. This did not necessarily mean that the girls were required to work all the time, she explained, but being "on call" for that number of hours made their working week equivalent to the prescribed period of reserved time.

"Despite all this," Mrs. Bryant said, "the average working weeks per year for the chorus girl total only 17½, and sometimes, with rehearsals, up to 22½ weeks. Her average annual earning power is $552."

Last year, she said, Chorus Equity placed 5,500 girls and their average salary ranged between $35 and $40 weekly.

Chorus Equity wants a six-day week limited to 40 hours and a minimum wage of $30 a week in two-shift houses and $40 a week in single shift houses, as well as a $40 weekly minimum for road companies.

Mrs. Bryant also requested that the code include a provision that ballet girls shall not be required to "stand on their toes more than eight hours at a time."

As Mrs. Bryant concluded her speech there was silence for a moment and then came thunderous applause from every corner of the room in the Department of Commerce building.

On behalf of 15,000 performers throughout the country, Georgie Price, representing the Actors Betterment Association, said that his organization seeks to limit performances to a maximum of four shows daily; a maximum working day of seven hours and a minimum daily wage of $10 where the performer is employed on a daily basis. The association also made a petition for a clause in the code limiting tryouts to three weeks with wages for that period established at not less than half the salary to be paid during the theatre playing time of the act.

NRA RULES ON PRICE FIXING

The National Recovery Administration at Washington issued an announcement on Wednesday that its Consumers' Advisory Board has adopted, as a policy, opposition to general price fixing provisions, direct or indirect, in all codes, with the exception of a limited number of "natural resource" industries.

EIGHT NRA FILMS MADE; ONE RELEASE A WEEK

Companies Supplying 1,000 Prints of Each; Physical Distribution Through National Screen Service; Warners Add Short

Hollywood this week fulfilled its promise to contribute to President Roosevelt's national recovery drive a series of dramatic featurettes inculcating the spirit of NRA, and now the distributors and virtually every exhibitor will spread the word, through these films, over the screens of the nation.

Based on the widespread showing of the first official NRA trailer, contributed by National Screen Service, it is considered by the organization division of NRA that each featurette will be exhibited in 8,000 theatres for a total of 64,000 individual showings. Distribution is expected to require about three months. No charge for the reels is made to theatres.

In a letter to Frank R. Wilson, chief of the NRA propaganda division, John C. Flinn, in charge of the film activities of NRA publicity, outlined the motion picture industry's participation in the drive.

"The motion picture industry has acquitted itself admirably in the patriotic and important tasks undertaken under your supervision. Eight of the largest companies volunteered to produce at their own expense and to supply gratis 1,000 prints each of short featurettes, approximately 250 feet in length, in which some of their leading artists appear.

"By the generosity of National Screen Service, physical distribution will be handled exclusively through that company's offices situated at eight important key centers of the United States. Mr. Schaefer, chairman of distribution, has appointed division of district managers representing each of the eight national distributing companies to act as coordinators and advisors with the manager of each National Screen Service office. The appointments are as follows:

City	Nat'l S. Man.	Coordinator
Chicago	J. R. McPherson	S. A. Shirley—MGM
New York	Gaston Stern	Moe Streimer—U.A.
Atlanta	Charles Lester	H. Ballance—Fox
Dallas	Wallace Walthall	Jack Dugger—Para.
Seattle	Jack Flannery	Al Oxtoby—Warner
Los Angeles	Harry Milstein	Harry Cohen—RKO
Minneapolis	Ed Burke	B. C. Marcus—Col.
Boston	Harry Kirchgessner	A. J. Herman—Univ.

The featurettes will be released weekly, in the following order: MGM's "Give a Man a Job," with Jimmy Durante, Sept. 10; Fox's "Mother's Helper," with El Brendel, Zasu Pitts and Esther Muir, Sept. 17; Warner's "The Road is Open Again," starring Dick Powell, Alan Dinehart, Charles Middleton and Samuel Hines, Sept. 24; Paramount featurette with Charles Ruggles and Mary Boland, Oct. 1; Columbia featurette with George Sidney and Charlie Murray, Oct. 8; Universal featurette with Louis Fazenda, Andy Devine and Sterling Holloway, Oct. 15; United Artists-Twentieth Century featurette with Constance Cummings and Lowell Sherman, Oct. 22, and RKO Radio's "What America Needs," with Ann Harding and an all-star cast, Oct. 29.

In addition to the above mentioned featurettes, Warners announced this week that it intends to contribute an extra short subject entitled "The New Deal."

Mr. Flinn, on arrival in New York from Hollywood late last week, expressed his appreciation for the services being rendered NRA by various members of the industry, including Herman Robbins and George Dembow, of National Screen; Joseph I. Breen; William Holman, Columbia; Edward O'Fearna, Fox; Jack Cummings, MGM; Morritt Hulburd, Paramount; Glendon Allvine, RKO Radio; Robert Fairbanks, United Artists; Warren Deane, Universal, and George Bilson, Warners, all of whom served on a special committee under Mr. Breen.

Other film executives mentioned in appreciation for contributions of materials, time and labor, are J. E. Brulator and W. J. Gorman, of Eastman; N. I. Stores, of DuPont Films; R. F. Woodward, Agfa Ansco; Whitford Drake, Erpi; C. Lloyd Egnor, RCA Photophone; Alan E. Freedman, DeLuxe Film Laboratories; R. I. Poucher, Consolidated Film; Ed. Gaylor and George Morgan, Morgan Lithograph of Cleveland; H. W. Lawrence, Consolidated Packing Box and Lumber Co.; R. H. Cochrane and Paul Gulick, Universal; J. J. McCarthy, Walter J. Moore, Bert Adler and S. Charles Einfeld.

Defend Premiums at Code Hearings

becomes direct competition to theatres. There have been reports of a move to market 16mm. films in houses now dark.

Manufacturers of chinaware and other premiums distributed in motion picture theatres registered vigorous protests against the code's prohibition of the practice. At the same time, it became known that RKO Theatres was the first large circuit to outlaw this form of merchandising.

Charging they will be driven out of business, therefore defeating the very purpose of the NRA, pleas were made on behalf of premiums and giveaways by Michael Flynn, National Brotherhood of Operating Potters; Charles Sebring, of Sebring Pottery Company; Clyde Coulter, an attorney representing other manufacturers; John Dowsing, also an attorney, and W. E. Wells, of the United States Potters' Association.

Both exhibition and distribution codes have clauses which would bar premiums.

Mr. Sebring, however, declared that 20 per cent of his business comes from theatres, adding that this percentage applied to all others in his field. About 100 men would lose their jobs if the clauses were adopted, he predicted.

Potters do about $1,000,000 worth of business in premiums, according to Attorney Coulter. The defendants would not agree with Mr. Rosenblatt's suggestion that the distribution of premiums in theatres might be competition to regular retailers. Mr. Rosenblatt then asked the premium advocates if they would not consider fair a plan to have 60 per cent of the exhibitors in each territory decide the matter. The group insisted, however, that no interference be permitted.

Mr. Rosenblatt announced on Wednesday that the articles in the distributors' and exhibitors' codes pertaining to poster renters had been withdrawn.

'Lab' Code Signed; Hearing Set for Supply Dealers

While the motion picture industry was engaged this week in presenting briefs at its public code hearing at Washington, further developments, involving the codes for supply dealers, theatrical ticket brokers and laboratories, were reported. The laboratory code went to the White House last Thursday for the President's consideration, and it was approved by the President Friday.

According to the report of General Hugh S. Johnson, NRA Administrator, to the President, the motion picture laboratory code embraces approximately 33 firms which are brought under the code. Out of the 1932 volume of nearly 1,000,000,000 feet of film developed in motion picture laboratories, members of the Motion Picture Laboratories Association of America developed practically 90 per cent. Approximately 3,500 laboratory workers are affected, and the code represents an advance of about $6,000 per week in the payrolls of the industry. The code becomes effective next week.

Hearings on a code for motion picture and theatre supply dealers will be held in Washington by Deputy Administrator Sol A. Rosenblatt on September 25, it was announced. Applications to be heard must be filed before September 23. D. W. Tracy, international president of the Electrical Workers' Union, on Tuesday was appointed by the NRA as labor advisor for the code hearing.

Thirty small theatre ticket agencies charged last week, in a resolution forwarded to NRA officials in New York and Washington, that four of the city's largest ticket brokers were using the theatrical code as a subterfuge for acquiring a monopoly on the entire ticket brokerage business in New York, thus driving the smaller agencies out of existence. The four agencies cited were McBride's, Tyson, Bascom, and Joe Leblang-Postal Telegraph.

These four denied there had been any attempts to establish a monopoly.

To deal with the specific problems of the brokers, the national committee appointed a special subcommittee under the chairmanship of Brock Pemberton, the producer.

On Tuesday in New York it was learned that the Music Publishers Protective Association would ask for certain specific recommendations and changes in the motion picture industry's code during the public hearing.

MPTOA, Allied Present New Code Proposals

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and Allied States Association presented to Deputy Administrator Sol A. Rosenblatt on Wednesday at the public code hearings in Washington the platforms for both organizations for an exhibition code. Ed Kuykendall, MPTOA president, and Abram F. Myers, general counsel for Allied, submitted the proposals.

DEATH CLAIMS SIX WITHIN WEEK

Six men, connected indirectly or directly with the world of the motion picture, passed away within the past week. In New York Al Harstn, business manager of the Independent Theatre Owners Association, died following an operation for cancer of the jaw at the age of 63. He was long a veteran showman of the metropolitan area. Lawrence Shead, 35, manager of the Garden theatre at Paterson, N. J., was found by associates murdered in his studio apartment in Paterson, with head and face badly battered. In Rochester, Mich., Oscar Price, 65, pioneer exhibitor of the state, was found dead in his home, the gas jets open, while his family attended a celebration. In Traverse, Holly and Encorse Mr. Price formerly operated theatres. Clay Meredith Greene, a "grand old man" of the American theatre, first Shepherd of New York's famous Lambs Club, and author of some 75 plays, many of which were later adapted to the screen, died at his San Francisco home at the age of 83. In Dayton, Ohio, Penelope Perrill (Mrs. Gainor Jennings), 73, columnist and former dramatic and motion picture editor of the Dayton Daily News, died at her home. Arthur W. Ropes, author of the lyrics for some 2,000 musical stage productions in the course of his long career, died at his London home at 73. Most notable of his works were "The Merry Widow" and "Lilac Time."

Theatre Men Ask End Of Daylight Saving

Approximately 200 theatre owners, managers and representatives of film producers met at a luncheon meeting of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware in Philadelphia last week to pass resolutions petitioning the city council to repeal the daylight saving measure. Lew Pizor, president of the organization, acted as toastmaster.

Changes at New York Paramount

Paramount Publix has made the following managerial changes in New York and Brooklyn: Bob Weitman, formerly assistant at the Brooklyn Paramount, is now manager, succeeding Lee Dally. Edward Sullivan, former treasurer of the New York Paramount, was made assistant manager. Benjamin Griefer was made assistant manager of the New York Paramount, and Robert Shapiro, formerly of the Brooklyn Paramount, was appointed treasurer of the New York Paramount.

MGM Coast Exchange Sues

The MGM Los Angeles exchange has filed suit against seven theatre operators, who are charged with selling tickets from two different rolls.

NAZI MOVE FOR BIG CIRCUIT IS REPORTED

French Group Headed by Aubert Palace Already Acquired, Says Press, in $20,000,000 Project; Talent Facing Ostracism

That the Adolf Hitler administration in Germany is prepared to expend mililons in acquiring theatres in other countries is the tenor of a London dispatch to the Jewish Telegraph Agency. The Cinema, daily trade publication in England, is quoted as saying that advance agents of the Nazi government already have obtained a circuit in France headed by the Aubert Palace, other houses reported involved being in the Gaumont-Franco-Aubert circuit.

It was reported that the Nazi Film Bureau stood ready to pay up to twenty millions for a definite number of theatres and that advance agents were visiting leading capitals of Europe in their quest, with houses in industrial centers as their immediate objective.

Another phase reported was that government representatives were on their way to Hollywood to seek to persuade Aryan players to appear in propaganda pictures.

At the same time, the New York Times said that German players, directors and technicians faced ostracism from Germany if they remained away from the homeland longer than present contracts required.

The Times also stated that Czechoslovakian film interests were about to reopen negotiations with American companies for product, following objections voiced to German propaganda pictures. Another communication to the Times said the Nazis had forced residents of the Jewish quarter of Berlin to participate in the filming of unfavorable crowd scenes for a Horst Wessel propaganda production, seeking to identify the Jews with the Communists.

Face National Ostracism

Wireless dispatches to the New York press from Berlin indicate that the new Film Fachschaft, voice of the recently created Reich film chamber, has sounded a warning to German film stars and lesser personalities who are now working in Hollywood, or elsewhere, that they must return to the homeland immediately "or face the national ostracism already pronounced" against German players of Jewish ancestry who have fled the country.

According to the news cables from Berlin, "Germany's film firmament, already dimmed by the exclusion of actors, actresses and directors of Jewish descent, is about to be wiped clean of stars by the new ukase branding those who seek or accept foreign contracts as traitors guilty of sabotage.

"It is proposed to make further work in Germany impossible for all such Aryan film workers who remain abroad beyond their present contractual obligations, or who go abroad now, thereby showing they are not interested in the great cultural upbuilding of Germany or are even sabotaging it."

In reporting the order of the government, the Berlin trade paper, Film-Kurier, said: "It is considered unpatriotic—yes, even as treason to the country—if now, in the midst of the great work of upbuilding in the German film world, German artists combine abroad with film companies or film workers who either emigrated from Germany as non-Ayrans or who are hostile to Germany or participate in agitation against Germany. The new Germany will turn with all the means at its disposal against such economic and ideological traitors.

"Such Aryan German film workers employed abroad against German interests run the risk of being placed beside non-Aryans in the future. We hear that the Film Fachschaft will give such workers only a comparatively short period in which to return. Any exclusion or non-inclusion in the Film Fachschaft means complete withdrawal from any possibility of work in the motion-picture business in Germany.

"There has been a great exodus from Germany of the leading figures of the theatre and film world. In the case of Jews, retirement into private life or departure were the only courses open, since the stage and screen were closed to them, and Max Reinhardt and Elizabeth Bergner were followed by many leading producers, players and others."

A wireless to the New York Times early last week reported that the subsequent disorganization in the motion picture and theatrical fields in Germany also deprived the country of "many leading players who were not Jews, but had Jewish wives, or found it easier to obtain attractive contracts abroad than in Germany in a period when there was so much uncertainty in theatre and film work, because of fear that completed films would not satisfy the new censorship, the cancellation of contracts and so forth."

"Thus Werner Krauss, in whom patriots see Germany's leading actor and for whose return they sigh, has been absent from Germany for some time; his return to take up the vice presidency of the newly created film chamber is anxiously awaited," said the Times.

Famous Players Canadian Interest Will Be Paid

Interest charges on $5,406,500 six per cent mortgage bonds, and on $2,794,000 in six and a half per cent debentures will be paid October 1 by Famous Players Canadian, the company declared this week.

The company also stated that there had been a noticeable improvement in box office receipts this summer as compared with last year, and that prospects for the autumn season appear even better.

Writers' Representatives In Academy Are Changed

Jack Cunningham and Carey Wilson were named this week by the writers' branch of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences to represent the branch, succeeding Josephine Lovett and Edwin Burke.

Shubert Creditors Subscribe

Approximately 75 per cent of the former stockholders, bondholders and creditors of the bankrupt Shubert Theatre Corporation have subscribed to the pro-rata participation offer of Lee Shubert in the stock of Select Theatres Corporation, according to a Shubert announcement. The participation offer, originally planned to terminate August 1, has been extended indefinitely.

THE BOX OFFICE CHAMPIONS FOR AUGUST

● Three groups of ties brings the leading box office attractions for August to a total of eight productions, with only the first-place picture entitled to its ranking alone. Tied in second place are a drama and a musical, while a drama verging on the comedy-drama shares third position with another musical. In fourth place, where three productions are tied, comedy outranks the rather serious character study represented in George Arliss' Voltaire. By winning a place in the August group the musical, "Gold Diggers of 1933," rounded out a full summer of success at the nation's key theatre box office, this production having been a champion also in June and July.

U.K. Wants Slow And Sentimental Films, Says Buxton

Slow and sentimental American films go big in England but some of the so-called "hits" here are failures there because the action and dialogue are too rapid, according to Joseph Buxton, general manager of Regal Cinemas, Ltd., controlling 20 motion picture and 10 vaudeville houses in England, Scotland and Wales.

Mr. Buxton had been in this country since July 26, returning to London last week. While here he visited the World's Fair at Chicago and supervised the filming of the exposition for the News Gazette of the World, the news reel in the British Isles. He spent much time in New York and Chicago approving vaudeville acts for his houses.

"Our cinema audiences like your American pictures immensely," said Mr. Buxton, "and our programs are made up of 80 per cent. American pictures and 20 per cent. quota films of home production. We are obliged by law to show 20 per cent. of our total footage from British studios but in the past we would have preferred to put on an all-American show. However, the English motion picture companies are producing better films today as is evidenced by 'Bitter Sweet.'

"Our audiences like such American stars as Norma Shearer, Marie Dressler, William Powell, James Cagney, Mary Pickford, Clark Gable and, of course, our own George Arliss in American made cinemas. But such notable successes in the United States as 'Horse Feathers' with the Four Marx Brothers, 'Blessed Event'; 'Front Page' and some of your leading comedies with the exception of those in which Charlie Chaplin and Laurel and Hardy appear are not successful in England from a box office standpoint.

"The English people like pictures that are slow and sentimental and cannot grasp your rapid fire action and talking films which lack these qualities.

"Again our vaudeville houses are strictly such and not a combination of vaudeville and pictures as you have here. I was surprised to find that there is not one straight out and out vaudeville house in New York and that the Palace, the former home of vaudeville, had to succumb to the popular taste for the combination of variety acts and films. The same applies to our cinemas; we present pictures and pictures only in them," he said.

New Paramount Publix Theatre Subsidiary Formed

The Famous Theatres Corporation, incorporated under the laws of Delaware last week with a listed $5,000 capital, is a new Paramount-Publix subsidiary organized in connection with theatre properties now grouped under the corporation entity of Publix Enterprises, Inc.

The formation of the company, with Y. F. Freeman, M. F. Cawthorpe and W. B. Cokell, Paramount-Publix executives, as incorporators, is another step in the reorganization of the corporation's theatre activities.

FULL EXCHANGE SYSTEM FOR MAJESTIC TWELVE

Widespread Branch Chain Will Handle Company's Product Exclusively This Season; Weisfeldt General Sales Manager

To attain the rank of a major producer-distributor, with a nation-wide system of exchanges, is the year's goal of Majestic Pictures Corporation, which this week outlined its product for 1933-34. Twelve feature dramas have been set and the company swings into its second year with three pictures already completed. The 1932-33 schedule called for six feature dramas and six westerns. There will be no western pictures on the new program.

Since formation of the corporation, a little over a year ago, Majestic has made considerable progress, Herman Gluckman, president, said this week.

"In one single year we have acquired branch offices in every key territory of the United States, Canada and Great Britain," said Herman Gluckman, president, "and commencing with the new season these offices will distribute nothing but Majestic product. It is the hope and purpose of Majestic for the 1933-34 cycle to graduate from the independent class and become one of the major companies."

Budget Increased

Under a plan voted by franchise holders at their convention in Chicago, the company will spend considerably greater sums on each of the 12 features than in 1932-33. The average negative costs for the 12 will run between $85,000 and $125,000, with two of them, both musicals, running as high as $150,000, according to Mr. Gluckman.

One picture will be delivered each month and in addition, the company may make one or two specials of roadshow caliber.

Among the stories announced for 1933-34 are: "Sing, Sinner, Sing," adapted from the Broadway stage play by Wilson Collison; "Curtain at Eight," from the novel by Octavus Roy Cohen; "The Sin of Nora Moran," Broadway stage play by Willis Maxwell Goodhue; "An Entirely Different Woman," a best-seller by the German novelist, George Froschel; "The Rosary," novel and play by Edwin Rose; "The Diary of a Bad Woman," drama and book by Lawrence Hazard; "The Age of Indiscretion," from the novel, "Collusion," by Theodore D. Irwin; "Husband Hunters of 1934," a musical extravaganza originally written for the screen by Edmund Lowe, Jr.; "Wild Geese," from the $10,000 prize novel by Martha Ostenso; "Gaily I Sin," from an anonymously written best-seller; "My Life," the autobiography of Isadora Duncan, and "A Laughing Woman," novel by Carlos Keith. "Sing, Sinner, Sing," "Curtain at Eight" and "The Sin of Nora Moran" have been completed and "The Age of Indiscretion" is now in work.

With the company's production chief, Phil Goldstone, having his eye on story values, star power and direction, Mr. Gluckman said:

"After all, the fundamentals of good motion pictures revolve around what you've got in your stories. Too many producers nowadays forget their stories, pay high prices for stars and directors and then wonder why their films do not draw. Basically it's the story and on the surface it's the stars."

New additions to the executive staff of Majestic Pictures include Max Weisfeldt as general sales manager with headquarters in New York. Mr. Weisfeldt formerly was vice-president and general manager of Talking Picture Epics. Cleve Adams has been named general field representative. John Weber, with the company since its inception, has added the duties of being in complete charge of the foreign department.

Mr. Gluckman also said that Mr. Goldstone had just wired from Hollywood that a complete staff of continuity writers and adaptors are now working on the new product. These include Marcelle Burke, free lance continuity writer; Bernard Schuberg, Leonard Fields, Dave Silverstein, Cy Bartlett, Frances Hyland, Bert Hanlon and Ben Ryan.

Other officers of Majestic are William D. Shapiro, vice-president, and Tony Lucchese, vice-president.

Powers Suing Universal For Accounting of Profits

P. A. Powers, originally a partner with Carl Laemmle in Universal, is suing Universal for an accounting of profits of Interstate Film Company, declared to be $1,760,000. The company is designated as a subsidiary handling Universal product in the Washington and Philadelphia territories. Universal Pictures Corporation, Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., Big U Exchange, Mr. Laemmle, R. H. and P. D. Cochrane and others are among the defendants. Notice of trial has been filed in New York supreme court.

Mr. Powers contends he is a stockholder in Interstate to the extent of approximately 25 per cent. He claims the company grossed more than $12,000,000 in the past 10 or 12 years, and that he no longer receives dividends. He asks an accounting and claims efforts were made to "freeze" him out. Willard McKay, Universal attorney, declared there is no reasonable basis in Mr. Powers' suit.

Election of New AMPA Officers Set This Week

New officers of the AMPA in New York were to be elected at a luncheon meeting Thursday at Sardi's. With no opposition group of candidates, election of the officers designated is assured. Chosen by the nominating committee were: John C. Flinn, president; Rutgers Neilson, vice president; Paul Benjamin, treasurer; Al Sherman, secretary; Hal Horne, Marvin Kirsch, S. Charles Einfeld, Paul Gulick, Gabe Yorke, Ed Finney, William Ferguson, board of directors; Kelcy Allen, three-year trustee.

Showmen's Producing Unit Takes Over Coast Studio

Screencraft Productions, independent Coast company which produces exclusively for Showmen's Pictures, Inc., has taken over the Alexander Brothers studio in Hollywood. Production is to be supervised by Al Alt. D. J. Mountain is president of Showmens. "Public Stenographer," first on the new schedule of 12 features, is now in production, and will be ready for release October 1.

600 Roadshows of 'Dinner at Eight'

Nicholas M. Schenck, president of MGM, decided this week to roadshow "Dinner at Eight" in at least 600 situations. This decision was made following a test in five key cities.

Accordingly, dates have been set for 14 Erlanger-Shubert legitimate houses, and showings of the picture as a two-a-day special in these spots will inaugurate the countrywide roadshow campaign. First of the group of 14 is Montreal, Sept. 18, with runs to follow in Philadelphia, Washington, Boston, Chicago, Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Buffalo, St. Louis, Toronto, Detroit, Atlanta, San Francisco, Seattle.

Roadshow bookings for MGM's "Grand Hotel" were said to have totaled 616 and the total number when the "Dinner at Eight" engagements are completed is likely to show even more, according to Col. Joseph R. Vogel, who handles MGM roadshow placements.

So far "Dinner at Eight" has played two-a-day at the Astor, New York; Grauman's Chinese, Los Angeles; (both current); the Stanley, Atlantic City; Lyric, Asbury Park, N. J., and Palace, Saratoga, N. Y.

Exploitation hookups will be the most pretentious and varied the company ever has made, said William R. Ferguson, handling roadshow exploitation and publicity for the film. Novelties include Jean Harlow "Cinderella" shoes, doorknob hangers, cutlery, giveaway napkins, lump sugar, place cards, and so on. Coca-Cola ran a full page advertisement in Collier's and in the Saturday Evening Post. Ninety-six and 104-sheets are being used for promotion, and thousands of florists, beauty shops and restaurants are cooperating.

Wayne Pierson Heads Cohn's Weldon Pictures

Maxwell Cohn, president of Weldon Pictures, has announced the appointment of H. Wayne Pierson as general sales manager, with headquarters at 729 7th ave., New York.

This engagement marks the re-entry of Mr. Pierson into the motion picture business, after two years of activity with the Democratic National Committee.

Mr. Pierson was formerly associated in the roadshowing of productions for MGM, Fox, Universal and Paramount, and was general manager for Howard Hughes.

Richey Predicts Detroit Dual Ban Effective Oct. 1

Voluntary ban by exhibitors of Detroit of the double bill policy will become effective October 1, according to H. M. Richey, business manager of the Michigan Allied unit, in New York last week for Code conferences. The plan has already been subscribed to by 100 out of a possible 156, which is sufficient to place it in operation, he said.

Mr. Richey added that he anticipated the plan would not conflict in any way with double feature clauses in the industry code, which, he believes, will permit localities to decide their own double bill policy.

"CLEAN UP THE FILMS"

CLEAN UP AND SAVE PATRONS

To the Editor of the Herald:

May I ask who this man Jones, publicity writer for Warner-First National, is, when he says Hollywood should go whoopee—wild?

[Carlisle Jones, of the Coast publicity staff of Warner-First National, was quoted recently in the daily press as follows: "Hollywood should go whoopee wild. It's been too tame for the last few years—doesn't pack the 'kick' for fans it did in the days before the morality code. There have been too many happy marriages, too many babies and too few love scandals. People no longer regard stars as goddesses and supermen, but just routine folks like the rest of us. A few well publicized jamborees would put Hollywood back on the map and give the world something to talk about besides the salaries of the industry."]

I think Hollywood has plenty of a scandal reputation, the way it is. It doesn't need any more. Mr. Jones should be an exhibitor for a few years in a small town and he would write differently. I have been in the exhibition business for the last 20 years and I must say that never before have the pictures been so smutty, vulgar, and sexy as they are today. It is almost out of the question to get a run of pictures that are fit for a family to see. About two-thirds of them are not clean and one-fourth of them are plain vulgar and smutty. I believe this is responsible for the picture business being so poor today. Let the industry clean up the pictures and give the movie patrons clean, wholesome shows and stories and I venture to say that the patronage of the theatre will increase a great deal. The movie patrons haven't all gone sex-crazy yet. Wake up! Get busy, you producers; give us clean pictures and stories before we get censorship in every state of the union.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa.

WOULD "LIVE AND EAT IN STUDIO"

Out of the mailbag, with its many and divers communications to the Editor, letters that sweep the range of the business of the motion picture, comes the following from Mr. William A. Costello, of Chicago, bespeaking his case with all the enthusiasm of his 17 years. The Editor

To the Editor of the Herald:

I am seventeen (17) years old and I am promised work out at the Essanay Film Studio, as soon as business picks up with them. I have done a little radio work and Little Theatre work. I have also done work as an extra at Hollywood at the Fair. I have read an article in the Motion Picture Herald, of April 15, 1933, entitled "The Waste of Talent." I have been going down around the film exchanges on Wabash Ave. in Chicago to get old trade magazines, as you see I cannot afford to buy them. That is why I have not written you sooner. I also have been doing a little writing. Down in my basement I have a few thousand feet of film. And I call my company the Ace Famous Productions. I never throw away film magazines, for if I did it would seem like losing a good friend. What my ambition is (which has been since I was six years old) is to write, act, direct and produce.

I can take the paper in my hand any time and tell you which producing company made such a picture, which company has such and such a star, director, etc.

Wouldn't you please help me, for I have been trying to get into the motion picture business as much as possible. I quote from your article "where the beginner may learn more about the art of acting." Well, that's what I want to do. Again I quote: "If the player showed lack of interest or application, he or she would be dropped," etc. If I were given the chance I would never leave the studio; I would live, eat in the studio. You may say that a big order, but I worked from 2:15 a. m. to 11:30 p. m. at Hollywood at the Fair; the first day I worked for nothing, second day for fifteen cents and for the other two weeks for 50 cents. I have been down in my basement fixing films, sometimes for five hours a day. I go down there every day.

Please if you can tell some studio to help me; you will never regret it. But if you throw this letter in the waste basket, it will not stop me, for I will never let my courage die. Please help me!

P. S.—Please pardon the writing as I have no typewriter. You may print this letter if you wish.—William A. Costello, 219 South Kilpatrick Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Midshipman Jack

(RKO-Radio)

Romance

A story of the U. S. Naval Academy, Annapolis, and its cadet spirit that make good program entertainment. Mainly colorful, because of its background, it carries a romantic theme that is balanced by light drama, quite a bit of spontaneous comedy, just enough exciting thrill and tops the whole thing off by pointing a stirring moral lesson.

Story book in formula, the yarn heroizes Jack. Characterized as a cadet who likes to beat the regulations, he is placed in charge of a plebe awkward squad and much comedy in both dialogue and action appears as he drills his embryo admirals. A three-cornered romance develops among Jack, Ruth and Clark. Florence Lake (the Edgar Kennedy comedy girl) injects much hilarity into the love interest, then the show takes on a dramatic suspense as Jack's sub chaser cuts across a seaplane sector to get in the path of a descending plane. Here the ex-gob, Burns, Jack's particular protege, is injured.

Determined to quit the service, Jack, in assuming blame for disobeying orders, lectures Burns on sticking to regulations. The conversation is overheard by Captain Rogers, and that is the turning point in the boy's life. Jack's demerits are wiped out, he's the honor man at graduation and of course he wins Ruth.

The good old regeneration, man-who-came-back theme is one of the angles with which to whet patron interest. The color of Annapolis, which permits a lot of patriotism inspiring ballyhoo, is another. The moral is a third. All are great stuff for whipping up juvenile enthusiasm. Naturally wherever there are Navy posts there is opportunity for tieups, and these should not be ignored. Cast names being none too impressive, the more emphahis is placed on story and locale values the better the chances for boosting box offices.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

The Solitaire Man

(MGM)

Mystery

This is quite apt to prove one of the surprise pictures of the season. A clever, baffling mystery story, intelligently directed, convincingly acted, it carries a tone of tense suspense. Against this background there is a novel punch in drama, romance, comedy, thrill and action. At first glance the cast might not seem so potent, but the popular interest created by Herbert Marshall in "Blonde Venus" and "Trouble in Paradise," Mary Boland in several recent Paramount shows; Lionel Atwill in "Murders in the Zoo" and "The Sphinx," May Robson in "Lady for a Day" and "Beauty for Sale," and Ralph Forbes in "The Phantom Broadcast" more than answers the demand for names.

The show establishes Marshall, Miss Robson, Elizabeth Allen and Forbes as a gang of international jewel thieves. Dramatic romance is inserted by having Marshall and Forbes rivals for Miss Allan's affections. Comedy is worked in through the antics of Miss Robson, the aristocratic front and her dealings with the Peabody team in peddling some of the loot.

Ready to quit the racket after a final job, Marshall puts his gang in a plane to fly across the English Channel. From here on all action is confined to the cabin of the plane. Marshall and Forbes argue over Miss Allan, then Atwill introduces himself as a Scotland Yard detective to whom Forbes has blabbed the secret of "The Solitaire Man's" identity, which is climaxed as Forbes leaps from the plane. Then the show plunges deeper into that type of mystery the audience love so well, with one thrill after another. Even the actors seem baffled, so vivid is the realism. How the thing works out is the big selling point. It's intriguing, and not until the very end is the plot cleared up. Sell this show as an A-1 mystery yarn. Dare your patrons to figure it out. Let them know that they are given certain informative facts, but promise they'll be willing to toss them into discard as the involved situations test their conclusions.

In title, theme and color the show offers endless ballyhoo possibilities. It's ripe for all kinds of trick contests and mystifying gags. There's plenty of entertainment from sophistication to hokum to please widely differing tastes.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Directed by Jack Conway. Story by Samuel and Bella Speivack. Screen play by James K. McGuinness. Photographed by Roy Overbaugh. Running time, 65 minutes. Release date, Sept. 22, 1933.

I Loved a Woman

(First National)

Drama

Here's a show that has plenty of the stuff that makes outstanding box office pictures. It's an episodic drama of an idealistic but vivid career. Realistic, yet colorful, it's packed to the hilt with character; glows with love interest; carries a comedy contrast generated by clashing ambitions; runs a vein of rigid suspense as a bitterly disappointed wife waits years for revenge, and it's differently spectacular as its human story is told against a background of world moving events and personalities, all historically familiar.

John Hayden, an idealist who lives only for beauty, is recalled from his Grecian Eden by the death of his father, a pioneer meat-packer. Thrust into the filth, muck and mire of old Chicago, his soul revolts; he replaces a ham hanging on his late father's office wall with a Rembrandt. Meeting a kindred idyllic soul, Martha, he marries. Years pass, Hayden & Company, weakly guided, loses its rank. John meets the student opera singer Laura who sings old ballads for him. He finances her European training, falls in love, would desert everything to be with her, only to have her reason that he can be as much an artist in his own business as she can be in her career.

The die is cast. John turns ruthless. A surging ambition spurs him on. The Spanish War; poisoned meat; Colonel Roosevelt; San Juan Hill; scandal; Hayden & Co. a mighty industry; political chicanery; crusading Roosevelt made vice-president; McKinley assassinated; the "Big Stick" swings; the nation in turmoil, but Hayden beats the rap. More years, Hayden the czar of a mighty industrial empire; Laura, the toast of the musical world; the lovers together again; suspicious Martha trying to get the goods on them, but failing; Laura two-timing John, dramatically driving him to greater business conquests. Then comes the World War; John Hayden contracting contracts to feed all the Allies; fabulous wealth and power; the Armistice; contracts abrogated; Hayden & Company tottering to collapse; Martha coldly awaiting her revenge; another indictment and the Insull episode, John Hayden a shattered old man back in beloved Greece where Laura comes to him to sing the old ballad "Alone on the Prairie"—but he does not know her as he dies.

"I Loved a Woman" is long. Some parts of it, where they are building for impressiveness, are necessarily slowly tempoed, but there is always something that should hold audience interest. While the title does not express the color, theme and punch of the story, cast names more than offset any handicap that might create.

Millions of people have dreamed as John Hayden dreamed, but they never lived as he did. They constitute the potential audiences that should make sensational selling of this picture comparatively easy. — McCarthy, Hollywood.

To The Last Man

(Paramount)

Western

A shoot 'em up western, following the formula of outdoor adventure thrillers, this is a complete throwback and as such a diverting novelty. Although without intent, it has the atmosphere of a "Screen Souvenir," and some real business should be done if smart advantage is taken of this fact. Its field is in towns where there is a neighborly feeling.

Starting with Lee's surrender, the Colby-Hayden Kentucky feud is climaxed when Mark Hayden violates all ethics and has Jed Colby jailed for picking off his pappy. Transferred to Nevada, 20 years elapse. Jed is established as a first-class cattle rustler, with Daggs as the snake in the grass, preying on the Hayden clan. Enters Lynn Hayden, who, running true to form, falls in love with Ellen Colby. Then there are the hero to cheer, the villain and bad man to hiss and hoot, the girl torn between two loyalties; wild riding, killings by the dozen; the ranch house siege; Molly's dramatic "are - you - going - to - let - 'em - get - away-with-this" plea as her husband Bill is killed. In the final climactic battle, all, so it seems, except Lynn, Ellen and Daggs, are wiped out as Daggs explodes an avalanche of rock on to the contending forces; pausing momentarily to plug Jed into eternity. A couple of heroic, hand-to-hand combats intervene, of course. And there's the reaction when Lynn and Ellen learn they are members of feuding families. Then there's the wind-up fight, with Ellen not only battling for her own honor but to protect the wounded man she loves, and then Lynn, knife in hand, falling out of the attic and dealing a death-stab to the vile and villainous Daggs. With only Lynn and Ellen left, there's nothing but the tender clinch.

Straight selling of the picture probably would be unwise, even though it's a Zane Grey story and there are some pretty good names in the cast. But if you have the knack of injecting a sense of humor into your advance publicity, clever kidding should be plenty effective. Done in the right way, it wouldn't be amiss to let patrons know they can cheer and clap, hiss and hoot; to tell the adults they'll see the kind of show that thrilled them so much when they and motion pictures were younger. Kids are smart nowadays, and most of them have heard their parents wishing for the films of the good old days; here's a chance to show them what their fathers and mothers saw. Concoct an "it's-all-in-fun" build-up, go elemental to the farthest possibilities.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Directed by Henry Hathaway. Story by Zane Grey. Screen play by Jack Cunningham. Photographed by Ben Reynolds. Running time, 70 minutes. Release date, September 15, 1933.

The Passion of Joan of Ar

(Capital)

Historical Drama

In a somewhat revised, newly synchronized version, also carrying the adjunct of a running narrative in rather explanatory vein, "The Passion of Joan of Arc" once again comes to the screen. Some six years ago it was made in silent form in Paris, directed by Carl Dreyer, and was then something of a sensation.

Now in the synchronized version prepared by Pierre Arnaud, with dialogue by John Michael Flick and narration by the capably voiced radio announcer, David Ross, the story of the final, anguished days of the famed and martyred Maid of Orleans appears again. The narration and musical score unquestionably add definitely to the effectiveness of the whole film.

For the exhibitor, the picture naturally will present something of a problem, and that by reason of the very nature of the film. It is not to be understood from title or theme that the picture is one of battle and strife, fast paced action on the field of war. Rather it is an impressionistic study in limited setting of the terror and anguish of the innocent, God-fearing girl, prey to the English after her capture, in their nefarious effort, finally successful, to cause the girl to be burned at the stake as a witch, a heretic and an outcast from the church which she loved.

Quickly before the audience the scene shifts and shifts again, to the girl, her accusers, the court of "justice," composed of politically-minded men of the church in the pay of the English. It is the English leader's desire that she be burned, thereby establishing for himself a defense for his defeat earlier at her hands by the admission that she had had the devil on her side in the battle.

Brilliantly does Maria Falconneti play Joan, from the opening moment when she is seen tormented by her captors, to the closing sequence when she is bound to the stake and the smoke from the fire beneath pours up about her hanging head. The others play their unsympathetic roles equally well.

The exhibitor in the Catholic community has here a strong selling film. Religious groups in the community and perhaps school organizations may be drawn to the theatre if they are properly approached. It would be far better to have a smaller audience completely cognizant of what they are to see, than to attempt to draw a large audience by in any way misrepresenting the film as it stands. It is obviously for a select audience, rather than for the masses by reason of its treatment, but it is highly effective motion picture, making full use of an impressionistic technique to reach its definitely high quality in the synchronized version. As such it may be sold, and sold well, to the proper audience.—Aaronson, New York.

Produced in Paris by the Societe General des Films. Distributed by Capital Film Exchange. Directed by Carl Dreyer. Photography by Rudolph Mate and Kotula. Dialogue by John Michael Flick. Synchronized version by Pierre Arnaud. Narrator, David Ross. Musical score, Massard Kurzhene. Release date, New York, September 7, 1933. Running time, 57 minutes.

I Have Lived

(First Division)

Drama

More readily adaptable to the smaller theatre in the lesser community by reason of its players, story and execution, "I Have Lived," independent Chesterfield production, has as the strongest name in the cast Anita Page, while opposite her is Alan Dinehart. Beside these two, there are Allen Vincent, Mathew Betz, Eddie Boland, as perhaps the only players familiar to the patronage. The story, by no means new in theme or development, will have to be sold from the story angle of the girl who comes out of a speakeasy to the stage and makes good, dramatically as well as romantically.

The story has Miss Page an attractive hostess in a come-on speakeasy which is operated by Betz and Gertrude Astor. Dinehart, playwright-director, is having difficulty finding the right girl for the leading role in his new play. His right-hand man, Boland, who supplies what comedy the picture contains, induces him to visit the speakeasy for local color. Dinehart sees Miss Page, thinks she is the one he wants, and when the place is raided, has her freed and brought to his apartment. There he shows interest in her in no other than a professional way and attempts to train her for the part. She is successful, later meeting and falling in love with young Allen Vincent, whose stout and jovial aunt, Maude Truax, is a friend of Dinehart. Nothing is said of Miss Page's past, but when Betz and Miss Astor, out of prison, notice her name on the marquee, that past comes back with a rush. They try to blackmail the girl, and Miss Truax attempts to outsmart the crooked pair, nearly succeeding. Dinehart, meanwhile, has been playing the slave-driver where the girl is concerned.

When Vincent learns of the girl's background, he walks out on her, she having been hurt in a melee when Betz and Miss Astor are arrested. It comes out in expected fashion when Dinehart acknowledges it is the girl, not the actress, he wants.

The exhibitor, under the necessity of rather conventional selling of the picture, perhaps would be better off in concentrating on whatever selling lines he is able to develop in copy from the basic idea of the girl who, pulled from a speakeasy to Broadway, falls in love with her director-employer, who browbeats her before he realizes he is in love with her himself. The picture is best spotted in the mid-week.—Aaronson, New York.

A Chesterfield production. Distributed in New York by First Division Exchanges, elsewhere State Rights. Story by Lou Heifetz. Screen play and dialogue by Winifred Dunn. Directed by Richard Thorpe. Assistant director, Melville Shyer. Sound engineer, Pete Clark. Photographed by M. A. Anderson. Release date, June 15, 1933. Running time, 69 minutes.

Stage Mother

(MGM)

Drama, Comedy, Music

There's lots of entertainment for all kinds of patrons in this show. It's principally emotion-stirring; yet there's comedy and in several spots it is colorfully spectacular. Coming within the current "stage life" cycle, with song, dance, girl grouping featured, it nevertheless possesses a plot and technical treatment that makes for different interest. The intensity of mother love makes the stage mother a selfish, designing, creature yet a character upon whom audience sympathy, particularly that of women, is continually centered. All the way through a tinge of pathos supplies the motif that consolidates all other entertainment values.

Kitty, a vaudeville trouper, has had two husbands, Lorraine and Martin, die before advancing years relegate her to a booking office job. Her daughter, given into the care of stern visaged Bostonian grandparents on the death of Lorraine, returns to her. Embittered by her own tragedies, Kitty embarks upon the career of stage mother. All she knows, all her contacts are devoted to getting Shirley a chance. It comes; small time vaudeville carrying the theatre color, Shirley makes the heaven of every performer—a Palace date. A musical show, Shirley the toast of Broadway, Kitty triumphant, she kills the romance with Foster—the girl's happiness must not interfere with the mother's plans. Then comes as an interlude a "Dancing on the Rainbow" spectacle. Dexter, who would love-nest with Shirley, is blackjacked out of $25,000 as Foster earlier had paid $10,000 to Kitty.

On a trip to Europe, Shirley meets Lord Aylesworth and new romance, but when it threatens to interfere with the girl's stage career, Kitty reverts to type. A stirring mother-daughter scene lays bare all hopes, dreams, ambitions. Anything might happen. But the power of a mother's plea touches Shirley's heart. She puts aside her hopes for love, to make herself the woman her mother always wanted to be but never was.

This show has everything a good picture needs: drama principally, that is full of human interest; a different treatment of the romantic angle; comedy, color, music, dancing, girls, good acting, wherein Alice Brady shines brilliantly, crackling, sometimes slangy dialogue, suspense and a new kind of thrill. It's well directed and although somewhat slow to start, when it touches its real tempo it moves right along.

Its appeal being mainly to adults, although it is okay for juveniles, out of the ordinary methods should be adopted in its selling. Names and material necessary to make "Stage Mother"

Ship of Wanted Men

(Showmen's Pictures)

Drama

A vigorous story, vigorously enacted, is this picturization of what happens to a boatload of criminals bound for a hideaway island off Central America where extradition is not honored. Leaders in portraying that story are Dorothy Sebastian, Fred Kohler and Leon Waycoff; those are the names for billing and advertising. In addition might be mentioned Gertrude Astor, though her role for the most part is not sympathetic; indeed, the same is decidedly true of Kohler.

The radio news announcement device is practicably applied in introducing the characters, criminals seeking refuge after acts ranging from murder to embezzlement. Into this ominous company comes Waycoff, guiltless but proofless, who is to wear the captain's cap because of his skill as a navigator, though Kohler is real boss.

At sea is also a wild yachting party. Dorothy Sebastian kills Jason Robards when he persists in his drunken advances. Then she attempts to swim to the criminals' ship. Waycoff rescues her. It takes $5,000 to get admittance to the island, however, and Kohler is all for giving her to the sharks, but instead the men start bidding for her. With Waycoff's pistol she protects herself from Black until Waycoff arrives. She convinces Waycoff that there is no treachery in handing over the criminals to the government, and he wirelesses a cruiser.

Then Waycoff and Kohler fight it out with their fists—and a real fight it is—and Waycoff becomes captain in fact, and locks them all below deck until the sailors arrive.

Both in theme and dialogue it is not a picture for children, but adults may well be promised an hour of plentiful action on the screen.—Rovelstad, New York.

Secrets of Hollywood

(Lester Scott)

Old Sequences, with Music

With the efforts of a young girl, played by June Walters, to break into the motion picture with the aid of her friend, Mae Busch, who plays the part of a veteran actress, as the vehicle, this film conveys something of what goes on behind the scenes at the studios. A major portion of the comparatively short footage (58 minutes) is devoted to scenes from pictures of an earlier day in the screen's history, and therein lies the opportunity for the showman in selling the picture.

Produced independently by Lester F. Scott, Jr., the film has Miss Busch and Wally Wales as the most significant names, while a host of today's famous personalities of the screen appear in the old sequences. As Miss Busch is engaged in starring in a new feature, with Miss Walters also playing opposite Wales, the veteran takes time off now and again to add to and study her collection of stills from old pictures. As she examines them, she reminisces, and the result, with a burlesqued musical score added, appears. The sequences were abstracted from the Thomas H. Ince library.

Included among them, and forming the sort of tieup with which the exhibitor may do something because of the stars involved, are Edmund Lowe and Florence Vidor in bits from "Barbara Frietchie;" Madge Bellamy, Noah Beery and Cullen Landis in "The Soul of the Beast;" Percy Marmont, Leatrice Joy and Adolph Menjou in "The Marriage Cheat;" Enid Bennett and Matt Moore in "Hairpins;" Wallace Beery in "The Rookie's Return;" Charles Ray, Colleen Moore and John Gilbert in "The Busher." With the obvious vast improvement in the motion picture by contrast with the work of that day, plus the amusement which is inherent in the films of yesterday for the audience of today, the elderly material is interesting and entertaining.

There is little of a really salable nature in the rest of the material, which pictures a film in the making, with sound men, cameramen, director and assistants doing their parts. Much of it has been seen, in one form or another, before, while the ballyhoo of a Hollywood premiere in the grand style is by no means new.

The old bits, reshown, form good material for the showman. The film, however, rather lacks the clean-cut execution of the usual dramatic type of picture, and is chiefly salable on the basis of its recollections in picture form.—Aaronson, New York.

Produced by Lester F. Scott, Jr. Distributed through States Rights. Directed by George M. Merrick. Story and dialogue by Betty Burbridge. Photography, Jules Cronjager. Sound, Earl Crain. Running time, 58 minutes.

Heads We Go

(British International Pictures)

Comedy

There is plenty of promise in this piquant comedy which comes as the first of a new batch of product undertaken by this company with a serious eye on U. S. audiences. It argues soundly for the new British International policy of mingling with their all-British comedies a few subjects in which to utilize American stellar material, and by means of which to capture interest in American theatres.

Constance Cummings is starred with Frank (Cavalcade) Lawton as her beau, and the story is fast, pretty and at times a trifle naughty.

Betty Smith, a mannequin, suddenly comes into a romantic clinch with Toby, apparently a rich young man-about-town. She is planning a holiday at one of England's dreary beaches. He is going to the French Riviera. With her friend Lil, the girl decides to put her whole fortune into a big bust at the resort of the young man's choice. They cannot get hotel room until Lil, exploiting a striking resemblance which Betty bears to the famous film star, Dorothy Kay, starts a masquerade. The thing gets too big for them both, and the real Dorothy Kay sets the police on the track. Betty meanwhile has seen her beau acting as a common waiter and thinks that the two are playing a game of make-believe. Later she is dumbfounded to meet him as host aboard a yacht. He plays the game and enters into the deception, straightening out things so finely that the real Dorothy Kay is arrested for fraud while the other one makes her getaway.

It's a slick, humorous affair with A1 entertainment angles. Star performances are backed by some clever comedy stuff contributed by Gus McNaughton and Claude Hulbert. Inexpensive exploitation should get it well away in most theatres. English accents are toned down, and the star dialogue is 100 per cent American.—Mooring, London.

Produced by British International Pictures. Directed by Monty Banks. Story and dialogue by Fred Thompson. Scenario by Victor Kendall and Fred Thompson. Photography by Jack Cox. Recording by A. E. Ross. Running time, 87 minutes.

David Rubinoff

(Vitaphone)

Pleasant Musical

David Rubinoff, master of the violin, and his band, entertain in attractive fashion with numerous semi-classical and popular pieces, to the accompaniment of an effective superimposed background of appropriate theme. Rubinoff, of course, renders several of the solos for which he is noted, in excellent fashion, while Sylvia Froos sings one number pleasantly. The white suits of the orchestra against a completely black back drop, make for effective staging. Worth special billing by reason of the Rubinoff name.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Dora's Dunking Doughnuts

Good Comedy

The timorous Andy Clyde is usually productive of laughs in his comedy efforts, and this subject is no exception. Andy, the school teacher, is in love with Dora, the maker of doughnuts. When Dora develops a doughnut which floats and is ideal for dunking, Andy gets the brilliant idea of selling it over the radio, using his school class for his program. Three mothers attend, and add a grand battle to Andy's discomfiture. What Andy took to be a ruined program turns into a sensational success, with great promise for the doughnuts and a completed romance for Andy. Lively and amusing, the comedy is good for a laugh on any bill.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Use Your Imagination

(Vitaphone)

Entertaining

A short of definitely high quality in the musical comedy-comic vein, "Use Your Imagination" features Hal LeRoy, the lad of the melodious, flashing, tapping feet and the attractive and equally capable dancing young girl, Mitzi Mayfair. LeRoy, as a young man of many jobs, can hold none long due to his faculty of wandering off into dreams of dancers and dancing while at work. In the course of his dreaming, several smartly attractive dance numbers fill the eye, while the two principals do their work with neatness, and effectively. A lively, entertaining short.—Running time, 18 minutes.

Making a Champion

(Paramount)

Unusual

Grantland Rice, sports commentator extraordinary, after a few brief words, takes the audience to the various fields of sport, showing, in graphic pictures, those qualities which go far toward making a champion in his field. Accuracy, timing, speed, stamina, grace are exemplified by such champions in action as Ellsworth Vines, in tennis; the country's champion middle distance runner; two young girl diving leaders; a pole vaulter, and the nation's champion horseshoe pitcher, who aroused the audience to murmurs of approval and admiration at his almost uncanny accuracy in hurling "ringers" in rapid succession with the horseshoe. An excellent short subject. —Running time, 10 minutes.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 190.—(A) Describe details of construction of test lamp equipment for use on 110–220-volt, three-wire system; also one for straight 110, and one for 220-volt circuits. (B) Using a test lamp, one wire of which was permanently grounded, tell us how you would test, for example, your projector lamp. How would you test a 110-volt circuit you suspected? (C) Tell us what you yourself consider the best, most practical method of testing projection equipment for grounds and why. (D) Were you testing one of your projector lamps, would you first disconnect the ground wire or would you not? Why?

Answer to Question No. 183

Bluebook School Question No. 183 was: (A) What fusing allowance should be made above normal current requirements on secondary side of motor-generator set? (B) Is such excess permissible? (C) For purpose of calculating fuse capacity for primary side of motor-generator set, how would you proceed if only secondary amperage is shown by ammeter? (D) To obtain accurate results in preceding query, what would have to be done? (E) Suppose you have a 60*-volt arc and a* 110*-volt generator, voltage reduced by resistance, current seven cents per KWH, amperage* 70*. What is the cost of voltage reduction per hour of operation?*

The following made good: S. Evans and C. Rau; G. E. Doe; L. Van Buskirk and E. Kroll; D. Danielson; J. Wentworth; H. Edwards; W. Ostrum; H. H. Menifee; T. Van Vaulkenburg; D. Johnson and A. Simmons and W. D. Adamson; L. S. Marksley and J. S. Bischoff; T. Potter and H. Steele; P. L. Mangan and G. Davis; M. N. Daniels; C. Semuels; H. M. Evans; L. I. Trigley; R. K. Wayland; G. L. Grimes; D. R. Landinbury; L. N. Galley and D. E. Ellis; C. D. and L. Dodson; T. R. Haley; L. R. Toli and B. I. Summers; B. T. Daniels; D. U. Tomms.

(A) G. E. Doe says, "Since motor-generators usually serve only projection lamps (motion picture, spots, effects, etc.), and in such lamps the current varies somewhat, especially if the lamp be fed by hand, the fusing must be in excess of normal current flow. This excess should not be less than 20 per cent and may be 25 per cent with safety, as there ordinarily is plenty of capacity in everything about a projection circuit so that it will not be injured by the excess current.

(B) J. Wentworth says, "Yes. Underwriters permit 25 per cent fusing in excess even of the capacity of a motor, provided of course the wires and equipment can carry that current without overload."

(C) Evans and Rau answer this one thus: "To calculate fuse capacity for primary side of motor-generator set when only the secondary amperage is shown by ammeter, in the case of a d.c. arc, multiply the secondary voltage by the secondary amperage. The result will be the secondary wattage. Divide this wattage by the supply voltage, which will as a result give the primary amperage, or would were the set 100 per cent efficient. However, motor-generators are not that efficient, a fair average being perhaps 65 per cent. Therefore as near as we may come to it is to add 35 per cent to the primary wattage, divide by line voltage and then, since it is a set supplying a projection circuit with varying current flow due to fluctuating arc resistance, fuse to that amperage plus 20 to 25 per cent, first, of course, making certain all wires, switches, etc., will carry the overfusing without overload."

(D) To this one almost every one made the same answer, about as follows: Measure the arc voltage and know exactly the efficiency of the set. However, L. N. Galley and D. E. Ellis gave the correct answer: "The exact efficiency of the set must be known, for the reason that it ties in automatically with the power required to produce the generator amperage. The voltage of the generator is a known quantity of course, but the primary amperage and wattage is dependent upon the secondary wattage plus the loss in the set itself."

Note: I have not demerited all of you because of the slip on this one and the last one. However, everyone went definitely wrong on Section D, except G. E. Doe, T. L. Shelton and J. Wentworth.

(E) D. Danielson says, "In this case 110—60=50 volts must be broken down in the resistance. The problem then is very simple. (If you saw some of the answers you would not think so!—F. H. R.) Seventy amperes are used, hence 50 x 70=3,500 watts are 'consumed' in the resistance, and since 3,500 watts for an hour is 3.5 KWH, then 3.5 x 7 =$0.245, the loss per hour due to necessary resistance."

New Laboratory Equipment For 16 mm. Sound on Film

Andre Debrie, Inc., has assembled a complete line of laboratory equipment for handling 16 millimeter sound on film, including printers for the optical reduction of 35 mm sound track to 16 mm, a reduction printer for the picture, and a contact printer for the printing of picture and sound in one operation. All three printers are constructed for the obtaining of two 16 mm. prints in one operation.

Levenson Heads Technicians

Major Nathan Levinson, head of the sound department of Warner-First National, is the new chairman of the technicians' branch of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences.

Frederic Hope was elected to the committee place vacated by the resignation of Hans Dreier.

WABASH AVENUE

CHICAGO

Hearings on the industry code occupied all attention last week. Among those who went to the Capital from here to participate in developments were Jack Miller, Aaron Saperstein and Emma Abplanalp of the film board.

An Indianapolis office of Guercio & Barthel opens September 15. The new branch, called Ger-Bar, Inc., is under the direction of J. M. Dixon, formerly with Federal Electric and General Ticket Register. The Indianapolis office, located at 444 N. Illinois street, will carry a complete line of standard equipment and a complete line of stock parts for lamps and projectors.

Pat Garyn, vice-president and general manager of Master Arts Products, was in town for conferences with Johnny Mednikow. Garyn announced the opening of Master Arts offices at Detroit and Minneapolis. F. R. Cleaver is in charge at Detroit and Jack Harrington at Minneapolis. Garyn is making a trip through the Middlewest and South.

Henri Ellman, who says he spent last Sunday visiting about 40 theatres, declares that business on that date was the biggest in the past two years. The day, it will be recalled, was cold and cloudy with rain threatening. Just the kind of weather, Ellman says, that discouraged attendance at the Fair and gave the theatres a whopping Sunday business.

Ed L. Nikodem, formerly manager of the St. Louis theatre for RKO, is in Chicago as the new manager for the Sheridan theatre for Essaness.

George Taif, for a number of years with Warners and First National, is now covering Illinois and northern Indiana for Capitol Film.

Columbia Pictures last week paid a quarterly dividend of 75 cents on its $6 preferred stock. Eastern Theatres, Ltd., also paid a dividend, of 50 cents.

Dowling To Release First Picture Through Paramount

The first production to come from the newly founded company of Eddie Dowling, and starring Lillian Gish and Roland Young, is expected to be distributed through Paramount. The Arnold Pictures Corporation is producing, with Arthur Hopkins associated with the company. William de Mille is directing.

The title of the film may be either "Buried Alive" or "The Great Adventure." Its release by Paramount will mark the second outside production announced recently for distribution by the company, the other being "Take a Chance," from Rowland-Brice Productions.

Twentieth Century May Make Two Added Features

Joseph M. Schenck indicated in Hollywood last week that Twentieth Century Productions will likely make 14 features this season instead of the 12 announced originally. Darryl Zanuck is already cutting "The Bowery," "Blood Money" and "Broadway Through a Keyhole."

Charles Chaplin has promised his next feature will be ready for United Artists distribution in January. Douglas Fairbanks will make a picture in Europe, probably "Don Juan." Mary Pickford has indicated she has two plans, one for a picture and one for a play. She will decide shortly on the type of picture her next will be.

S. O. S. Corporation Moves

Moving to larger quarters at the same address, SOS Corporation now occupies more than half of the sixth floor at 1600 Broadway, New York. A feature is a glass-enclosed, sound-proofed display chamber, where a miniature theatre shows the latest devices.

JENKINS' COLYUM

Colorado Springs, Colo.

Dear Herald:

Ever since we have been in this mountainous country we have had a splitting headache. It struck us in the Black Hills and has stayed with us ever since. They tell us it is the altitude, and if that's true we are heading April Shower for Kansas as fast as she can go, and that will be fast enough. We'll betcha that as soon as we cross the Kansas line the hay fever will grab us from both sides, and that's what a man gets for not being a Christian Scientist.

We told Henry Friedel, branch manager for MGM in Denver, about our headache and he said he didn't know we had anything in our gourd to ache. Henry has that kind of dizzy spells quite frequently.

Denver is said to be one mile high, and located as she is, right up against the Rocky Mountains, she has three seasons—tourist, fog and winter, but, not counting her crazy laid-out streets, she is quite a city.

We told you last week that Jimmy Morrison, Fox manager, and Rick Ricketson, divisional manager for Fox theatres in the Rocky Mountain district, were going to take us out to the Country Club for dinner on Monday. They did, and we have been trying to figure out why they would show such courtesy to a vagabond colyumnist. There are a couple of boys that Denver ought to be proud of.

Mr. Morrison screened for us Janet Gaynor and Warner Baxter in "Paddy, the Next Best Thing," a Fox picture. This is an Irish story laid in a typical Irish village. The scenes might have been shot on the coast near the Palaverda hills south of Santa Monica or in Alaska, but it don't matter, it's Irish just the same, and with those two excellent stars it had to be good.

We never knew before that the Irish would lie (question mark), but Janet was such a sweet liar that Warner fell for her and—oh, well, unless there is an element in your audience who are goofier than a goose they will all like this immensely. We did, if that means anything to you, so you better play it and step on it hard.

Then we saw "Pilgrimage," with Henrietta Crosman, another Fox picture, in Harry Huffman's Orpheum theatre. This is based on a story of the Gold Star Mothers going to France after the war. Henrietta was a hard-boiled widow in a hillbilly home in Arkansaw. She had a son who wanted to marry a neighbor girl (Marion Nixon) but the mother opposed it. She went to the recruiting office and had her son drafted to go to France. When he was taking the train to go, Marion showed up and told him she was going to have a baby (there was no damn sense in putting that in), so he wanted to stay over one day and marry her, but they forced him on the train and he went to France and was killed.

Later on Henrietta joined the Gold Star Mothers and went to France with them, and from here on the picture got under way and showed some excellent direction. Mrs. Hatfield, presumably another hillbilly Gold Star Mother, furnished some excellent comedy. If Mrs. Hatfield, after drawing on that old pipe of hers as long as she did, didn't have to go outside and heave up Jonah, then it is proof conclusive that she really came from Arkansaw, and no foolin'.

Then later on another young chap showed up who was in love with a gal and wanted to marry her but couldn't because they had to have their parents' consent, and they had no parents. Tough luck. She informed him that he was soon to become a father but he didn't throw any fits. This was illegitimate kid number two. There might have been more, but the director ran out of prospects.

Now don't let this worry you. Outside of those useless scenes, it's an excellent picture, well played and well directed. There will be some tears, which won't hurt a bit, and a lot of laughs, and we doubt if you receive any kicks.

We wired P. B. McCormick of Canyon City that we'd be in Denver. He drove up there 175 miles over the mountains to see us and we have been wondering ever since if that showed any weakmindedness on his part. P. B. is one of the men who is responsible for holding this mountainous country together. He operates the theatres at Florence and Canyon City and those towns should feel themselves exceedingly fortunate, and that ain't no bull.

Monday night we went to the Orpheum to visit our very good friends, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Huffman. Jimmy Morrison and his wife came down there also, and did we have a good time? Oscar, you talk to 'em.

Mr. Huffman has loaded himself up with several of the big downtown houses, besides several suburban houses, and he is what might be called a busy man. Mrs. Huffman told us confidentially that she was glad he is loaded down with work, because it took less of her time to watch him. She tried to persuade us to stay over a day and come out to their home and have dinner with them. We couldn't do it because we hadn't brought our dinner clothes with us. In fact, we didn't leave any at home. If we should get into one of those rigs once we'd feel like one of the lost sons of Israel.

If there are two better people in this country than Mr. and Mrs. Huffman we don't care to meet them, for as it is now we can say that we have met two of the most delightful people on earth.

We are glad that they built Pike's Peak right close to Colorado Springs, for it gives that town one more thing to point to with pride, but they can't point to it with pride right now because it is so foggy that we can't even see the outline of it. What this town ought to do is to keep a bunch of men up on that mountain with brooms to sweep the fog away so people can see their old hill.

We sometimes wonder if that guy Pike was really the first one to discover this mountain, for on a clear day it can be seen for seventy-five miles. It is all right to give Pike the credit for discovering it, because that will shut off any claims Will Rogers or Clark Gable might make, and you know how those boys can claim.

We couldn't find an exhibitor in this town with a search warrant; they must be lost in the fog, so we are heading down the Arkansas river valley toward Kansas and her hay fever.

As we were driving along today we tried to imitate a crooner we heard over the radio, and April Shower stopped in her tracks and refused to budge an inch until we quit. We couldn't blame her. There's a car that has some sense.

The papers are playing up a story of an old man in Kansas who married a young woman on his seventy-ninth birthday and a baby came to their house on his eightieth birthday. You can't beat those Jayhawkers no way you figure it. We live in Nebraska.

Columbia

CALIFORNIA TRAIL, THE: Buck Jones—Just fair. My patrons did not like this so well. Too much Mexican stuff in this one. Why not give the public straight westerns. They would be pleased much more. Running time, 65 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

MAN OF ACTION: Tim McCoy—Another good western picture with plenty of action and thrills. A very interesting story and one that will please old and young alike. Tim McCoy as a Ranger that gets what he goes after. If your patrons want westerns, this is sure to please. The recording is a little bad, but except for that fact it is a good picture. Running time, 57 minutes. Played August 26.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

UNKNOWN VALLEY: Buck Jones, Cecilia Parker—This is an extra good western picture. The story just one of them dreams but entertaining. Played on a double bill with "The Big Chance" (Eagle-Graphic).—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

WOMAN I STOLE, THE: Jack Holt—Good. Just the type suited for Jack Holt. Running time, 69 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

Eagle-Graphic

BIG CHANCE, THE: John Darrow—A very good prize fight picture. Great for Saturday night crowd in a small town. Played on double bill with "Unknown Valley" (Columbia).—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

First National

LILLY TURNER: Ruth Chatterton—What I consider a very sordid story and not up to Chatterton's standard but she does some very fine acting with the very able support of George Brent, Frank McHugh and Guy Kibbee and it pleased 95 per cent. Had a very good attendance though I struck two rainy nights. It is evidently what they want. Running time, 64 minutes. Played August 19-20.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theate, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

Fox

BEST OF ENEMIES: Marian Nixon, Buddy Rogers—One of the most pleasing pictures this year. Our audience liked it and told us so. Clean and that's something to mention now. Running time, 75 minutes. Played August 23-24.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

BONDAGE: Dorothy Jordan—A most depressing picture. Not entertainment at all. Just torture. We all have trouble enough in real life, and when people see a picture like this they just don't feel like going to a movie again in a long time. Pictures like this one should not be made in times like this. Running time, 66 minutes. Played July 24-25.—R. D. Carter, Fairfax Theatre, Kilmarnock, Va. Town and country patronage.

IT'S GREAT TO BE ALIVE: Edna May Oliver, Raul Roulien—Light comedy drama with plenty of music. Young fans probably think more of it than the older bunch. No dirt. Running time, 71 minutes. Played August 30-31.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

RAINBOW TRAIL, THE: George O'Brien—This picture drew us the biggest midweek business that we have had in weeks. These are the type of pictures that bring out the rural patrons and send them home satisfied. Too bad we can't get more like them. Running time, 59 minutes. Played August 23-24.—M F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

SAILOR'S LUCK: James Dunn, Sally Eilers—Better than the average. Drew fair. It's clean, entertaining all the way through. Running time, 64 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

SAILOR'S LUCK: James Dunn, Sally Eilers—A rough and rather good comedy because of Sammy Cohen. This pleased our Friday and Saturday crowd and did good business. Running time, 78 minutes. Played August 11-12.—R. D. Carter, Fairfax Theatre, Kilmarnock, Va. Town and country patronage.

SMOKE LIGHTNING: George O'Brien—A good western that pleased. George O'Brien is popular with the kiddies and Betsy Ross King is fine. Good scenery. Running time, 58 minutes. Played August 23-24.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

SMOKE LIGHTNING: George O'Brien—A good western that did a nice business. We always like these O'Brien westerns, because they are well made and do well for us. Running time, 59 minutes. Played July 21-22.—R. D. Carter, Fairfax Theatre, Kilmarnock, Va. Town and country patronage.

SMOKE LIGHTNING: George O'Brien—Good western that gave general satisfaction.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

WARRIOR'S HUSBAND, THE: Elissa Landi, Ernest Truex, David Manners—If your people want laughs, this picture has got them. One of the craziest picture I ever saw and well acted. Real comedy. Nothing silly, and very entertaining. Every one enjoyed it and said so.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

YOUNG AMERICA: Spencer Tracy—A dandy Friday-Saturday show. Rather old but what is the difference. Running time, 67 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

Majestic

WORLD GONE MAD, THE: Pat O'Brien, Evelyn Brent—Played on double bill with "Drum Taps" (World Wide) and gave a good Saturday show. A good action picture.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

MGM

BARBARIAN, THE: Ramon Novarro, Myrna Loy—What I call zero in entertainment value. Wish the producers would start a back to America movement. Pleased about fifty per cent. In my opinion the only highlight is Louise Closser Hale. Novarro was quite popular here but "Son Daughter" and now "The Barbarian" has about finished his popularity. Running time, 88 minutes. Played August 26-27.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

DEVIL'S BROTHER, THE: Laurel and Hardy, Dennis King—This is a wow of a picture and it is big. Just enough Laurel and Hardy comedy to make it a very satisfactory entertainment. King's singing very fine. Gave good satisfaction here.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

GABRIEL OVER THE WHITE HOUSE: Walter Huston—A wonderful picture that fell flat at box office; not as good as "American Madness." Huston's performance wonderful.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

HELL BELOW: Robert Montgomery, Walter Huston, Madge Evans, Robert Young, Jimmy Durante—This is one of the best pictures we have played in a long time. Great cast and a big story. Well acted and directed. Satisfied them all. Played August 27-28.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

HOLD YOUR MAN: Jean Harlow, Clark Gable—Very good. It pleased about 80 per cent. Very good in these times. Running time, 89 minutes. Played August 18-19.—J. E. Tunstall, Nottawa Theatre, Blackstone, Va. Small town patronage.

LOOKING FORWARD: Lionel Barrymore, Lewis Stone—Another excellent picture that failed to click. Those who came liked it but I did not make film rental. The reformers howl about good, clean pictures but they do not patronize them and the exhibitor who books many of them is sunk. Personally I thought the picture great, but I cannot run them for my own benefit. Running time, 83 minutes. Played August 16-17.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

LOOKING FORWARD: Lionel Barrymore, Lewis Stone—A very satisfactory picture. Great story and the acting of Barrymore and Stone wonderful. All we got in said it was great, but good pictures don't draw.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

RASPUTIN AND THE EMPRESS: Ethel, John and Lionel Barrymore—If you want to bore your patrons for two solid hours here is the one to do it with. You'll have to lock the doors to get them to sit it through. 13 reels of Russia, which certainly held no interest to my patrons. Would suggest you omit every other reel this will relieve their suffering and they can never tell the difference in the story. MGM sold this to me as a special and my Sunday-Monday business was just about half my usual gross. —Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

RED DUST: Clark Gable, Jean Harlow—An old one that we picked up on the strength of the two stars. It is a darn good picture of the highly sexed Gable kind. Only fair business. Hardly worth the trouble of picking up this late unless these stars mean more to you than they did to us. Running time, 9 reels. Played August 30-31.—Henry Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Texas. Small town patronage.

SON DAUGHTER: Ramon Novarro, Helen Hayes—Exhibitors who have this one to play have my sympathy. No box office draw. Two good stars and several feet of film wasted.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

TODAY WE LIVE: Joan Crawford, Gary Cooper—Very poor. No one cares for this type of story. Business poor. Joan was at one time the best draw we could get but she has lost out here.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

WHEN LADIES MEET: Robert Montgomery, Ann Harding—Very good show. Didn't do average business on this, but no fault of picture. Running time, 85 minutes. Played August 11-12.—J. E. Tunstall, Nottawa Theatre, Blackstone, Va. Small town patronage.

WHITE SISTER, THE: Clark Gable, Helen Hayes—Not nearly as good as the silent version. Just a fair draw. Didn't do what it should at box office due to it being too old. They have lost interest.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

Paramount

BIG BROADCAST, THE: Bing Crosby, Stuart Erwin, Leila Hyams—While we were late in playing this picture, nevertheless it still had a little more pull than an ordinary picture, and it pleased 100 per cent. Really it is a pleasure to run a picture that your patrons enjoy as much as they did this one. The print was old and badly misused. Running time, 80 minutes. Played August 26-27.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

BIG BROADCAST, THE: Stuart Erwin, Bing Crosby, Leila Hyams—Great entertainment. Pleased 100 per cent. Did good business; wish we could get more like this one. It also proves that filth, both moral and physical, is not what the public wants. Running time, 85 minutes. Played July 3-4.—R. D. Carter, Fairfax Theatre, Kilmarnock, Va. Town and country patronage.

COLLEGE HUMOR: Bing Crosby, Jack Oakie, Burns and Allen—Swell show. Swell cast. Nice business. It went over here 100 per cent. Nuff sed. Running time, 80 minutes. Played August 25-26.—J. E. Tunstall, Nottawa Theatre, Blackstone, Va. Small town patronage.

DEVIL IS DRIVING, THE: Edmund Lowe, Wynne Gibson—Used this midweek on (15c) bargain night and in two days barely grossed film rental. Picture very interesting, and contained more thrilling situations than a good western, but it failed to pull them out. It will please if you can get them in. Print in poor condition. Running time, 60 minutes.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

DISGRACED: Helen Twelvetrees, Bruce Cabot—This is a fairly good picture; however, nothing big about it. It is the age old story of the "unwritten law" and will appeal to adults only. The acting and settings were excellent but to make a good picture you have to have a good story. You can play this one day and get by on it. Business about average and the majority of our patrons were well pleased. Running time, 65 minutes. Played August 29.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

EAGLE AND THE HAWK, THE: Fredric March, Jack Oakie, Cary Grant—Very good. It is a man's picture. Pleased about 60 per cent. Running time, 72 minutes. Played August 21-22.—J. E. Tunstalls, Nottawa Theatre, Blackstone, Va. Small town patronage.

GAMBLING SHIP: Cary Grant, Benita Hume—Fair. Just another picture. Did not do agerage business. Running time, 72 minutes. Played August 7-8.—J. E. Tunstall, Nottawa Theatre, Blackstone, Va. Small town patronage.

GIRL IN 419, THE: James Dunn, Gloria Stuart—Very good. It pleased about 80 per cent of those that saw it. Running time, 76 minutes. Played August 14-15.—J. E. Tunstall, Nottawa Theatre, Blackstone, Va. Small town patronage.

HORSE FEATHERS: Four Marx Brothers—Better than any of their previous efforts. Pleased 95 per cent and drew extra business. Paramount surely let you have a chance to get a dime above expenses. Their product the best I've seen since the talkies.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

I LOVE THAT MAN: Edmund Lowe, Nancy Carroll—This is just another program picture with entirely too much dirt in it. However, it is interesting and will please the majority of your patrons. Would have gone over well with a happy ending. This type of picture is getting too monotonous. Can't the producers get away from gangster and sexy pictures? If they keep on, this picture industry is going on the rocks. Running time, 75 minutes. Played August 23.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

JENNIE GERHARDT: Sylvia Sidney, Donald Cook—This is just another program picture, which is entirely too sad to please the average theatregoer. The acting is marvelous, but that is not enough to pull up the poor story. Why can't the producers show the bright side of life ? The average person knows too much about the other side. In a theatre they want entertainment but not this type. Business below average. Running time, 76 minutes. Played August 28.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

KING OF THE JUNGLE: Buster Crabbe—This one drew young and old and sent them all away satisfied. What more could you ask for? Played August 19-20.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

KING OF THE JUNGLE: Buster Crabbe, Frances Dee—This picture pleased our people and did a fair business for us. We of the "theatre" did not think so much of it; but if our patrons liked it, it was OK with us. Gave a fair repeat. Running time, 72 minutes. Played July 31-August 1.—R. D. Carter, Fairfax Theatre, Kilmarnock, Va. Town and country patronage.

LOVE ME TONIGHT: Maurice Chevalier, Jeanette MacDonald—Not just right some way. I don't know just what it needs, but something is wrong. Business not so good.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

MAMA LOVES PAPA: Charles Ruggles, Mary Boland—Very good; far above the average program picture. It pleased 80 per cent. Running time, 72 minutes. Played August 30-31.—J. E. Tunstall, Nottawa Theatre, Blackstone, Va. Small town patronage.

MAN OF THE FOREST: Randolph Scott, Verna Hillie—Very good. One of the best westerns we have seen for some time. Running time, 61 minutes. Played August 23-24.—J. E. Tunstall, Nottawa Theatre, Blackstone, Va. Small town patronage.

MIDNIGHT CLUB: George Raft, Clive Brook—Very good crook drama that our patrons enjoyed. Running time, 67 minutes. Played August 31-September 1-2.—W. A. Collins, New Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. Small town patronage.

MIDNIGHT CLUB: Clive Brook, George Raft—Very clever detective picture, yet didn't do the business. Running time, 70 minutes. Played August 28-29.—J. E. Tunstall, Nottawa Theatre, Blackstone, Va. Small town patronage.

MIDNIGHT CLUB: Clive Brook, George Raft—For some reason George Raft does not get any money in Anamosa. Good show and excellently produced. Those that came liked it.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

NIGHT AFTER NIGHT: George Raft—Nice picture that pleased and gave a good repeat. Business good. Raft is the boy for romantic roles and should stick to romance. Running time, 72 minutes. Played July 19-20.—R. D. Carter, Fairfax Theatre, Kilmarnock, Va. Town and country patronage.

SONG OF SONGS: Marlene Dietrich—Here is a picture that is difficult to report on. Do not believe majority in small towns will like it, however. Some of our patrons said it was one of the best and others said it was one of the worst. Personally did not find it entertaining. Business was way above average. Typical of Mamoulian's direction, it takes him so long to get anywhere; concentrates too much on camera angles and forgets about entertainment, the kind that pleases the masses. Running time, 90 minutes. Played August 27-30.—W. A. Collins, New-Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. Small town patronage.

THREE CORNERED MOON: Claudette Colbert, Richard Arlen—Very good comedy drama above average. Business normal. Patrons pleased. Running time, 77 minutes. Played August 20-21-22.—W. A. Collins, New Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. Small town patronage.

THREE CORNERED MOON: Claudette Colbert, Richard Arlen—Here's new one that should go over in the small town. A bright, clever, crazy story and picture. If they "get" the utter foolishness of the thing they can't help but enjoy it. Splendid casting in all parts, and an orchid to Elliot Nugent for his direction job. Started Paramount week with this and glad of it. Running time, 8 reels. Played September 3-5.—Henry Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Texas. Small town patronage.

TROUBLE IN PARADISE: Miriam Hopkins, Herbert Marshall, Kay Francis—Excellent entertainment. High class comedy that pleased our patrons. Good repeat. Business good. But why this Herbert Marshall? There are a number of our old familiar actors that can give this Marshall cards and spades and then beat him at the game. Running time, 81 minutes. Played July 26-27.—R. D. Carter, Fairfax Theatre, Kilmarnock, Va. Town and country patronage.

WILD HORSE MESA: Randolph Scott—We never have played a better western than this one. Paramount and Grey productions are in a class by themselves and this one is about top-notch. Even the ones who profess to scorn the horse operas admitted this was good. Plenty action, great photography, excellent cast. Scotty, Sally Blane and Fred Kohler fine, and hundreds of gunshots and scores of villains were not fired and killed. A long report on a western, but this one is good. Running time, 7 reels. Played September 1-2.—Henry Reeve, Mission Theatre, Minard, Texas. Small town patronage.

RKO

CHEYENNE KID: Tom Keene—When they like plenty of comedy and a clean western all in one can, this will please 100 per cent. Running time, 55 minutes. Played August 25-26.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

CROSS FIRE: Tom Keene—Good western as all the Tom Keene pictures are. Our folk still want their westerns and I believe there are a lot more just like ours about these westerns. Running time, 60 minutes. Played September 7-8.—R. D. Carter, Fairfax Theatre, Kilmarnock, Va. Town and country patronage.

DIPLOMANIACS: Wheeler and Woolsey—Fair comedy entertainment. Not as good as "The Cuckoos," "Cracked Nuts" or "Peach O' Reno." All of these had more comedy and more good music and dancing. Business off for this pair, for they have always done well for us. Running time, 62 minutes. Played July 17-18.—R. D. Carter, Fairfax Theatre, Kilmarnock, Va. Town and country patronage.

DOUBLE HARNESS: Ann Harding, William Powell—The first good picture we have played from Radio this season. This is absolutely the best picture they have made. However, don't expect too much or you may be disappointed. This is a romantic comedy and should do a good business. Full of interest and should please all classes of people. Business above average and most of our patrons well pleased. Running time, 74 minutes. Played August 24-25.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

GREAT JASPER, THE: Richard Dix—Terrible. Too much talk, too much drinking, unpleasant story. It is pictures like this that are driving people away from the movies. Business so very low that we don't care if we never run another "Dix" picture. Running time, 81 minutes. Played July 5-6.—R. D. Carter, Fairfax Theatre, Kilmarnock, Va. Town and country patronage.

KING KONG: Fay Wray, Robert Armstrong, Bruce Cabot—Here's one "ballyhoo" picture that lives up to its exploitation. A technical and mechanical masterpiece. Of course, the "Fan" magazines have taken a lot of the kick out of it, but it's first rate entertainment for anybody, and a drawing card in these times. I've read all sorts of reports on this one, but RKO made a darn good picture in my estimation. Even though you may be late on it, it's worth while. Running time, 11 reels. Played August 20-21-22.—Henry Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Texas. Small town patronage.

MAN HUNT: Junior Durkin—One of the very worst pictures we have run in a long time. Not because of Durkin's work; no doubt he did as he was directed. It was dull and dragged all the way to the end. And it was nothing but talk, talk. One 12 year old little girl came out and said she wished they would talk themselves to death, then we would be through with them. Running time, 61 minutes. Played July 28-29.—R. D. Carter, Fairfax Theatre, Kilmarnock, Va. Town and country patronage.

OUR BETTERS: Constance Bennett—A good picture of the kind but not the kind we can do any business with. The star fine and the cast too. Story for the highbrows; not for small towns. They don't know what it is all about.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

SWEEPINGS: Lionel Barrymore—It's all Barrymore, but they all liked it. Every one said "How true to life; with the too sordid parts left out." Very satisfactory here. Running time, 80 minutes. Played August 28-29.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

Universal

BE MINE TONIGHT: Jan Kiepura—A real motion picture. Most excellent music. A delightful change from so much sex, underworld and the like. While all the players were foreign you forgot all about who they were because they entertained you. Business good. Running time, 77 minutes. Played August 9-10.—R. D. Carter, Fairfax Theatre, Kilmarnock, Va. Town and country patronage.

FIDDLIN' BUCKAROO: Ken Maynard—Very good western. It did good business here. Running time, 61 minutes. Played August 23-24.—J. E. Tunstall, Nottawa Theatre, Blackstone, Va. Small town patronage.

KING OF JAZZ: Paul Whiteman—One of the greatest, if not the greatest, picture, ever made. Too big to comment on. Buy it and see for yourself. This is the second time we have played the picture. It has been cut down some, but I think it is better now than the first time we played it.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

KING OF JAZZ: Paul Whiteman—No good for us at the box office. Wonderful revue and color, but the poorest first of the week business in weeks, and that's saying something. Absence of any plot or story seemed to be the trouble, just as it ruined the musical show picture several years ago. Running time, 8 reels. Played August 27-29.—Henry Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Texas. Small town patronage.

MOONLIGHT AND PRETZELS: Mary Brian, Leo Carrillo, Roger Pryor—Very good musical comedy, clean and entertaining from start to finish. All you exhibitors that have this booked be sure and give it plenty advertising. This picture is in line with "Gold Diggers of 1933" and "42d Street." Running time, 89 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

OUT ALL NIGHT: Slim Summerville, Zasu Pitts—Pretty good. Better than "They Just Had to Get Married." Running time, 70 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

PRIVATE JONES: Lee Tracy—This one did a complete and utter nose-dive. Good entertainment, but the war angle finished it for us. Running time, 9 reels. Played August 23-24.—Henry Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Texas. Small town patronage.

SECRET OF THE BLUE ROOM, THE: Lionel Atwill, Gloria Stuart—Very good mystery show. It pleased here. Running time, 65 minutes. Played August 16-17.—J. E. Tunstall, Nottawa Theatre, Blackstone, Va. Small town patronage.

Warner

42D STREET: Warner Baxter, Bebe Daniels, George Brent, Ruby Keeler, Dick Powell—Our second run on this one to a very good business. Many people came back to see it again. Really a wonderful picture. The acting and settings are marvelous. Many good songs and dancing a plenty. Quite a few popular song hits. I believe this will prove one of the biggest money getters of the season. If you have not played this, get busy and book it now. Running time, 89 minutes. Played August 31-September 1.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

42D STREET: Ruby Keeler, Warner Baxter, Dick Powell, Bebe Daniels—The best draw and most interesting picture of the year. Beautiful music, good story. I'm getting tired running my theatre for the producers. No more such one-sided contracts will get my signature. If they won't make me a few dimes, I don't want them. High film rentals and percentage pictures are a thing of the past for this house.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

GOLD DIGGERS OF 1933: Warren William, Joan Blondell, Aline MacMahon, Ruby Keeler—Did an excellent business for Anamosa. But when we figured up and paid for extras we had less money than on any other good picture. Why do we suckers bite on this 50 per cent thing.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

GRAND SLAM: Paul Lukas, Loretta Young—A very good program picture. Good comedy. Them that understood bridge said it was great. All liked the picture.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

I AM A FUGITIVE FROM A CHAIN GANG: Paul Muni—This one is old but drew people who seldom show up. Exceptionally good picture of the chain gang. Men like it; women do not.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

MARY STEVENS, M.D.: Kay Francis, Lyle Talbot—Fair. Just another picture. Didn't click here. Running time, 72 minutes. Played August 9-10.—J. E. Tunstall, Nottawa Theatre, Blackstone, Va. Small town patronage.

PRIVATE DETECTIVE 62: William Powell—Here is another swell picture from Warner. Just the type of picture for William Powell, and how he handles his part. It is a detective story and one of the best that I have seen in some time. This is good entertainment for old and young alike. An excellent supporting cast adds much to the picture. Business slightly above average, and everybody pleased. Running time, 67 minutes. Played August 30.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

WORKING MAN, THE: George Arliss—A splendid picture. Our patrons say best for this actor yet. This type of picture makes a man feel like talking to his neighbors the day after. Entertaining every minute. We cannot do the business on this type of picture, but if we had more of them we would stay longer in the business and get better business later. People have got tired of the rot in pictures and quit going to shows. Clean them up and the business will come back. Played September 3-4.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

World Wide

DRUM TAPS: Ken Maynard—Played on double bill with "World Gone Mad" (Majestic) and gave a good Saturday show. A good western.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

UPTOWN NEW YORK: Jack Oakie—Very good picture for Friday-Saturday use. Running time, 80 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

SASSY CATS: Scrappy Cartoon—Very good; better than most cartoons. Running time, 8 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

Educational

AS THE CROWS FLY: Moran and Mack—This is a very good two reel comedy featuring the "Two Black Crows." Very funny and interesting. This is a little old but still better than many of the new comedies. Will please everybody, especially the kids. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

BENEATH OUR FEET: Battle for Life Series—These nature reels are in a class by themselves and please all.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

CINDERELLA: Terry-Toon—Another fine Terry-Toon.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

LOOSE RELATIONS: Andy Clyde—A good two reel comedy. Pleases grownups and also the kids.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

ROBIN HOOD: Terry-Toon—A very fine cartoon.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

MGM

A LAD AN' A LAMP: Our Gang—Good gang comedy. They seem to be getting better than they were.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

ALLEZ OOP: Sport Champion—Excellent. More entertainment than the 13 reel feature I played with it.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

BRING 'EM BACK A WIFE: Taxi Boys—Good slapstick comedy.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

CHINAMAN'S CHANCE: Flip the Frog—About like the other frog cartoons.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

MAIDS A LA MODE: Zasu Pitts, Thelma Todd—Good one from this team. Running time, two reels.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

NATURE IN THE WRONG: Charlie Chase—Good.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

NEW ZEALAND: FitzPatrick Traveltalk—No one cares for them; just a waste of time so far as my patrons are concerned.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

THEIR FIRST MISTAKE: Laurel-Hardy—Not up to the Laurel-Hardy standard. What I call a mighty poor short but it got some laughs. Running time, 18 minutes.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

TWICE TWO: Laurel and Hardy—One of the best.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

Paramount

BETTY BOOP'S BIG BOSS: Talkartoon—Good. Running time, 7 minutes.—J. E. Tunstall, Nottawa Theatre, Blackstone, Va. Small town patronage.

CAPTAIN HENRY'S RADIO SHOW: Very entertaining single reel with acts that appeal to the average audience.—W. A. Collins, New Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. Small town patronage.

DETECTIVE TOM HOWARD OF THE SUICIDE SQUAD: Tom Howard—Good. It pleased about 60 per cent. Running time, 8 minutes.—J. E. Tunstall, Nottawa Theatre, Blackstone, Va. Small town patronage.

DOWN BY THE OLD MILL STREAM: Four Eton Boys—There are no better cartoon subjects than this Paramount series. This particular one is exceptionally good, fine music and all the old country dance tunes that they like out in this cow country. Comment from our audience on a short is unusual—this one caused it. Running time, one reel.—Henry Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Texas. Small town patronage.

HOLLYWOOD ON PARADE: No. 8—Poorest one of these we have played. Will get by.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

MOONLIGHT FANTASY: Vincent Lopez—Excellent. Pleased 100 per cent. More like it would be appreciated. Running time, 7 minutes.—J. E. Tunstall, Nottawa Theatre, Blackstone, Va. Small town patronage.

PEANUT VENDOR, THE: Armida—Screen song. The first short we ever played that the audience booed. Nuf sed.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

SING A SONG: James Melton—This is a good one reel screen song featuring James Melton singing a few of the old time songs which are familiar to everyone. A very clever cartoon comedy in connection makes it very entertaining and a good program filler. Running time, 9 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

WALKING THE BABY: Burns and Allen—Fair. Not up to standard. Running time, 8 minutes.—J. E. Tunstall, Nottawa Theatre, Blackstone, Va. Small town patronage.

RKO

GOOD HOUSEWRECKING: Edgar Kennedy—A funny comedy. As usual, Kennedy wrecks the works.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

United Artists

LULLABY LAND: Silly Symphony—As usual these color cartoons are far above any short on the market.—W. A. Collins, New Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. Small town patronage.

Universal

ALIAS THE PROFESSOR: James Gleason—A funny comedy of two reels.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

GLEASON'S NEW DEAL: James Gleason—Good. Have seen better, also worse. Running time, 21 minutes.—J. E. Tunstall, Nottawa Theatre, Blackstone, Va. Small town patronage.

HIS FIRST CASE: Vince Barnett—Very good comedy. It pleased here. Running time, 21 minutes.—J. E. Tunstall, Nottawa Theatre, Blackstone, Va. Small town patronage.

I KNOW EVERYBODY AND EVERYBODY'S RACKET: Walter Winchell, Paul Whiteman—A splendid two reel subject.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

STRANGE AS IT SEEMS: A most interesting and highly satisfactory reel enjoyed by all. The newer ones are not in color and that is a detriment; the color made this a really outstanding short. Sorry they discontinued it. Running time, one reel.—Henry Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Texas. Small town patronage.

Warner Vitaphone

ALMA MARTYR, THE: Fred Waring and his band—A very good one reel musical. Fred Waring and his band play several good numbers, and are they great! The tap dancing specialty is great. We had many customers compliment on this one and there's no reason why they shouldn't. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

ALMA MARTYR, THE: Fred Waring and his Band—A great band act. Good singing and an excellent dancer. Wonderfully staged.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

BEAUTY SPOTS OF THE WORLD: E. M. Newman World Adventures—A very good one reeler, showing some of the beauty spots of the world. Interesting and educational. Running time, 9 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

BOSKO THE SPEED KING: Looney Tune—Good. Running time, 7 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

BYGONES: Ruth Etting—A very fine two reel subject.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

FIFI: Broadway Brevity—This is a very good Broadway Brevity, that is if you like light opera. A few old songs like "Kiss Me Again" and some scenes from some of the old operas. Hats off to Vitaphone for a swell short, but keep away from the Pepper Pot series. Running time, 19 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

FIFI: Broadway Brevity—Good. Not up to standard. Running time, 18 minutes.—J. E. Tunstall, Nottawa Theatre, Blackstone, Va. Small town patronage.

HEY, HEY, WESTERNER: Broadway Brevity—One of the best shorts I ever run. Color, music, comedy, just every kind of entertainment that can be crowded into two reels of mighty fine entertainment.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

IF I'M ELECTED: Pepper Pot—This is just another sorry comedy. I cannot understand why Vitaphone should mar their reputation with such shorts as they present in this series. With the exception of the Pepper Pot series, they have the reputation of having good shorts. Running time, 9 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

PICKING A WINNER: Broadway Brevity—Very good. Well received here. Running time, 18 minutes.—J. E. Tunstall, Nottawa Theatre, Blackstone, Va. Small town patronage.

PLEASURE ISLAND: Broadway Brevity—This is a very good musical comedy in color with a cast of beautiful girls and plenty of music and dancing. Not as good as some of them, but in color it will go over well. The scenes are beautiful and singing and dancing swell. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

SEA DEVILS: Pepper Pot—Interesting. Running time, 9 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

SHANTY WHERE SANTA CLAUS LIVES: Merry Melody—This is a wonderful carton, showing Santa Claus and his workshop. All of the toys talk and act, and it is real amusing. Be sure to get the kids in to see it, they are sure to like it. Very entertaining for both young and old. Running time, 9 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

TIP, TAP, TOE: Broadway Brevity—Good. Running time, 18 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

Serials

Mascot

THREE MUSKETEERS, THE: John Wayne—A dandy serial that pleases all.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

Universal

GORDON OF GHOST CITY: Buck Jones—First serial I've tried in a long time. Have just run one chapter, but it looks as if it might catch on. That Jones name means a lot. Remains to be seen if it works out, but this one looks promising. Running time, two reels.—Henry Reeve, Mission Theatre, Menard, Texas. Small town patronage.

JUNGLE MYSTERY: Tom Tyler—We just got through playing the last chapters of this serial. This is a good serial if your audience likes wild animals. We found that quite a number of the smaller children were afraid. Just too much rough stuff in it.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

PHANTOM OF THE AIR: Tom Tyler—This is rotten. There is no other way of expressing my opinion of this serial. The worst that we have ever played in our theatre. Absolutely no story. For 12 weeks the scenes were laid in practically the same room and, to complete it, the room was dynamited and blown to bits, killing the two villains but sparing the hero. The day of good serials has passed, so why not discontinue them? Running time, 12 chapters, 20 minutes each.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

HE GAVE A PARTY

Whenever we become involved in a discussion of managers' duties and responsibilities (and often we do), our thoughts go back to dear old Fred Walton, some years back the guiding genius of the American Theatre, in Bellingham, Washington.

Fred has since passed on to his reward, but well do we remember the constant enjoyment he received from his theatre duties. Playing host was Fred's conception of managing, and when time came to open the house, he would say—"Well, let's go give the party."

Walton would stand at the door, widely grinning, handshaking and wisecracking with the folks as they arrived, in the manner of an old time Southern colonel welcoming guests. He had a word for everyone, answered a thousand questions about the show, the stars, coming attractions; in general having the time of his life. And that Fred was enjoying himself was evident in every gesture, so much so that even the sourest patron became infected with these enjoyment germs.

The unspoken philosophy of this swell guy was simple, sensible and profitable. His unconscious reaction to the job was that the manager, directly responsible for the comfort and enjoyment of each patron, could not perform his duties wholeheartedly and spontaneously unless he himself rendered these services with the same degree of pleasure, which in turn must react favorably at the box office.

Practical thinking, and passed along for the consideration of those managers who find little pleasure in their work. We do not say that the big grin and the hello stuff will change poor jobs to good ones, or hard boiled bosses to philanthropists, but a little of the former may help to lessen a tough grind.

OPTIMISM

Things are picking up. Among those who are in a position to know, opinion indicates a much healthier state of affairs for the nation at large, including, of course, the business of the motion picture in all its ramifications, and especially so, the theatre.

Of immediate concern to the showman is the "upping" of wages in accordance with the requirements of the national code. This should mean more money at the box office, and by the same token, salary increases for the underpaid manager

Wise executives are fully aware that the anticipated increase in grosses depends to an appreciable extent upon the efforts of the manager, and smart exhibitors in various sections of the country have already effected appreciable additions. As the expected returns of the new deal become more apparent, managers will share in the benefits of this returned prosperity, but the stimulation of these efforts by a deserved tilting of the weekly check right now is one of the most efficient ways to arouse the necessary enthusiasm in the managerial breast.

EMPLOYMENT

We are happy to be able to say that your Round Table in the past few weeks has found good positions for a number of managers, assistants and poster artists. Able exhibitors requested us to secure for them able men, and we were "able" to bring together, men and jobs.

Though the Club does not run an official employment department, our facilities are extended to exhibitors seeking competent help, and to showmen on the hunt for positions. Much more could be done if our good offices were utilized by a larger number of circuit and independent personnel directors who may have difficulty in securing immediately, sufficiently skilled and experienced showmen.

We shall be pleased to co-operate further with exhibitors in supplying good men for good jobs.

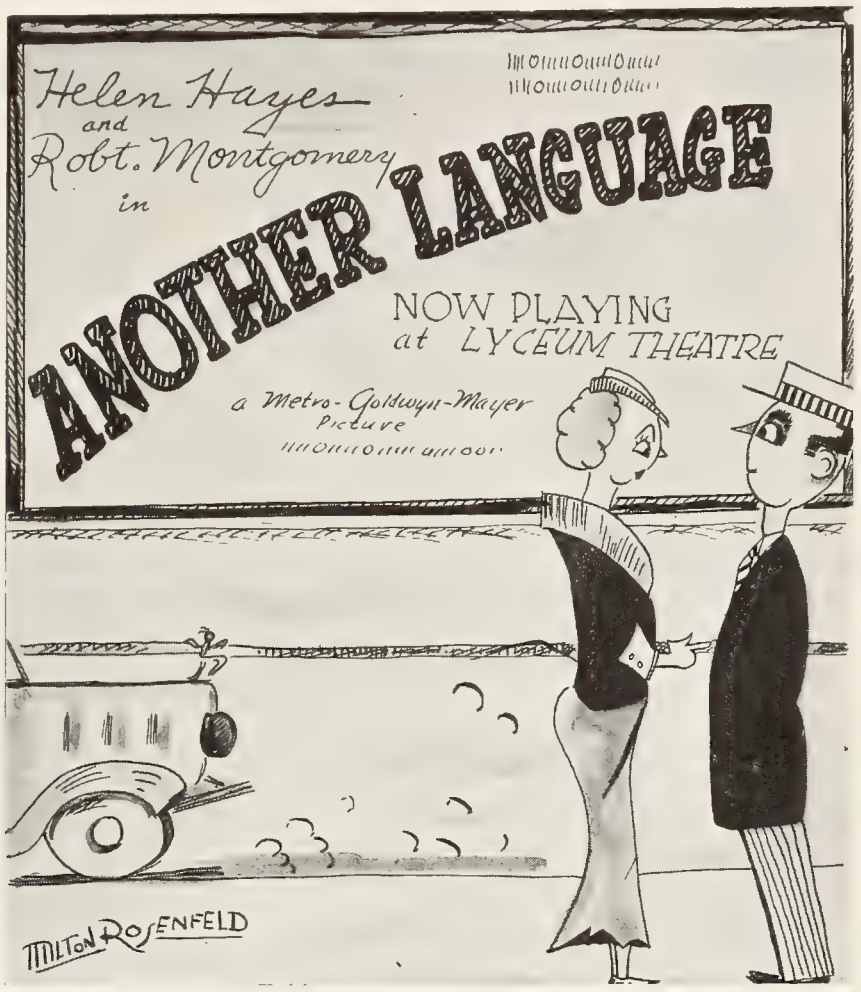
RARE BALLY

That exploitation thunderbolt let loose by George Browne and his Columbia ad crew is still the nine day wonder of today's showbusiness. Once in a great while the perfect bally clicks, a stunt that not only scores high for immediate results but becomes an almost automatic proceeding at other theatres playing the same attraction.

Such is the priceless gag, flawlessly planned and divinely executed on the New York advance campaign of "Lady for a Day." That it was sold to the newspapers strictly as movie publicity; that in spite of which, hard shelled editors went for it with an almost embarrassing flood of stories and pictures, and that the idea came straight out of the "lowly" press book, indicates the long delayed rebirth of big time ballyhoo, abetted by home office ad "doctors" who have learned their showmanship in the field.

A. Mike Vogel

SHOWMEN'S LOBBY LAFFS!



"I like Robert Montgomery well enough but what's the good if he doesn't talk English?"

Sensational Bally on "Lady For a Day"

That certainly was a marvelous break secured by Columbia Pictures for the New York opening of "Lady For a Day," as described in detail in last week's issue. And the beauty of the stunt is that it can be pulled in any part of the country, which it will be, if we are any judge.

New York newspaper city editors are notoriously hard boiled, but they all went for the press book gag of taking an apple woman off the streets and for 24 hours making her a "lady for a day." The fruit vendor was on the level, and she was allowed the same experiences of May Robson in the picture. The papers came in knowing in advance it was movie publicity, and that's the tip-off on how good it was.

The apple woman was housed in a class suite at the Waldorf and allowed to shop to her heart's content in the swanky stores, going from place to place in a gorgeous limousine (see photo). She met the Mayor, had dinner with Roxy, and mingled with celebrities, in short, had the time of her life for 24 hours.

The papers tore it wide open with two and three-column cuts and stories, as it richly deserved. It was a honey in all respects, and a deep bow to George Brown Lou Goldberg, Ben Atwell, Leo Friedmar and Arnold Van Leer who were concerned with its perfect execution. That originally the gag was suggested in the press book and actually worked out by practical showmen is a fact that will be appreciated by managers everywhere, including those who usually don't go for press book stunts.

Ad Test Breaks Editorial Page

Ed Hiehle reached into the press book on "I Love That Man" for the re-write newspaper ad contest he put over on the exploitation of that picture at the Midland Theatre, Newark, Ohio. For the benefit of the members who haven't used or read of it, the gag is to change any ad in the local daily to make the message more effective.

Ed reports that his paper not only went for the idea with big three-column free displays, but that these were placed on the editorial page, the first time that advertising of any kind, paid or otherwise, has ever been placed there.

In addition to other regular publicity, Hiehle effected another recommended press book tieup, and states that most of the click stuff came from the press book, which is gratifying news, and will be welcomed by Bob Gillham and the rest of that plugging Paramount home office ad crew.

Nothing Missing In "Missing" Campaign

A lot of smart showmen are going to hook right in with actual missing persons when the theatres play "Bureau of Missing Persons," and those fast moving Warner ad laddies have already done so on the date at the New York Strand.

Under the signature of Harry L. Charnas, general manager of the theatre, a letter has been sent to the head of the New York Missing Persons Bureau stating that $10,000 will be paid to Ex-Supreme Court Justice Joseph Crater whose mysterious disappearance three years ago was on the front page for many weeks. That is, the money will be paid if the Judge presents and identifies himself at the Strand during the opening week of the picture.

The offer is legitimate, as a photostat of the original check seems to indicate, but we'd like to be present if the missing jurist barges in to claim the dough. Anyhow, it's a slant, and variations of this gag will no doubt be planted on front pages and otherwise during local runs of the picture.

Charlie Einfeld's boys have stretched themselves to give the Strand a real exploitation selling lobby, as witness a regular police department teletype machine built into the front of the box office copy giving an actual police alarm description of a missing person.

Other stoppers are loud speaker radio—"calling all cars" overhead; a regular missing persons bureau information booth and a prop door with a regular doorknob and "Missing Persons Bureau" lettered on a glass panel is a gag that is fooling folks who believe the sign.

Regular police files are also on display with copy to the effect that these contain actual records of missing persons, a booth to take names of any actually missing persons, also a motion pictorial display with newspaper headlines of the prominent missing since 1910, and a cage of carrier pigeons under the marquee are some of the hot stuff these hustlers have put on display.

The ten grand Crater newspaper offer is also blown up for display, as is the original check. Teaser snipes, window cards, handbills, posters and splash newspaper ads are also included in the campaign. The Warnerites have missed few tricks, if any, in putting this over, and other members playing the picture will no doubt duplicate or adapt many of these sock box office ideas.

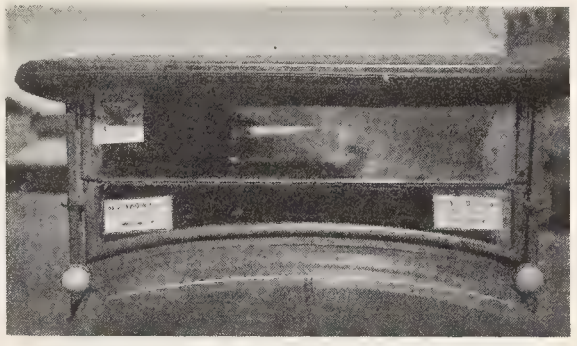
Moore Plugs A New Kind of Happy Year

The new year in Delta, Colo., starts in August, according to Manager Harry C. Moore of the Egyptian Theatre, who has just inaugurated a "Happy New Show Year" with a spiffy merchant and newspaper tieup in the form of a contest.

Readers were asked to read the ads on a special co-op page, each of which ads contained the cut of an unnamed star and a question that would identify the merchant paying for the space, but not mentioning the merchant's name. Merchandise prizes and free tickets were given to those turning in the correct lists, the first 25 receiving both prizes and tickets as that many merchants were in on the page. The theatre got streamer mention at top plugging the new show year, and also copped the bottom strip with an ad on the coming feature.

Harry further planted the "year" title on over 500 private cars, by receiving permission to paste stickers on the windshields (see photo) two weeks in advance of opening. Jumbo telegraph blanks were used as novelty heralds, in addition to jumbo window cards, and on the opening day colored lights were strung from the marquee across the street to effect a gala appearance.



Stickers on Windshield

Should be easy to put over, as each ad ran a little over two inches square, making the individual tap a soft one. This arrangement allowed for a calendar set up of the month of August. Where not enough can be rounded up, the paper can fill in the remainder of the spaces.

MAJOR BOWES IN PERSON!

This is the first time that advertising of any type has been permitted in the new line. Card advertises "Dinner At Eight," now playing at the Astor Theatre.

"It Really Happened"

by SONNY SHEPHERD
Mayfair, Miami, Fla.

Under the above heading, we expect to run a series on carefully prepared stunts that didn't go off, or for some reason or other turned out differently than they were planned. Most every manager knows, or has been the victim of one of these "duds," in the majority of cases winding up with a laugh that brother managers would appreciate. So send in those gags that "really happened" and we'll run them. Sonny Shepherd gives us a giggle with the following:

One of the sweetest gags that has ever been successfully put over and carefully planned but was turned into a fizzle by an innocent police reporter.

About 2 a. m. the police department received a phone call that a man had committed suicide in the Miami river and his hat, coat and a note was left on the bridge to prove the fact and at least 6 people swore that they saw him jump over the bridge. The police department was all upset, as that was some years ago when Miami had not grown into the city that it is now, and a hurried call was made to have boats search the vicinity of the bridge and down the river for the body. He left a note reading:

"Life is not worth living to me for it seems that I was just born reckless and this is the best way out. . . . I have no people; so good-bye, world.
"Louis Beretti."

The police reporter from the Miami Herald (Ben Robinson) was called immediately and the story was just about set to make the last edition of the morning paper as this dumb cluck in his effort to help the police solve the affair, gave away the whole works before he realized what he was doing.

It seems that the Capitol theatre had, a couple of nights before, screened "Born Reckless" with Edmund Lowe and the name of the principal character was Louis Beretti, and this was what the police reporter remembered, and said, "Why that looks like a gag, the Capitol theatre is playing a picture, 'Born Reckless,' and this man is the leading character."

Hal Kopplin was then manager of the Capitol and this was his stunt. (Hal is now in charge of advertising and the art department for all Wometco theatres.) The stunt was so carefully planned, even to having a man get a room at a boarding house and give the name of Louis Borotti and pay for his lodging and then disappear.

The Chief of Police got plenty sore for our trying to make fools of his department and wrote the Capitol a very hot letter and maybe we didn't give the newspaper man hell. He was very sorry and had he, at first, realized that it was a gag he would have steered clear and let it run.

I know other plans such as this that have gone amiss but I am writing this one for Hal Kopplin. It was not mine, but I know about it and was one of the chief mourners.

WARNER MANAGER IN HAVANA PUTS OVER CORKER ON "DIGGERS"

Little things like political upheavals hold no terror for Peter Colli at the El Canto Theatre in Havana, Cuba.

He had a very attractive front for "Gold Diggers" when it played his house and the natives went for it in a big way. The huge violin was illuminated by Leon lights and donated by the Neon representatives. A week previous to the opening six life-size figures of the girls were placed on the stage and spotlighted during the organ recital before each showing; needless to say, the song hits were played.

But the highlight of the whole campaign was the tie-up he effected with the Pan-American Airways enabling him to show the plane "Caribbean Clipper" arriving in Havana pretending to bring a box marked "Gold Diggers, Buenos Aires, Argentine, S. A." and handed to girls by the Captain as shown in the photo. He broke the papers with the announcement that he would assume full responsibility for "taking" the picture from the plane and holding it over for a special week's showing at the El Canto. Good work, Peter.

Cahill's Effective Exploitation Ideas

A "lucky number" gag that usually gets plenty of return free display advertising is the sales slip contest as put on in J. J. Cahill's "Jennie Gerhardt" campaign at the Brockton, Brockton (Mass.), in which the theatre gave 25 free admissions and other prizes, promoted, daily for three days to those holding store sales checks whose numbers corresponded with those posted in the lobby. In return, Cahill got mention in the store ads and in other store display.

A similar idea was used on a dairy tieup wherein every milk bottle carried a numbered hanger with theatre program, of which a number were good for free admissions. This also netted the theatre free advertising. Three sets of heralds were used on this picture, teaser, dated and memorandum, and distributed as magazine inserts and from house to house.

On "Melody Cruise," Cahill started a Kiddie Club by distributing cards dated for the six succeeding Saturdays, and the kids were told to have the cards punched at each of the next five shows to gain free admission to the last. In addition, the local barbers union cooperated to give free haircuts to needy children presenting tickets from the welfare committee, chairs being set up in the lobby, the towels and necessary supplies donated.

Among other effective ideas used by "J. J." for his Saturday shows were a pet dog show, prizes of $2.00 given for prettiest, fattest, ugliest dogs etc., and a doll carriage parade with prizes by cooperating merchants.

A bathing beauty contest for trips to New York and a lobby flower show sponsored by the women's clubs for cash and merchandise prizes given by merchants are other box office stunts successfully promoted by Cahill, all of which are practical and effective and show this member to be up on his toes in putting over campaigns.

Disney "Originals" In New Roxy Lobby

Monroe Greenthal reports for the first time since the opening of Radio City Music Hall, Roxy has given a store credit for a tie-up with the theatre in the lobby. This is in connection with the display of two of Walt Disney's original drawings from "Lullaby Land," a Silly Symphony now being shown at the Music Hall. There is a credit line calling attention to the fact that the remainder of the originals are on display at Gimbel's department store.

The store is devoting its best window, at Broadway and 33rd Street, New York City, to a display of nursery and children's merchandise, surrounding a blow-up of one of the "Lullaby Land" stills, and using the Disney drawings as key display pieces. Gimbel's is also running newspaper advertisements calling attention to the window. A reproduction of one of the original drawings and credits are also included in the advertisements. The "Lullaby Land" display is also being carried out in the store's children's department.

This will give you an idea of the speed of Earle Holden of the Georgia Theatre who hits his papers with a ten-inch single-column type ad, tying-in the NRA drive to theatre going. Space limitations obliged us to run the ad as above, but by clipping the two panels and adding the right to the bottom of left, you can get the idea. Swell institutional stuff, current and snappy.

THANKS, FRANCIS

Francis R. Deering, assistant manager at Loew's, Richmond (Va.), sends us clippings from his two leading papers which speak of the contest Honorable Mentions awarded to both Francis and Stuart Tucker, of the Byrd Theatre, also in Richmond.

We wonder how many of the other winners availed themselves of this opportunity to bring their awards to the attention of their city editors. It seems like a swell spot for some good publicity. Incidentally, we will appreciate clippings from other winners who have been able to plant similar stories in the local papers.

WATER CHAMP PLUGS FOR CARTLEDGE ON BIG "HUMOR" DRIVE

And now the showmen are hooking in the water stuff to plug their attractions, as witness the work of James C. Cartledge, who stirs things up at the Strand, Anderson (S. C.). Jim got hold of a stuntster who gives water exhibitions, and at a nearby lake before an audience of thousands had the "shark" advertise "College Humor" with the help of a special cheering section who "ray, ray-ed" the picture and theatre.

The reliable flivver bally was put on (note shot below) and was parked in front of the Strand when it wasn't doing its stuff.

"Humorous" Bally!

Lucky number heralds were inserted in all local papers with prize numbers posted every day, and a lot of other ace gags were put to work to help up the gross.

Then right after, Cartledge followed with another round of hot stuff to put over "Hold Your Man," using as an underline—"Our cooling plant will be more necessary than ever." He promoted a ten merchant co-op page, got out a special bus with mounted 24 sheets on each side to work the city and outlying districts, also used the lucky number newspaper distribution idea.

A large posting was done on both the above attractions, with extra accessories put out and larger newspaper space taken. Jim says he left nothing undone to insure the success of these two good shows. Which his labors clearly indicate.

KID CLUB MATINEE HELPS NIGHT SHOWS

The problem of keeping children away from the night shows is being solved by Francis Schlax, manager of the Vogue Theatre, Kenosha (Wis.), with his Kiddies' Club, attached to the showing of the serial, "Air Mail Mystery," on Saturday afternoons.

Francis gets out a special membership card, which with five cents admits the youngsters to the show. A blank line is left on the card preceded by the word "Pilot," and the kids are requested to print their names in this space. The numbered serial chapters, one to 12, are also printed on the card, and every member who attends the twelve weeks is allowed into the next show free.

The stunt went over strong enough to keep them coming in the summer when Schlax expected the attendance to drop, but the kids passed up their swimming to see the show. There are 950 youngsters registered who attend regularly and that's saying plenty for a capacity of 600 seats. The fact that admission is only a nickel brings the kids, and Francis says that it doesn't hurt his night shows one little bit..

DOUG GEORGE SELLS "INFLATION" SHORT TO LEADING LOCALS

Two hundred prominent business men of Springfield, Ohio, were invited to a special screening of the Metro short "Inflation," by Manager Douglas F. George, at the Regent Theatre, resulting in a co-op page ad stressing the picture and the advantages of immediate buying. Doug sent out a form letter of invitation in which he pointed out the moral necessity of attendance, quoting from endorsements made by other prominent who had seen the picture.

When the local high school band lacked funds to cover travelling expenses to the World's Fair, George stepped into the breach with a benefit whereby thousands of tickets were issued, sold by the students, P. T. A., and other organizations. School principals urged students to help dispose of the tickets, and the band presented a concert on the stage, all of which piled up a tremendous good will plug.

A radio audition tieup in which local talent was sent to Cincinnati to be auditioned by a leading station there was the feature of Doug's "Radio Opportunity Contest." The stunt was carried over for five weeks, with participants broadcasting from a stage soundproof studio into the audience. Local newspapers participated.

Some effective work by George.

TRAINED DOGS AND CELLOPHANED GIRLS ACE BALLY STUNTS

Girl ushers in cellophane costumes (photo below) and trained dogs carrying advertising cards were two of the smart stunts used by Jay Wooten, at the Dodge Theatre,

Cellophane Dresses

Dodge City, Kan., in his campaign on "International House," to put across one of the season's greatest successes.

In addition to the theatre showing, cellophane was also plugged as a dress material on a special radio "ladies' hour" in which the picture and theatre were frequently mentioned, and other air features included recordings of music and entertainment of stars in the picture, after which the station would announce their appearance in the feature.

A two-column free front page art layout of the stars was donated by the local paper, a location that cannot be bought at any price, according to Jay, and this rare occurrence brought plenty of box office comment.

Wooten took advantage of every publicity possibility presented by the unusual gathering of stage and radio names in one picture, and that he capitalized this opportunity is proven by the gross he rolled up, claimed to be among the year's highest.

"ARE REVIEWERS UNFAIR?"

"Yes," Says Southern Exhibitor Criticizing System That He Claims Keeps Many Away from Box Office

by EARLE M. HOLDEN

Georgia Theatre
Atlanta, Ga.

I have before me, as this is being written, three reviews on the motion picture "Captured," clipped from three different papers. Review number one gives the picture a fair send-off, review number two praises the picture to the skies and review number three tears it to pieces in such a manner that a reader would have no desire to see the picture. In other words, the newspaperman who wrote review number three has been allowed by his paper to place a boycott against my theatre. Is this fair?

But we will discuss that later on.

I explained above that these articles were reviews. But were they? The three articles referred to above were not reviews, but were personal opinions the writers handed down to the readers. But handed down in such a manner that the unsuspecting reader would not consider the personal view angle. All of which leads to this question: What right has any reporter to tell a person that he or she will not like a picture, thus keeping the reader away from your box office?

All over the country motion picture editors of papers and magazines are taking every advantage they can of a picture that is weak or poor. And regardless of how much harm they might do to the theatre that is compelled to pay high advertising rates, they shout to the skies how bad the picture is. They tear the story to pieces, they crucify the director.

What does a reviewer in Squeedunk know about making pictures in Hollywood, or any other place? If reviewers get so far into the world that they believe their influence on the public cannot be done away with, then why don't they go out to Hollywood and make pictures?

The Motion Picture Herald on numerous occasions has told you that a stand must be taken against high advertising rates. And I truly believe that the matter of high advertising rates is not half as important as the action that must be started and must be taken against motion picture reviewers.

Doesn't Believe in Reviews

Personally I never believed in reviews, be they good or bad, because they express only one person's opinion and no one man has the right to pass this opinion on to motion picture patrons, having them believe in advance they are not going to enjoy the show.

Would newspapers dare to review the products offered for sale through their advertising columns. If Mr. Henry Ford ran a full-page ad calling attention to his new car, would the city editor send a reporter to ride in one of those cars, and if he found a few squeaks or did not like the paint job, would the reporter return to the office and "pan" the car? He would not. The paper wouldn't dare to do a thing of that kind for fear that Mr. Ford might not advertise any more and he would have grounds for not doing so.

Unless theatre men come together and start some plan of a better reviewing system, thousands of dollars are going to be lost to the box offices of theatres. And yet I can tell of instances where even today many theatre managers in addition to paying high advertising rates, give papers plenty of passes each week for publicity space.

I have seen instances in different localities where the newspapers had the theatres throttled just as bad as unions. Of course, these situations are few and far between. Now with the help of good independent men who are taking over some of the chain operations some of these strongholds have been captured. In other words, where managers were not permitted to make complaints and stand for their own rights and the rights of the business they operated, they are now permitted to do so, because the men higher up over them are with them in their fight, be it newspaper or union battles.

Fan Reviews

Fan magazine writers, too, in my opinion, have seemed to follow in the footsteps of some of these newspapermen. Fan reviews have turned out to be very unfair. The average movie fan today can tell you in advance more about a coming attraction than you know yourself. But instead of the fan mag reviewers telling the reader the story of the picture, they have to add their own personal opinion which in many instances keeps the reader away from the theatre. This angle of poor reviewing is something for the producers to look after. They pay for full-page ads in the fan magazines, and if they stand by and see their product boycotted, then that is their loss and also the loss of the theatre.

The country faces a new era. Now is the time for the men who operate theatres to cooperate with each other more than ever before. To get results there must be cooperation and there must be an attitude of fair play on all sides. It is high time that the theatre manager came into his own as a theatre manager and to stand his own ground against oppression that he meets on all sides—yes, even from those he helps to support.

HOLLYWOOD PREMIERE CLICKS WITH LYMAN FOR GOOD RETURNS

On the assumption that a Hollywood opening will draw as well in Iowa as in California, Manager Chet Lyman of the Valley Theatre, Missouri Valley, Iowa, on "Mary Stevens, M. D." trotted out all the "props" and put on a premiere that was as you will note in the shot below.

Outstanding was the stunt of having prominent locals impersonate the leading stars and other Hollywood celebrities, and as these drove up to the theatre, they were announced in the best picture fashion. Chet planted bunch and flood lights along the curb that illuminated the street in big city style. A tieup with a Hollywood cosmetic manufacturer resulted in a out of the ordinary window display at a prominent drug store, which plugged Lyman's premiere and the stars of the picture who endorsed the makeup.

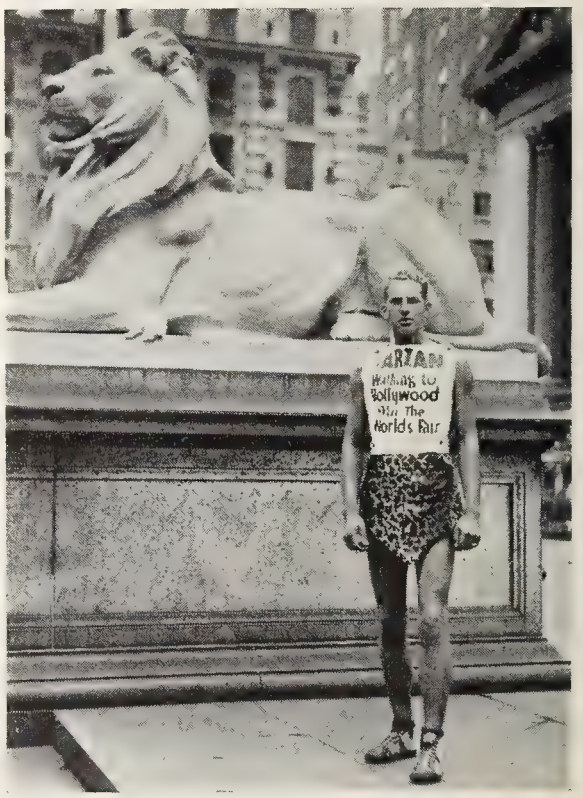
TARZAN DEFIES LEO?



Sleepless Morris Kinzler, who startles the folks going by the Roxy Theatre, New York, blew the boiler head on his "Tarzan" campaign, with his stunt of penetrating swank Fifth Avenue with a street bally as above. We don't know whether the determined young man is defying Leo behind him, or really intends hiking West. Nevertheless, Kinzler rates a bow for being among the first to crack the Avenoo.

SHOWMEN CRACKING HIGH WITH "GOLD DIGGERS" CAMPAIGNS

CHARLES R. KATZ, Mgr.
Warner, Parkersburg, W. Va.

Highlights featured production idea with colortone effect on "Shadow Waltz" sequence with house in total darkness; lobby front of oil painted beaver board covering entire centre of entrance covered with stills, with title on panel running width of front, and 14 by 36's on side strips, all in a gold effect that drew crowds.

Department store music tieup netted free display advance ads, windows, and girls playing hit numbers; every road into town posted for 15 miles; haberdashery and five and ten stores went for displays and tieups on star bathing suits and fan magazine stories. Katz says he received over 300 inches of free newspaper space against half this amount in paid advertising.

A. J. SONOSKY, City Mgr.
Capitol, Aberdeen, S. D.

In spite of local ordinance against midnight shows, received permission from mayor in a letter saying privilege was granted for Sonosky's cooperation in all civic projects. Six-sheet was pasted on floor of lobby, stopping every one coming into theatre. Classified tieup got over 300 inches of free space in a "chuckle ad" contest.

Used mat to make up special co-op herald, space on back sold paying for entire cost.

Window Card at Golf Club!

Seven dance bands in and out of town plugged song hits, music stores did likewise, and a restaurant lucky number tieup was effected in which patrons signed their names and phone numbers to checks, winners receiving passes.

Empty store windows were decorated, ushers distributed cards, copy of which had the ushers plugging the picture, back of card sold to pay cost. Ritzy golf club allowed window cards on all tee boxes (see cut above) and in clubhouse, passes given for daily low golf scores, civic clubs attended show in a body, and all commerce chamber secretaries in 50-mile radius were invited to show.

LOUIS LAMM, Mgr.
Capitol, Elyria, Ohio

Ballyhoo float with girl band, wearing "digger" hats and ribbons (see photo). Special "diggers" merchant ad newspaper section; Miss "Gold Digger" Doll given away at dance hall; sound truck toured surrounding country; chuckle ad contest on classified tieup.

5,000 tabloid heralds distributed house to house; many star and picture windows, restaurants and drug stores plugged special sundaes and dishes; tire covers on all taxis, cards in busses, stickers on private autos, music plugs and effective lobby display helped Louis to score big.

Lamm's Sound Truck!

HARRY F. BODIE, Mgr.
Sixth Street, Coshocton, Ohio

Newspaper cuts of "Diggers" girls in every ad two days before opening, first time this has been put over locally. Power company window on main street plugged big display, never before given to theatre advertising Sound truck with girl cutouts, all painted in gold coloring in town and outside territory.

Tabloids distributed house to house on every rural route, and in nearby towns; music plugged by stores and dance bands, and large cutout in leading dance hall. Many window displays of cutouts and stills; special front, and other snappy ideas were put over by Bodie on this campaign.

The above advertising and publicity broadsides indicate the high power of the showmen who have sent in campaigns on this picture. Abe Sonosky's work deserves an extra bow, for not only did he put over a raft of swell stuff, but his obtaining permission to break a city ordinance with a midnight opening shows a determination that should be gratifying to his superiors. Charley Katz, Harry Bodie and Louis Lamm displayed plenty of speed and power and, all in all, there wasn't a box office angle that these hustlers neglected.

Lobby Flash!

Ted Silver, manager of the Dickinson Theatre, in Lawrence, Kansas, made good use of his accessory streamer and cut-out girl hangers on "Moonlight and Pretzels" when he sat the girls in lounging attitudes along the streamer which was stretched across his lobby. It created a lot of attention and made a very attractive display.

HELSON GETS GOOD RESULTS FROM HIS "AMATEUR NIGHTS"

Every other Saturday is "Amateur Night" at Alger's Capitol Theatre, Morrison, Ill., where Manager R. S. Helson stages these non-professional entertainments to big returns.

"R. S." says he has staged 12 contests, so far, in each of which seven acts appear. Then every fourth "night" the winners in the preliminaries compete for the grand prizes, after which the gag is discontinued for a while and then started again fresh.

Talent is gathered from the country districts as well as the city; schools as well as neighborhood parties are scouted for acts, and each entertainer usually brings his own crowd to applaud him. Thus, at very little extra cost, Helson draws capacity houses, and recommends it to other members seeking a different money angle.

On alternate Saturday nights, this hustling manager stages a "Crazy Auction," in which prizes donated by merchants are auctioned off at any price, and in turn the money received is again auctioned. On "Cabin in the Cotton" Helson distributed small envelopes filled with raw cotton, and usually peps up his bookings with stunts that attract plenty of notice.

This is a swell report from a new member, and we anticipate receiving another good batch from Morrison.

PRESS BOOK IDEAS FORM BASIS OF BIG PREMIER CAMPAIGN

The "twins" press book stunt, in which twins and doubles were admitted free, was put over effectively as one of the click gags on the premiere showing of "The Masquerader" at the Strand, Atlantic City, N. J., under the supervision of George Weilland and Mortimer Lewis, owners.

The two leading papers, morning and evening, went for the classified ad idea with big daily space, and a radio lucky number contest with prizes of Ronald Coleman etchings also netted plenty, as did the special Coleman masks given to newsboys who wore them in a parade to the theatre, and also at their various posts.

The movie edition was plugged with a special compo board display in the book department of a prominent department store, and branch libraries used bookmarks to inform readers that the story headed the list of recommended volumes. The press book six column wood cut mat was planted as a Sunday feature, besides other art and special stories.

Managers will notice that most of the above stunts are taken from the press book, and proved workable in the field. Which is true more times than not in United Artist exploitation.

CAN WE BE OF SERVICE?

During the past few years out-of-town showmen visiting the city have made Club headquarters their New York address. Mail can be directed here, and will be held or forwarded according to instructions.

We can also arrange your hotel accommodations at special rates through several representative hotels; secure privileges for inspecting the large Broadway movie theatres; help you with your business matters; in fact, we want you to know that the entire organization is at the disposal of visiting members.

Drop us a line and let us know when you are coming, and remember that the latch-string is hanging on the outside at 1790 Broadway.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1933, unless otherwise specified.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

Vol. 112, No. 13 — September 23, 1933

JUST A TRY

THIS afternoon of September's third week it is exceedingly obvious that the motion picture industry is in its greatest turmoil since the hectic days of 1909 when it became aware that a Motion Picture Patents Company had been formed to lay discipline and tribute upon the business. The motion picture survived and flourished.

Now the motion picture having grown great is in impact on, not to say collision with, the political and economic program of an administration pledged and selected to try to save the nation.

The currently advertised path of national salvation is the NRA with its hovering blue bird It is admittedly, admitted by its authors, a path of adventure. That is true for all industry and for a whole people of a big nation.

Describing and dealing with the mysteries of earth and its people one William Hayden Carruth, a Kansas poet, once wrote, "some call it evolution and some call it God." The social and economic structure with which things are now in the process of being done or attempted is a product of evolution. Endeavors to influence evolution or to "play God" are fraught with considerable responsibility, or should be. Efforts in the past have produced ripples on the tide, but turned no tides. A glance from Alexander-the-Great to Napoleon to Stalin shows that.

Nothing basic has been changed in the structure and the manner of conduct of commerce, for more than brief moments, in several thousand years that we know about. Buying and selling, the might of demand and the might of supply, function just as automatically as gravity.

Just now the great inevitable is somewhat obscured by the fuss and dust of a situation in which every faction of special interest seeks to make capital of what looks like an opportunity, in our own industry among others. They all cannot win, and furthermore not one will.

The net result, soon to be observable, will be that motion pictures will be made by the same persons, sold by the same persons and consumed by the same people, and on very much the same terms

No one can today point to what cured past depressions of which we periodically have had several. Mostly the recoveries have come in spite of the remedies and so will recovery again. We are feeling better now.

TAXES AND MORE TAXES

WHAT with the NRA program and sundry and vast relief employment schemes and projects under way at great cost to all governments, municipal, state and federal, only slight powers of prophesy are required to see heavy taxation ahead and with it taxation problems aplenty for the motion picture industry, with its repute for riches and the ready, convenient allure of the box office always under the eye of the tax makers.

So special interest and importance attaches to the interesting suggestion from Mr. Mark Graves, president of the New York State Tax Commission, speaking before a convention of the state's real estate boards this week, for a unified tax program of national scope and application. Mr. Graves advocates, now, "a federal sales tax shared with the states, a federal gasoline tax of four cents, of which 75 per cent is shared with the states, accompanied by the allowance of reasonable credits against federal personal and corporate income taxes on account of such taxes paid to the states." He sees real estate overburdened and many an injustice and inequality by reason of differing state tax programs.

With the states in tax competition with each other and with the federal government, the citizen and the industrialist are at the mercy of a cross fire. And what may occur is startlingly pictured in an article in this issue concerning the box office taxes in Ohio.

CIRCUSING RELIGION

THE presentation of such figures as Mr. David Hutton and Mrs. Aimee Semple McPherson on the stage of theatres identified as pertaining to the motion picture will be found to confer little kudos on the screen institution. As products of that strange culture which has arisen in the community of Los Angeles with its weird potpourri of religious manifestations these persons may have an interest, but their public exhibition, with its attendant tabloid publicity, brings the aroma of the dime museum and an order of showmanship not very closely attuned to the commonly held American notion that the circusing of religions is, to state it mildly, in decidedly bad taste. It is bad taste in a dangerous area.

Meanwhile, and on the other hand, one might say, there's Sally Rand, the Chicago nymph with one idea and no costume, also booked to the uplift of the cinema in Broadway, adding to her pearly lustre by reporting to the Chicago police, and through them to the Associated Press, with a black eye, acquired in a payroll argument with a night club manager. The manager, for his part, displayed to the police a lacerated arm, considerably bitten, he said, by the same Miss Rand.

The moral would appear to be that when the normal flow of events in Hollywood does not supply high tension scandals, the resourceful show machine buys them ready made on the outside.

SOMETHING like eighteen years ago, when we and the industry were somewhat younger, there was talk in Washington about a national censorship. Canon William Sheafe Chase, who was talking of it then, brought the subject up again last week. Which reminds us, once again, that a lot of our troubles never happened.

THIS WEEK - - - -

ENCOURAGING NEWS

Hopeful, encouraging is the news which comes this week from the Pacific Northwest, where theatres are sharing with retail business of all descriptions a marked upturn, admissions reported increased 10 per cent in two weeks, at least 10 theatres reopened in the territory within the past month. Significant is the information when is considered the situation there one year ago, with box office business falling off, 10 to 15 theatres closed. Decidedly tending upward also was business last week in Boston, Philadelphia, other cities. . . .

PERENNIAL CHARGE

Sharp, sudden was the halt called this week to the buying combine activity of Mid-States Theatres in Detroit, as suits charging seemingly perennial conspiracy, to prevent them from buying film were filed by Lew Kane, Al Rutenberg, operating the Mayfair, Iris theatres, respectively. From circuit court came a temporary injunction, restraining exchanges from selling, Mid-States from buying, pending action on October 3. Deputy NRA Administrator Rosenblatt knows about it. . . .

LEGITIMATE PROBLEM

Perennially a problem of the legitimate theatre is the why, wherefore and how of ticket speculation and the agency. Long have reforms been tried—and failed—in correcting the abuse with the public as victim. Now, with the opportunity afforded by the NRA and the power which is its codes, comes a possibility of once and for all righting a wrong situation. Leading the effort to straighten the tangle is Producer Brock Pemberton, heading a subcommittee of the National Committee of the Legitimate Theatre. Aptly Mr. Pemberton sums the situation: "For the first time the public gets a real break." . . .

SOUND REPRODUCTION

To the farflung corners of one of New York's armories, located in the Borough of the Bronx, will next week flash every last tone and shade of orchestral gradation as musicians, singers, fling the accompaniment to the gigantic "The Romance of a People," a pageant depicting the wanderings and vicissitudes of the Jews. Accidentally was discovered the value of the so-called "binaural" sound projecting system, installed by T. F. Bludworth, developed by him. Involved is virtually a double hookup of microphones, amplifiers, loud speakers.

EXHIBITOR HARMONY

To promote harmony in code discussions, protect exhibitor interests in arbitration, zoning matters, was formed last week in Cincinnati the new Ohio Valley Independent Exhibitors' League, thus replacing the Ohio Allied unit, the Greater Cincinnati Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, the former discontinued, the latter still active. From Ohio, Kentucky, West Virginia will showmen be eligible for membership. Lack of financial support caused Ohio Allied's suspension, report indicates. . . .

UNKNOWN PLAYERS

Ever prolific of idea is Jesse L. Lasky, pioneer and at the moment independent producer via Fox. Unusual is his latest, an experiment to prove "an interesting and entertaining picture can be a box office success regardless of star names." With a well-known writer, an established director will Producer Lasky make a film, having a cast of completely unknown players. Perhaps a "disastrous failure," Mr. Lasky will nevertheless not "fool anyone by creating fictitious standards, exaggerating . . . players . . . unproved." . . .

DISRAELI'S RETURN

Not lacking in smart showmanship is the novel idea of the Brothers Warner: to rerelease George Arliss' "Disraeli," December 10, not as a reissue, but as though it were a new picture. On the fact that "Disraeli," when first shown (1929), found few houses wired for sound, poor equipment, lack of appreciation of "class" pictures, Warner bases its maneuvre, hopes to spring a trade surprise. . . .

ANTI-CLIMAX

Anti-climactic for the select audience which attended the New School for Social Research in downtown New York on Monday evening was the motion picture, "Thunder Over Mexico," produced by Sergei Eisenstein, and shown in preview by Sol Lesser who prepared it, and Arthur Mayer, who will exhibit it at his Rialto on Broadway. Much more exciting was the forcible, hurried ejection, prior to the film, of Lincoln Kirstein, who had asked a question of a speaker—and got no further. Upton Sinclair had financed Mr. Eisenstein's 14 months in Mexico, and Mr. Kirstein, who edits a magazine, complained bitterly, via a distributed pamphlet, of the manner in which Mr. Sinclair had had the noted director's work scissored. . . .

STAGE'S LOSS

One eye on heaven, the other on the box office, was the sage advice of Alfred Sutro, long a leading playwright of England, coupled with the admonition "never be dull." Last week at his London home, 70-year-old Playwright Sutro died, brief illness climaxing years of activity in and about journalism and the theatre. Feeling that no real actor would be satisfied with the screen, he was a firm believer in the superiority of the legitimate stage over the screen. . . . From America's stage was last week taken Martin Herman, 61, brother of and general manager for A. H. Woods, noted producer. . . .

SKY THEATRES

Yet may sky-shooting passengers, traveling the T. W. A. Lines across the country, be entertained with the latest in sound and talking motion pictures. In the hands of J. H. Harper, producer of a cartoon series, "Sunny Side of Life," lies the experiment in broadcasting film sound tracks from Newark landing field via short wave to ships aflight. With silent apparatus used in the planes' cabins, will be synchronized sound and music broadcast from the field. Thus would be avoided the necessity of carrying heavy sound equipment. . . .

ALTAR VIA AIR

To the altar via fast plane on Monday of this week flew Hollywood's "platinum blonde," Jean Harlow, who leaped to stardom when Howard Hughes selected her for the leading feminine role in "Hell's Angels," and who set a style in headdress the repercussion of which had benefited many a saddened beauty parlor, hairdresser. This husband, her third, is Harold G. Rosson, 38-year-old cameraman. From the first she was separated by divorce; from the second, Paul Bern, by mysterious suicide more than a year ago. . . .

ROOSEVELT STEPS IN WHILE INDUSTRY TRIES AGAIN TO WRITE CODE

By TERRY RAMSAYE

After some six weeks of differings and debates in two sessions and two cities, the motion picture industry, in quest of an NRA code, unable to agree with itself and brought sharply up against White House opinion, is going back to Washington this week-end to try again—with forebodings of crisis.

August 8—Seeking a code under the Blue Eagle, the motion picture industry went into conclave, speech making and conferences, with Sol A. Rosenblatt, deputy administrator, presiding, at the Bar Association Building in New York. Two codes, a buyer code and a seller code, and sundry lesser codes, resulted.

September 12—Seeking an accord, Mr. Rosenblatt called to order a public hearing for "witnesses" on all sides of the warring codes, in Washington at the United States Chamber of Commerce. There was conclave, speech making conference. The divergences, the differences, were greater than ever.

Then, Mr. Rosenblatt went to the White House and had a talk with Franklin Delano Roosevelt, President of the United States. Whether or not prior to that he had conference with General Hugh Johnson, administrator of the National Recovery Administration, is neither recorded nor important.

The important fact appears to be that President Roosevelt was primarily, directly, interested.

In one fashion or another it has, despite all safeguards, become known, or at least undisputed report has achieved circulation, that President Roosevelt has been an acute observer of the motion picture scene and that he has arrived at some definite conclusions concerning the industry and its operations. Among them are the opinions that:

There is or should be an inviolate right to buy.

That the small business man (whether exhibitor or producer) must operate under conditions which permit him to survive.

That "excessive" motion picture salaries must be reduced for the common good.

That agents in general represent a parasitic development related to the excessive salary evil and must be eliminated.

That various motion picture abuses are malodorous.

And, incidentally, that such details of practice as double billing are not matters of the public and governmental concern.

In view of all this it may be not significant, but interesting, that nothing has come through indicating that the President is exercised concerning provisions or controls pertaining to the moral character of the offerings of the screen.

Not long after this contact between President Roosevelt and Mr. Rosenblatt there was a swift exodus from Washington of the industry leaders who had gathered there in conference, more especially of the representatives of the large production-distribution concerns.

The official story was that they had returned to New York for final authority to sign the code. The fact was that they had come back to home base to go into company counsels, with presidents, with boards of directors, with banks and with receivers and with trustees, to convey the tidings that a state of mind in the administration confronted the industry, as organized, with a revolutionary condition based on the issue of "the right to buy."

All of the current week in New York has been taken up with conferences, large and small, about the next step and some steps thereafter. The entire structure of the production-distribution machinery of the industry has been built up and evolved on a basis which now appears to be on the verge of an externally applied revolution.

By a rather automatic process of crystallization the issues appear to be jelling around the utterances and judgments of Sidney R. Kent, president of Fox Film Corporation, last to speak at the Washington hearing and the accepted spokesman for the major concerns.

In Washington Mr. Kent, with an adherence to the prescribed rules of evidence at the hearing made remarkable by contrast with the meanderings of many other speakers, made it his fundamental assumption that the industry would be judged and dealt with chiefly from the standpoint of its relations with labor and employment, the avowed purposes of the NRA program. He made point of the fact that the producers had reduced working hours to 36 a week, with pay held at the forty-hour rate, and that this, being open to all crafts in the studios, would mean an increased cost for labor of 14¼ percent, or dollar figures of from $2,700,000 to $3,000,000 a year.

But now, as develops, the NRA program takes in a deal of things that are much more remote to the subject of employment, re-employment and wages. The whole question of the conduct of the motion picture industry is on trial and subject, for the while, for the duration of the National Recovery Act, to governmental amendment and supervision. It appears that the principal producers and distributors may find themselves appealing to the Administration for conditions which they consider necessary for continued operation.

PRESIDENT HAS DECIDED OPINIONS

Much interesting speculation has been inspired by the expression of concern from the White House. A new aspect of the publicity phase of motion picture operation is presented. It is made clear that the President of the United States has decided opinions concerning the film industry, and it is reasonably certain that these opinions were not arrived at by a recent reading of the papers. It may be pointed out that ever since he was assistant secretary of the navy, Mr. Roosevelt has known about newsreels. He loaned the newsreels a destroyer to bring back the pictures of the flight of the NC planes from the Azores as a bit of navy publicity so long ago as the last Wilson administration. He has chosen for his secretarial staff two men amply acquainted with motion picture affairs, Colonel Marvin McIntyre, who so long represented Pathe in Washington, and Stephen Early, who functioned in the same capacity for Paramount News. Also more recently, Mr. Roosevelt has been about not a little in the world of publication and the radio and has a large fan mail. It would seem probable that the President's opinions and judgments concerning the screen, now so important to the code under which it is expected to operate, have been formulated from such sources rather than the recitation of "witnesses" at the code hearings.

FINAL CONFERENCES START SATURDAY

Saturday, which is September 23, the representatives of the motion picture and Mr. Rosenblatt meet again in Washington, for the final conferences, — no more public hearings — aimed at the forming of a code. When these conferences will end, or in what manner is not to be forecast. That there will be a code is certain. That the motion picture's dominant corporations will accept it without resort to every legal and extra-legal resource is far from certain.

The issues of 1909, the differences between "independent" and licensee, between producer-distributor and the exhibitor, are as alive today as then. The lion and the lamb may be brought to peace in the parable, but the buyer and the seller can not agree on rules for each other, even to please the Blue Eagle.

SCENE OF DRAFTING SHIFTS TO NEW YORK

by FRANCIS L. BURT
Washington Correspondent

With committees representing all branches of the industry back in New York for the purpose of redrafting labor and trade practice provisions of codes still in controversy, little was possible in Washington this week to further the consideration of a motion picture NRA agreement.

The producer-distributor and exhibitor groups will return to the Capital on September 23 to lay before Deputy Administrator Rosenblatt the results of their week's effort. Representations that the Jewish holiday might tend to lessen attendance at code hearings this week influenced Mr. Rosenblatt to postpone the resumption of the code hearing from Thursday to Saturday. Mr. Rosenblatt went to New York late Wednesday and will return to Washington Friday evening.

While the major groups of the industry were seeking to compose their differences in New York, the deputy administrator was compiling a list of subjects on which action would be demanded. Prominent in this list were the following:

The open-shop provision of the exhibitors' code will be deleted on the basis of the voluntary elimination of such provisions from the producers-distributors' code and President Roosevelt's elimination of similar sections from the coal code before signing it on September 18.

Excessive clearances must be dealt with and proper bodies set up to adjust complaints on clearance and zoning.

Provisions dealing with agents must be rewritten to eliminate abuses which are charged to have arisen.

The elimination clause and the forcing of shorts must be satisfactorily adjusted.

Arbitration must be optional rather than compulsory.

Besides these, various industry factions were still at issue over the vital question of the right to buy motion pictures in the open market. In reply to pleas of independent exhibitors, voiced at the final sessions of last week's public hearing at Washington, leaders of distributor and producer groups argued that producers who owned theatres should have priority, for economic reasons.

Also, double billing, "star raiding" by producers, block booking, cancellations of product by exhibitors, score charges, activities of a proposed code enforcement body, and other points are still to be settled.

These questions, it is stressed, are in addition to numerous other controversial phases of the code, and which were called to the deputy administrator's attention during the week by delegations with whom he has been conferring privately at Washington.

It is not expected that the exhibitors will interpose any objections to the elimination of the open-shop provision. This provision, in other codes, has been a subject of heated controversy, both between employers and labor and within the National Recovery Administration itself. The action of the President in deleting the provision from the coal code has been accepted by the administration as a precedent to be followed. During the hearings last week, the producers and distributors announced the voluntary elimination of the provision in their code and it was ruled at that time by Mr. Rosenblatt that the question was not debatable.

Administrator Hopes to Solve Clearance Problems Right Away

The question of excessive protection is prominent in a number of localities. Expressing the hope that the clearance and zoning problem may be satisfactorily disposed of before the buying season begins, Mr. Rosenblatt has declared flatly that this must be settled in the code. Provision must be made for hearing appeal by exhibitors who feel themselves discriminated against and they must be given machinery whereby they can appeal from a decision of a clearance and zoning board to the code control committee.

Complaints filed with the administration by producers indicate that there are a number of abuses, some tantamount to rackets, in the operations of agents in Hollywood. Provision

FLAT TAX FOR RECORDING MUSIC PROPOSED UNDER NEW CONTRACT

Rates Classified According to Visual and Vocal Use, Visual and Instrumental, and for Background of Picture

Taxes for recording rights to music used in motion pictures are to be paid on the basis of a flat sum for each of three types of music—under a new form of contract submitted to producers by the Music Publishers Protective Association. The old seat tax method is a thing of the past. This situation has nothing to do with the theatre seat tax paid by exhibitors to the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, for reproduction privileges. The new arrangement with the music publishers does, however, represent a definite swinging away from a tax collection method which in many instances has created disagreements.

Two months ago the MPPA submitted a new contract form to the producers, calling, in addition to a change in the methods of payments, for many other new regulations, among them the granting of rights to the producers to make use of the music of publishers in the synchronized versions of their pictures throughout the world, something which heretofore has been impossible because of the many difficulties encountered by the MPPA in the laws of foreign countries, all of which have been surmounted, however, by Electrical Research Products, Inc.

Clearance Bureau Proposed

Highlights of the new contract, which the producers have not yet either approved or disapproved, were made known this week by John Gregg Paine, association president.

Another important provision of the contract calls for establishment of a bureau, world wide in scope and functions, which would take care of music clearance everywhere, with branches in Hollywood, Sydney or Melbourne, Australia, and in London and Paris. Until the German motion picture situation straightens out there can and will be no representation in that country, Mr. Paine said last week.

The contract also sets forth prices for each use of music, based on the cost of production, with the understanding that regardless of the number of uses in any one feature picture the production cost of that picture cannot exceed a certain amount. This particular clause would mean that, based on average negative costs, the producer can have the right of reproduction of music in any form for a flat sum for each piece of music used. On the other hand, if the producer exceeds the stipulated negative cost his music tax will be proportionately greater. Also attached to this clause is a stipulation that in consideration of the publishers agreeing to fix a maximum tax on music for each type of picture produced, that is, features, shorts, travel subjects and newsreels, the producers are asked to agree to the payment of a minimum sum for each type of picture, or to undertake to make at least a minimum use of music in each classification of music available from the association's catalogues.

These three clauses are considered the most important phases of any contract, revised or otherwise, which ultimately may be accepted by both parties.

Since the participation of Erpi as an intermediary for the payment of royalties and general negotiations between music and motion picture interests—an arrangement which had its inception in 1928—came to an end in September of last year, the business between the two groups has been carried on under an interim agreement and since that time a flat sum has been charged for recording rights. Mr. Paine at all times since then has represented the publishers and during the past year has been responsible for the issuance of licenses to the producers for music recording rights.

The rates for these rights during the past year have been as follows:

For the visual and vocal use of a piece of music.....$150
Visual and instrumental use.....$100
Background use .....$ 50

Last week Mr. Paine intimated that these rates are closely approximated in the new submitted contract form.

The interim agreement, however, came to an end August 15, and since that time licenses have been granted through Mr. Paine at whatever prices the publishers have asked.

At the present moment all activities pertaining to the acceptance or rejection of the proposed contract by the producers must, of necessity, remain at a standstill. Since the end of July production executives have been working night and day toward consummation of a code for the industry under the National Recovery Administration. In the meantime they have appointed Major Edward Bowes to act as official "go-between" in all music matters. Since Major Bowes also is busily engaged in NRA activities, it appears that little will be done until the producers, at least, have settled their affairs at Washington and the motion picture house is in order. Then, it is expected, organized representation of producers, under Major Bowes, will be effected.

$825,000 Settlement Reached

At the time when Erpi relinquished its position as agent for the producers with the music publishers there were still many unsettled controversies to be dealt with. These Erpi successfully has settled in the past year, in addition to being called in from time to time by the producers to help adjust matters pending before the electrical company's withdrawal from the scene.

Among the matters on which adjustments were pending was a suit instituted by the publishers against Erpi for collection of taxes on producers using non-Erpi equipment. Mr. Paine and Donald Pratt, then head of the Erpi music department, after weeks of arbitration of the original claim of $1,800,000, agreed that Erpi and its licensees should pay the sum of $825,000 on a pro rata basis among the licensees.

In addition to the royalties which were demanded by the publishers on other than Erpi equipment, there were questions involving the termination of payments then provided for in a continuing clause in the original five-year agreement between the publishers, Erpi and the producers. This continuing clause called for continued payments during the sixth year for the right to release films which contained copyrighted music recorded prior to the conclusion of the five-year agreement Sept. 4, 1932.

The sum of $825,000, mentioned in the foregoing, was paid, and covered, specifically, this one question of settlement, in addition to all claims which had arisen or might arise, giving Erpi and its licensees a "clean bill of health" in every respect. All theatres, whether Erpi-equipped or not, therefore, were automatically given the right to use indefinitely any and all pictures recorded prior to expiration of the agreement.

RCA Photophone also is concerned with the recording tax situation, but to a considerably lesser degree than Erpi has been because there are only two large producer licensees of Photophone—RKO Radio and Pathe—which currently are engaged in recording for the theatrical field.

The original method of payment of taxes for the right to record was instituted upon the following basis: for the first year, 2½ cents per annum for each seat in every American theatre using a Western Electric Reproducer; for the second and third years, 3½ cents a seat, per year, and for the fourth and fifth years, 5 cents per seat per year.

Kentuckians Win Round In Admission Tax Fight

Kentucky theatres won the first round in their fight against a state admission tax when the committee on taxation of the house of representatives tabled and reported unfavorably on a proposal for a 10 per cent levy, at the special session, according to advices from Frankfort.

Exhibitors of Kentucky are determined not to permit the experience of theatre men in Ohio to become a precedent. In Ohio recently a tax on all admissions above 10 cents was voted.

Gaumont Pays 7 Per Cent On $2,100,253 Profit

A dividend of 7 per cent on ordinary shares of Gaumont-British was declared last week, with net profit for the year reported as $2,100,253. Net was $125,000 for the preceding year, when the dividend was 6 per cent.

Here's a Drama of Ten Million That Exhibitors Did Not Save

DUE entirely to sequential, parallel and cumulative endeavors—not to say cooperation—distinctly not to say co-operation—between, by and among—very much among—three exhibitor organizations, the screen theatres of Ohio are going to pay the state about $10,000,000 a year in taxes for the next two and a half years.

The participants in this expensive drama of public and political relations are:

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Ohio.

The Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors Association.

The Allied Theatre Owners of Ohio, Kentucky and West Virginia.

The intricate narrative of the assorted campaigns and their consequences runs about as follows:

Exemption First 40 Cents

Last April, when the regular legislative session was in progress, a sales tax was passed with exemptions on theatre admissions up to and including 40 cents. As the affiliated and first run theatres were the only ones in the state charging more than 40 cents they bore the brunt of the tax on their shoulders. Quite naturally this suited the smaller exhibitors in Ohio, few of whom charged more than a 25-cent top and many of whom operated with 15 cents as the top of the scale.

Suddenly, early in August, the state government's financial heads decided that taxable commodities were not returning a sufficient revenue. A special session of the legislature was hurriedly called and it was proposed to increase taxes on many commodity sales, including lowering of exemptions on the theatre.

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Ohio, through P. J. Wood, general manager, fought against this on the grounds that to tax the lower-admission theatres might well mean the closing of many of them. For one week a vigorous campaign was sponsored by Mr. Wood.

In a letter to the legislature he told senators and representatives of the exact stand of the MPTO of Ohio.

"We realize that an emergency exists," Mr. Wood wrote, "and are anxious to do our full share if you will distribute the burden equitably and generally over all lines of business.

Urge Equitable Assessment

"We are naturally opposed to any lowering of the present exemption of 40 cents upon the grounds that our admission rates are now so low that in no instance can they be considered a luxury, and this attempt on the part of the legislature to impose a tax upon admissions of less than 40 cents will burden this industry with a tax which must be passed on to the public if the theatres are to survive."

"Failing the enactment of a general tax upon all businesses to meet this emergency," Mr. Wood's letter continued, "we would not object to an exemption of 10 cents (which figure eliminates the parks and low admissions on concessions therein), but any exemption beyond this would be palpably unfair to many theatres that, due to competitive admission price situations, are now having a difficult time to survive.

"We further request that you consider our business as a whole and not attempt to draw a line which will tax some theatres and permit others to go scot free. This constitutes class legislation of the most vicious character in that it practically sets up a preferred list of individuals within an industry, and discriminates against those which are compelled to pay the tax.

"In closing, it is our hope that your body will meet the present emergency by spreading the impost equitably over all lines of business, including theatres.—(signed) P. J. Wood."

It is understood that, after carefully studying theatre conditions as outlined in Mr. Wood's letter, the legislature decided to let the exemption remain at 40 cents.

The Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association, however, had heard of the MPTO letter and, fearing that their theatres might be subjected to a tax, with exemption anywhere from 40 cent down, immediately dispatched a telegram to state senators and representatives urging that 25 cents at least should be the exemption limit, on the grounds that many of this organization's members felt they would be forced to close their theatres if the exemption were lower than 25 cents.

Then the Cleveland Group

The Cleveland group's telegram, authorized by G. W. Erdmann, secretary, follows:

"Information reached us that P. J. Wood has told senators and representatives that unless the tax bill exempts 40 cent admissions it should not exempt any admissions whatsoever. This is not the sentiment of the neighborhood theatres in Cleveland.

"We plead with you to at least exempt the 25*-cent admissions. It is the smaller theatres that charge* 25 cents or less and many of our members charge 30 cents and higher. They feel, however, that if the 25*-cent houses can be exempted it will save many of the smaller theatres from closing their doors.*

"Every theatre owner in Cleveland has complied with the NRA which became a very heavy burden on the small theatre. By exempting the 25-cent admissions the state could still realize a big sum as nearly 75 per cent of the gross income from theatres in Ohio comes from houses charging in excess of 25 cent admissions. This is the expression of a general meeting that was held today (Aug. 21).—(Signed) G. W. Erdmann."

Upon learning of the action of the Cleveland group, Mr. Wood sent them a telegram decrying their move as having done irreparable harm to their own theatres in the minds of the legislative body.

Wood Protests Action

"Cleveland circuit theatres, on the other hand, have informed the legislature of their willingness to cooperate on the basis of a tax being enacted with 10-cent exemption," Mr. Wood said. "Newspapers have obtained copies of your wire, and a story detrimental to the interests of your theatres will appear in Cleveland papers unless you take immediate action to disabuse the minds of your representatives that your members are refusing to help in this emergency. In all friendliness I urge that you immediately wire your senators and representatives stating that your members are willing to do just as much in proportion to meet the emergency in your county as Cleveland circuit theatres. You might also say that there is still a great possibility that the exemption will remain at 40 cents."

On the same day, and right on the heels of the Cleveland telegram, Allied Theatre Owners of Ohio, Kentucky and West Virginia sent a telegram to all of its members, as follows:

"Senate has just passed a bill putting tax on admissions without exemptions. Prompt action necessary if you are interested in having tax exemption on 15*-cent admissions. Wire your senator and representatives requesting them to pass bill exempting* 15*-cent admissions. They vote on bill tomorrow. (Signed) Frederic Strief."*

The Allied members promptly besieged their various representatives with pleas for an exemption on admissions at 15 cents and below.

So Tax Starts at 10 Cents

As a result, the legislature, seeing itself deluged with telegrams from exhibitors all over the state requesting that exemption be set at: a) 40 cents; b) 25 cents, and, c) 15 cents, passed a measure taxing all motion picture admissions above 10 cents 10 per cent. On August 28, Governor White signed the bill and it became effective September 1.

Operating under the new tax Ohio theatre men were alarmed after the first week to find an average drop of 50 per cent in box office receipts throughout the state. The consensus among exhibitors appeared to be that the public, while not objecting to the payment of a few extra cents' admission, objected strenuously to paying it under the name of taxation.

With the tax and the small raises already in force Ohio exhibitors feel that the public has been handed just about all it can stand at the present time in the way of higher prices for their amusements.

And the tax exemption originally was 40 cents.

THE CAMERA REPORTS

NEW TO STARDOM. Paul Robeson, the celebrated stage player, stars in the role of "The Emperor Jones" in the Krimsky-Cochran picturization of the story of the Negro who rose to ruling power, only to fall dead in fear. A United Artists release.

TWO STARS. Victor Jory, moved up to the starring pinnacle by Fox Film Corporation, looks over the situation with the horse that plays the hero in Will James' "Smoky," made on location in Northern Arizona. Irene Bentley has the leading feminine role.

CHANGING ADMINISTRATIONS. Tribute was paid to Hal Horne, retiring president of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, and a royal welcome was given to John C. Flinn, incoming executive, at the Park Central, New York, at a Tuesday night dinner dance. Continued in office are Rutgers Neilson, vice-president; Paul Benjamin, treasurer, and Al Sherman, secretary. Directors are Mr. Horne, Marvin Kirsch, Paul Gulick, Gabe Yorke, William R. Ferguson. Kelcey Allen was named trustee for three years. Among those at the speakers' table were Julius Tannen, toastmaster; Al Lichtman, vice-president of United Artists, and Johnny Walker.

CECILIA PARKER (above), has left westerns for comedy, in Andy Clyde's Educational comedy, "Andy's Mad Moment."

SUBBING FOR LEO. Henry Stampler of MGM's publicity department impersonated the company's living trademark in the NRA parade. With him are J. S. MacLeod (left) and William R. Ferguson.

A SOLID FRONT FOR NRA. In banner and in numbers—several hundred strong—the United Artists contingent did an "eyes left" as it passed the reviewing stand at New York's demonstration in allegiance to the National Recovery movement. In the stand were General Hugh Johnson, administrator of the NRA, Governor Lehman, Mayor O'Brien, and other dignitaries. The amusement section made a gala showing.

MAKE THEM GOOD AS U. S. FILMS OR ELSE—ITALIANS TELL PRODUCERS

Industry Hasn't Recovered Yet from Pittaluga's Death; 30 Films for New Season; Mussolini Writes Two Now Starting

by VITTORIO MALPASSVTI
Rome Correspondent

Since the advent of the talking picture has changed the face of the international cinema field, Italy has made all possible effort to produce good Italian talking pictures, which would guarantee to the theatres a good percentage of Italian made film.

But the results have not been very favorable. The class of pictures made, if not entirely faulty, has been at least up to now, below the level of the best American pictures. The taste of the Italian public is now deeply made up with the charm of the American stars and the perfection of the American technique, consequently all the Italian cinema fans are very particular about good pictures.

Pittaluga Project Stopped by Death

The first man who tried in 1929 to produce good Italian talking pictures was Stefano Pittaluga, but after his unfortunate death two years ago, when he was just bringing into new life the Cines, the old Italian company that produced the unforgettable masterpieces, "Quo Vadis?" and "Caesar and Cleopatra" and many others at the very start of the silent film, the situation did not make much progress. The Banca Commerciale Italiana, which took possession of the Cines Studios and started to produce with a big schedule of 25 to 30 pictures a year, has failed to succeed.

For the season 1933-34 the Cines will not have ready more than eight pictures of its own make and about a dozen completed in its studios by independent producers. Add to these 20 films about 10 more filmed in other studios and you have 30 as the total number.

Critics Doubtful of Quality

As to the quality of these films even the Italian critics are very doubtful. Mario Corsi in the daily paper, Gazzetta del Popolo of Turin, said recently that 25 out of these 30 pictures will be made on a comic sentimental standard, based on a cost price of three to four hundred thousand Italian lires, which is not very much even for Italy and does not allow great possibilities.

On the other hand, the Italian Government, following the instructions of the Duce, is making every effort to push ahead film production. As a first step, the Instituto Nazionale Luce, editor of the government News Reel Service, had produced at the end of last year the first Italian talking picture, which had a very big success all over Italy—"Black Shirt." This picture was directed by Giovacchino Forzano, the playwright who in collaboration with Benito Mussolini, wrote the world known drama, "Campo Di Maggio."

The Instituto Nazionale Luce was intended to continue the production, but after different changes in the executive family, Giovacchino Forzano started to produce by himself a couple of months ago, and is now working at Turin on a historic picture, "Viliafranca," which will be followed by "Campo Di Maggio" (The 100 days of Napoleon in Paris). The stories of both pictures have been written by the most advertised writer of Italy, Benito Mussolini himself. The scenarios are from Giovacchino Forzano, who also is directing production. These two pictures are being filmed under the direct moral control of the government and are intended to start a new era for the Italian industry.

Another producer with good financial basis is the Consorzio Italfonosap, which is also interested in Forzano productions. They are now working on six pictures. The first is "La Canzone del Sole," in which the Italian tenor, Lauri Volpi, will take part and for which Pietro Mascagni, the great Italian composer, has written a special song. Two other pictures will star Elsa Merlini, the Italian actress, who has really great film talent.

Gaumont Enters U.S. Distribution

The roster of American distributors was augmented this week by Gaumont-British, which, for the first time, will enter the national distribution field, commencing October 1 with the release of "Waltz Time." Previously, the company had sold American rights to its feature product, as in the case of "Be Mine Tonight," and "F.P. 1," which are being distributed currently by Universal and Fox, respectively.

"Waltz Time" which is an adaptation of Johann Strauss' "Die Fledermaus," starring Evelyn Laye, will be sold directly to theatres from headquarters in New York as a musical successor to "Be Mine Tonight," according to Arthur A. Lee, executive vice-president of Gaumont British Picture Corp. of America, which was formed a few months ago as the American subsidiary of the British producing firm. Maurice Ostrer, director of the London company, is president of the local subsidiary.

At the same time, Mr. Lee let it be known that Gaumont-British this year will import for showing in this country some 36 features, six of which have already been purchased by Fox, and two by Universal.

The Fox releases are: "After the Ball," "F.P. 1," "The Good Companions," "I Was A Spy," "The Only Girl," "The Constant Nymph." Besides "Be Mine Tonight," Universal will distribute "Rome Express.'

Adolph Zukor Recuperating

Adolph Zukor, president of Paramount Publix, has returned to his apartment at the Ambassador hotel in Hollywood from the Cedars of Lebanon hospital where he was treated for gastroenteritis. His condition was greatly improved.

Michalove Becomes Assistant to Kent

Dan Michalove, former Warner theatre executive and more recently serving in an executive advisory capacity to the trustees in the reorganization of Publix Enterprises, Inc., this week joined the Fox Film Corporation as executive assistant to Sidney R. Kent, president.

Mr. Michalove has been in the exhibition branch of the motion picture industry for many years and was at one time general manager for the Paramount subsidiary, Southern Enterprises. Subsequently he came to New York as general manager for Universal Chain Theatres. Several years later he joined Warner Brothers in a similar capacity and later relinquished his post to Joseph Bernhard, becoming executive assistant to Major Albert Warner. In March of this year Mr. Michalove resigned from Warner to assume the advisory post with Publix Enterprises, comprising some 325 theatres in the South, under the trustees in bankruptcy.

Byrd Negotiating for Pictures on Expedition

Admiral Richard Byrd is currently negotiating with several of the major companies to prepare a complete outfit of camera and technical men which will accompany his planned new expedition to Little America in the Antarctic. Admiral Byrd has expressed the hope that he will be able to make an exclusive arrangement with one company, thereby permitting a complete pictorial record of the entire expedition, which will occupy two years. He intends presenting one print of the completed film to the United States Government.

Supply Association Now Permanent Organization

The recently organized Theatre Equipment and Supply Manufacturers Association has established New York headquarters at 427 West 42nd Street. O. S. Neu, secretary of the organization and head of Neumade Products, said the organization would be continued permanently. It was created last month at Chicago to draw up a code for theatre equipment and supply manufacturers. E. A. Williford, of National Carbon Company, Cleveland, is president.

New Rockefeller Center Projects

Excavation has begun for two nine-story buildings for the entire north block of Rockefeller Center, New York, from the east wall of the Radio City Music Hall to Fifth avenue, between 50th and 51st streets. One structure is the Palazzo d'Italia, the other a building of duplicate design originally planned for a German building. Two other buildings to follow will be a 38-story and another nine-story structure.

The twelve cities are Boston, Chicago, Cleveland, Hollywood, Kansas City, Los Angeles, Minneapolis, New York, Oklahoma City, Omaha, Portland, Ore. and San Francisco.

Keough Tells of Bonuses Given to Paramount Heads

Details of the salaries and bonuses of several ranking executives of Paramount Publix and the method of settlement of a suit brought against the company in 1932 by A. C. Blumenthal, were brought to light Friday at a meeting of Paramount creditors before Referee Henry K. Davis. Austin C. Keough, general counsel and a director of Paramount, supplied the information. He was the only witness during some six hours of testimony.

$606,000 to Katz and Kent Together

Early last week Ralph A. Kohn disclosed that approximately $2,250,000 was distributed to five Paramount executives during 1929. As reported in the HERALD, Mr. Kohn was unable at the time to give details of the bonuses and Referee Davis ordered him to submit all records of such transactions for the next meeting. Accordingly Mr. Keough, deputizing for Mr. Kohn, told creditors on Friday that in 1929 Adolph Zukor received a flat salary of $130,000, plus a bonus, from profits, of $757,000 in cash. Jesse L. Lasky received the same amount during the year, Mr. Keough testified. The following year they both received the same flat salary and $228,614.86 each, most of which was paid in stock.

Sam Katz and Sidney R. Kent received salaries of $104,000 each in 1929 and 1930 and their 1929 cash bonuses together amounted to $606,000, Mr. Keough said. In 1930 their bonuses, paid almost entirely in stock, were $103,800 each. In 1931 the salaries of Mr. Kent and Mr. Katz were $90,360, in addition to $1,000 each for abrogating their bonus contracts with the company. Mr. Kent left the company in January, 1932, and his contract was settled for $200,000, although up to the time of the company's bankruptcy last January only $135,000 of this amount had been paid him.

Returning to the salaries of Mr. Zukor and Mr. Lasky, Mr. Keough testified that their salaries dropped in 1931 to $112,618 and it was in that year that they, together with Mr. Kent, Mr. Katz and Mr. Kohn, relinquished their bonus contracts with the company, in return for which each received $1,000.

$130,000 Bonus to Schulberg

In 1929 Ralph A. Kohn's salary was $52,000 and his cash bonus for the year was $303,000. He received the same salary in 1930 and a stock bonus of $92,045, at which time Paramount stock was selling for about 47. In 1931 Mr. Kohn's salary dropped to $45,868 and he also received the $1,000 cancellation of bonus contract payment.

Other Paramount executives whose salaries were made public property at the Friday hearing included B. P. Schulberg, former Paramount studio head, who in 1929 drew $182,000 salary and a bonus of $130,000. In 1930 he received the same amounts and in 1931 he was given no bonus, but his salary was raised to $213,868. For the first nine months of 1932 Mr. Schulberg received salary amounting to $216,918, after which his contract was terminated and he became a unit producer for the company.

John D. Hertz, brought into Paramount late in 1931 as chairman of the finance committee, received $10,000 in salary from Nov. 31, 1931, until the end of the year, or one month. Up to the date of his resignation from the company in December of 1932, he received as salary $97,055.

In 1929 Emil Shauer, head of the Paramount foreign department, drew a salary of $65,000; in 1930, $48,750; in 1931, $29,181, and $24,934 in 1932, Mr. Keough declared.

As to his own salary, Mr. Keough said he received $700 weekly for 1929, 1930 and up to May 1, 1931, at which time his salary was cut to $570 and remained at this figure until the beginning of 1932. Since then, and up to the present time, his salary has been set at $526.

Blumenthal Suit Settlement

The terms of the settlement, hitherto not made public, of the A. C. Blumenthal suit against Paramount Publix last year, also were disclosed by Mr. Keough. Mr. Blumenthal, a holder of 25 of the debentures of the company, in July, 1932, brought suit to set aside an agreement between Paramount and a group of banks under which the banks opened a credit of $13,000,000, to the corporation early in that year. Mr. Blumenthal complained that the bank loan was "a bookkeeping transaction which provided the banks with collateral on loans which were already in existence and which were unsecured up to the time Paramount organized Film Productions as a subsidiary." Mr. Blumenthal later amended his complaint to ask for a receiver and received $36,000, of which $11,000 was paid to Nathan Burkan, his attorney in the case.

Under the questioning of Saul E. Rogers, attorney for a group of creditors, Mr. Keough disclosed on Friday that while Mr. Blumenthal's bonds at one time had been worth $25,000, their value at the time of the settlement was but $7,500, and they were turned back to the company at that time.

Settled for $36,000

"You mean you bought off the suit for $36,000?" Mr. Rogers asked.

"We settled the suit for that amount," Mr. Keough said, and then explained that while the company fought Mr. Blumenthal's action immediately after the filing it was considered wise to settle out of court after the petition had been amended to ask for a receiver.

The examination of Mr. Keough relative to salaries and the disposal of Paramount's half interest in Columbia Broadcasting Company in 1932, was continued Wednesday by Mr. Rogers and Samuel Zirn, attorney for other bondholders.

Meanwhile, Referee Davis announced this week that Paramount bonds received in the mail Friday totaled $25,000,000. The two bond issues of the company outstanding aggregate $26,000,000. Bonds received Friday had been placed in the mail before midnight, September 14, the expiration date for the filing of creditors' claims against Paramount. Mr. Davis said that these, and others from more distant parts of the country, would be accepted as complying with the requirements for filing. Total claims of every description against the company may amount to $58,000,000, Mr. Davis said.

Expects to Keep 500 to 600 Houses

It was disclosed this week that Paramount expects to emerge from its bankruptcy situation with a theatre circuit approximating 500 to 600 houses, thus remaining an important national operator. The court's administration of the affairs of Publix Enterprises, Inc., is reported to be drawing to a close with this subsidiary looking for dismissal from bankruptcy in about a month. Paramount lists among its new subsidiaries the Famous Theatre Co., which was formed in Dover, Del., two weeks ago, and at the time of incorporation it was agreed that the purpose of the new company might have to do with certain of the theatres now under the Publix Enterprises banner.

Plans for reorganization of the entire corporate setup of the company are going forward, and although no forecast as yet has been made as to when Paramount will be clear of the administration of the bankruptcy court, operating plans and policies under a reorganization setup are being discussed constantly at the home office in New York.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

THE TRADITIONAL RIVALRY of the old fire-fighting companies on New York's Bowery in the "wicked '80s" is revived in Darryl Zanuck's first independent release, "The Bowery," now completed. United Artists is giving some thought to the idea of staging a world's premiere in the original setting, down among the nickel-a-drink "smoke" houses.

Chuck Connors and Steve Brodie were members of rival fire companies many years ago. It was the object of each company to reach the scene of a conflagration first. Both went to any lengths to achieve that end.

There were many battles between them and many heads were cracked as each fought for the honor of turning on the water first. Often the fire had burned itself out, sometimes with great loss of life and property, before the boys decided, with bricks and bats, as to which side should have the honor of quelling the blaze.

In the picture, Swipes, a newsboy pal of Chuck Connors, and played by Jackie Cooper, holds a fire plug for Connors' company by placing a barrel over it and sitting on the barrel, thus hiding the plug from Brodie's fire laddies. When it is discovered, the rival companies go to it while a large Bowery building, inhabited by Chinese, burns to the ground.

KENT CALLS MANY DEMANDS RUINOUS

must be made in the code for elimination of these practices, it was declared.

The elimination clause and the forcing of shorts are viewed as the most important of the questions yet to be dealt with under the block booking provisions, and it is believed these are nearing satisfactory adjustments under the proposal that the exhibitor be given a 15 per cent elimination, 7½ per cent without cost to him, a five per cent elimination being permitted on any contract exceeding $400 for the season. With respect to shorts, it has been proposed that no exhibitor be forced to take shorts in excess of the proportionate amount of features bought. Independent exhibitor factions, however, have declared they should not pay any part of cancellation assessments.

Labor In Hollywood No Problem, But Theatres Rebel at Demands

With but few exceptions, the studio labor provisions of the code are believed to have been worked out satisfactorily. Studio labor is said to be satisfied with the exception of cameramen, sound technicians and stunt pilots. The cameramen and technicians, originally asking for a 30-hour week, are now offering a 36-hour week, but it is held by the producers that some provision must be made to protect them against the necessity of changing crews in the middle of a production.

Demands of the stunt pilots are held by Mr. Rosenblatt to be against their own interests. The pilots asked for a minimum of $8.33 1/3, but without any time minimum or guarantee. It was pointed out that they might be employed at this rate for a very dangerous stunt requiring only a few minutes' time but worth a considerable remuneration. It is probable that they will be classed as professionals and left free to negotiate for compensation as at present.

Rosenblatt Sees Roosevelt About Film Code Situation

While the studio labor question offers but few difficulties a stalemate appears to have been reached in the question of exhibition labor, where the IATSE is demanding the employment of a man for every machine in the projection booth. This is vigorously opposed by the smaller exhibitors, who point out that many houses use but one machine, while keeping a second in reserve in case of emergency.

The problems encountered in the effort to work out a satisfactory code for the motion picture industry were laid before President Roosevelt last week by Deputy Administrator Rosenblatt. Mr. Rosenblatt, however, denied that the conference had any bearing on the sending of the film representatives back to New York for further deliberations, declaring that his action was taken with a view to composing the differences existing not only within the distributor and exhibitor groups but between them.

It was felt that a few days of negotiation might enable the two groups to rewrite at least some of those provisions of the code on which there were differences of opinion. Mr. Rosenblatt, however, refused to divulge his purpose in visiting the White House, although the trip is taken in Washington as an indication that recovery administration officials foresee a possibility that the industry will be unable to agree and that they may be called upon to write the code.

Meanwhile, practically each of the groups and associations at the hearing representing exhibitors, distributors, or producers, were closeted during the week in New York, and elsewhere, trying to reach some solution to the trade practices which were at issue.

Prominent on the witness stand during the closing sessions of the public hearing were William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, who spoke at length on behalf of labor, demanding a 30-hour week and collective bargaining. Exhibitors protested loudly against Mr. Green's demands for a 30-hour week and then appointed a committee, consisting of Al Steffes, Jack Miller and Jack Shapiro, to arrive at an agreement as to maximum hours and minimum wages.

Abram Myers, president of Allied, and Ed Kuykendall, president of the MPTOA, also spread the record with exhibitor demands.

The American Federation of Labor went on record favoring doubles.

Sidney Kent Says Exhibitors' Demands Would Have Serious Effect

During Mr. Kent's vigorous defense, on behalf of distributors, against changes in certain industry trade practices, as advocated in the code by exhibitors, he charged at the public hearing, last Thursday, that many of the exhibitor proposals would have a devastating effect upon the revenue of the major companies, and said that eight producer-distributors were willing and ready to stand shoulder to shoulder and do their best in the interests of labor and for this reason should be protected against the danger of decreased income, which, he declared, these eight companies could not hope to survive.

The chief objection to exhibitor proposals on the part of distributors was the question of "the right to buy." This has long been a subject of great dissension between distributors and unaffiliated exhibitors, who always have claimed they should be given equal rights to bid for pictures in a free and open market with other exhibitors and circuits.

"The determining factor on this question of opening buying is not necessarily the price offered," said Mr. Kent in explaining the distributor attitude, "but distributors must pay attention to the stability of their income and deliberate over what assurance they have of getting it. Selling cost is a big item, too," he added.

"I'm sorry if a man who buys $500,000 worth of film seems more attractive to me than the man buying $10,000. It's human nature," he said.

Mr. Kent suggested that arbitration machinery should be set up in the code to take care of exhibitor charges of inability to buy product. He said that during his career in the film industy he had heard of only two theatres where exhibitors found it impossible to buy and that he found it impossible to judge who could decide an issue involving the bidding of three men for the same product, as suggested in the proposals on this subject.

Mr. Kent said he represented a $650,000,000 capital investment in the industry, $133,000,000 in annual payrolls, and that the eight major producer-distributors spent $116,000,000 annually in other markets for supplies and raw material. Stockholders representation in the eight companies totaled 134,000, he said.

"This group's first obligation is to labor and it is our intention to increase salaries in keeping with the spirit of the National Recovery Act," he said. Major companies, in his opinion, had the right to make a careful study of code clauses which might add to overhead or which did not provide for an increase in employment.

"Major studios have reduced the average 48-hour labor week, prevalent two years ago, to 40 hours in order to aid in re-employment, and in the last few weeks had agreed to 36 hours, at the same wage scale, thereby increasing salaries 14½ per cent," Mr. Kent declared. Crafts on the Coast, whether union or non-union, had been offered the identical arrangements, but the labor demands for a 30-hour week were impossible, he said, as it would be out of the question for the industry to stand the burden, he said.

Studio payrolls in 1932 averaged $1,096,000 weekly, distribution, $321,000, and major theatre circuit payrolls, $1,094,000, making a total weekly payroll for major interests of $2,570,000.

Speaking forcefully and with a well-ordered array of facts and figures, Mr. Kent said that Abram F. Myers, of Allied, had failed to point out earlier in the day that courts of law had held block booking to be a fair practice, and added that less than 10 per cent of deals closed in this country covered 100 per cent of programs in complete blocks.

Thinks Doubles Should be Left Open to Local Option

Mr. Kent said that the majors definitely refused to take a blanket action to eliminate non-theatrical competition, as suggested in the exhibitor proposals, but that his group would take steps to protect theatres where it could be proved non-theatrical competition was materially hurting theatres.

Touching upon the subject of double features —something which many distributors, major and independent alike, have long felt to be out of place in an industry code—Mr. Kent asserted that although the question had not been raised by major distributors originally, certain exhibitor groups had asked the distributors to outlaw them in the New York code drafting program. The majors, however, refused to do this, on the grounds that the dual question should be settled once and for all by the public. For this reason the distributors eventually decided that a 60 per cent opinion in any given territory or zone was a fair majority decision.

"It would be silly to vote them out if the public wants them and exhibitors would be silly to rule them out if they thought the public would buy that type of program," he said. "On the other hand, majors would not permit double feature programs to be unrestricted on the grounds that they had definite rights in the protection of superior films, regardless of what the ultimate disposition of this question might be in a final code.

Exhibitors Must Share Burden Of Cancellations with Distributors

"Therefore the question goes beyond the viewpoints of the individual companies," he said. "Before the depression we had duals only in New England and New York and we also had as many independents then as now. They won't be killed off if duals are voted out, but I maintain production of $10,000 or $12,000 pictures made merely to cash in on the prevalance of duals is not legitimate operation," said Mr. Kent.

Speaking of picture rejection and cancellation privileges, Mr. Kent said that the majors have agreed to 15 per cent cancellations, but that they are in no position to stand the burden alone, and declared that of the eight companies he represented only two showed a profit for 1932. For this reason the majors want exhibitors to pay partial rentals if they exercise the 15 per cent cancellation privilege and because a program of successful pictures must of necessity carry with a few unsuccessful ones, because a good portion of the producer's work is experimental.

LABOR EXPENSE RAISED 14½ PER CENT

Further revenue losses in the industry, especially if labor insists upon proposals which will increase major company operating expenses, simply cannot be borne, he said, declaring that if the straight 15 per cent cancellation is allowed to stand it would mean that a considerable percentage would be eliminated from the $170,000,000 in rentals for the eight major companies in 1932, less foreign income.

"It would be impossible to do this," he said, "particularly in view of the fact that negative costs would not be reduced, since there would be no way to figure which pictures exhibitors would propose cancelling."

Contending that the majors could not give up score charges, the majors' spokesman said that half of the major distributors' business is done on a percentage basis, which meant they were taking a gamble. If they are willing to gamble on the poor business days of the week they should also be allowed to share in the good days, usually over the week-ends.

Arguing for the right of tieing in shorts with features, Mr. Kent said that the reason was to prevent revenue shrinkage. He told Mr. Rosenblatt he would submit facts and figures for purposes of camparison with the capital invested in independent film production, in order that the deputy administrator could determine which faction was entitled to preference.

Five Per Cent of Distributors' Income Comes from Score Charges

Replying to a query from Mr. Rosenblatt as to why some of the companies had eliminated score charges, Mr. Kent said that this must be an individual company policy, and that from five to seven and one-half per cent of distributor revenue comes from score charges maintained by four or five of the major companies which are continuing the practice.

Mr. Kent vigorously condemned the use of premiums, saying that distributors do not expect to compete with retailers in other businesses, and pronounced the premium practice as doing just this.

"If the film companies sold film to Woolworth our legitimate customers would soon raise a fuss," he said. Then he suggested that the question be settled in the same manner as the double feature, on a 60 per cent majority.

On Tuesday, Mr. Kent, in New York, privately stated the attitude of distributors regarding the principal points of issue, with a factual elaboration of the remarks which he made on the floor at the public code hearing last Thursday.

"All companies are willingly doing what they can for labor in the face of a national gross which cannot stand the shrinkage," he said. "On the one hand, the major producing companies are saddling themselves with an additional 14½ per cent labor expense. On the other hand, the exhibitors are attempting to exact trade practices which will deplete distributor revenue between 20 and 25 per cent."

"The right to buy overlooks the right to sell," Mr. Kent said. "Additional selling cost is a vital factor about which nothing was said in Washington. Buying films in free and open competition with no regard for circuit deals, in which the principle of wholesale buying has always been recognized, and yet with no recognition of the millions invested in affiliated theatres and their rights, or their very substantial percentage of mass payrolls, is a serious situation and one that may affect the distributor on all parts of his income.

"If allowed to run its course, it will send the cost of prints to a staggering figure and this is easy enough to prove. The average print costs $180 or more and the average number of prints on each release is $200. If the bars are let down all over the nation, print requirements on each release would run to a minimum of several hundred for the simple reason that there would be no check on the number of day-and-date runs. The major companies release a minimum of 300 pictures a year. This would mean that print costs would jump immediately from approximately $10,800,000 a year to a figure several times that amount. Who is going to pay for it? Do you think we can get it back in additional rentals? I don't think so.

"Aside from this, the distributor stands on his right of selectivity, his right to sell the customer he prefers. There are many other factors, including the stability of the customer, the character of his house and the showmanship safeguards to important product which follow in the wake of these latter considerations. Such free and untrammelled buying will precipitate chaos in the industry and may cause a disastrous drop in major company revenue, as I cannot believe that all of this enthusiasm for buying and spending millions can last long. Finally it will have to settle down to sane proportions and then where are we? When the pendulum swings too far in one direction, it invariably swings back with the same rapidity and the toll of damage it will do is horrible to contemplate.

An Open Market Is Not A Solution, Says Kent

"The exhibitors have made the flat statement that the right to buy will settle all of their troubles. There were hundreds of theatres in this country last year in Fox West Coast alone that did have first run and yet their business dropped from 30 per cent to 40 per cent. Paramount, in its theatres from coast to coast, in many situations suffered a shrinkage which was close to this figure.

"Everybody can't have the same right. There is no precedent in the industry in this country for it. The year that Chevrolet made such a hit in the low-priced car field, thousands all over the country clamored for the agency in their cities or territories. Did all of them get it? Of course not. How could they? The selection went to men on the basis of established priority and geographical situations. The fact that agents had been middlemen for General Motors for years played an important part. Naturally, it would. Yet that year there were 43 other makes of cars on the market. I don't think any one went out of business because they couldn't get cars to sell."

What Cancellation Demands Would Mean to Distributors

On the move for a 15 per cent cancellation privilege which Allied is seeking to raise to 20 per cent, Mr. Kent had this to say:

"No exhibitor argument even touched on what this would mean to distributors. Our negative costs would run on as they always have and the reason for that is both simple and obvious. If the exhibitor is given the right to cancel out pictures as he may elect, how can the studios tell what pictures to make or not to make? Our negative costs, as a consequence, will maintain their present high level; we will be compelled to make all of the pictures we set out to make at the start of each season and stagger along on the chance that some of them will not be cancelled and, by not being cancelled, return what we have spent on them.

"Consider, too, what would happen to production. Making pictures is no set scheme. We are exploring constantly with new ideas, new trends. We have to if we are to avoid falling into a rut. While we agreed to 15 per cent cancellations, the exhibitor must stand part of the burden. Fifteen per cent of the $175,000,000 rental revenue, less foreign, of the eight major companies would be wiped out if cancellations are to be blanket and with no refund coming back to the distributor. We are in no position to take this rap alone and our financial statements prove it."

On compulsory block booking, Mr. Kent said:

"Much has been said about this. We regard it essential as a quick and less expensive method of selling pictures. Let me make two points here: (1) Less than 10 per cent of all the film contracts closed in the United States last year were in 100 per cent blocks. The remaining 90 per cent varied in numbers of pictures sold and, of course, on terms including percentage; (2) block booking, hammered at hard in Washington, was declared fair by the courts of the land after years of litigation. I refer you

NATIONAL LEGION WILL SUPPORT NRA

Harry M. Warner, president of Warner Brothers, has been named chairman of a division of a newly organized National NRA Stage and Screen Legion. Mr. Warner will head the National Motion Picture Producers Committee. With Harry A. Schulman as national chairman, the organization opened New York headquarters at the Hotel Biltmore this week, and will take its place with the National Radio Legion and the National Authors Legion, headed by Kate Smith and Rupert Hughes, respectively. The organization has already received President Roosevelt's endorsement, and will be directly responsible to NRA headquarters at Washington and specifically to Louis J. Alber, chief of the NRA Speakers Division of the Bureau of Public Relations, who has supervised the establishment of the legions in New York.

The legion will be a central clearing house to coordinate the contributions of these fields to the NRA cause. Dr. Henry Moskowitz heads the National Legitimate Theatres Committee, Sam H. Harris the Stage Producers, George M. Cohan the Legitimate Actors, and William A. Brady is chairman of the national executive committee. Robert F. Sisk of RKO and Oliver M. Saylor will head an advisory publicity committee.

HALF OF DEALS MADE ON PERCENTAGE

to the Paramount case. Moreover, any other method will raise the cost of selling and raise the price paid by the exhibitor."

Says 50 Per Cent of Deals Are Made on Percentages

On designated playdates, Mr. Kent had this to say:

"More than 50 per cent of our deals are on percentage. In other words, we are gambling. If we are big enough to take a chance with exhibitors on the poor days of his week, we regard it as our right to share with him the big days of the week which are Friday, Saturday and Sunday. I grant readily that where an exhibitor buys flat he should exercise the right to designate the days on which he wants to play the product.

"Score charges represent from 5% to 7½% of several major companies' incomes and must be retained for one good reason—because they can't get along without it," Mr. Kent said.

"As was stated in Washington, the eight major companies, for which I was spokesman, represent an invested capital of $650,000,000, an annual payroll of $133,000,000 and they spent last year $116,000,000 in other industries through the purchase of supplies and materials.

"I tell you we are worried. With only two of these eight returning a profit last year, we have reason to be.

"Two companies are in bankruptcy and Fox narrowly escaped the same thing. If any one thinks we are arguing idly, he's guessing up the wrong tree. We cannot stand any shrinkage in our revenue, no matter how small. That is why we are so seriously considering asking the Government to take steps which will guarantee us cost on our investment. If these exhibitor proposals go through without some such safeguard, it's all going to be too bad."

Buying Singly Would Not Add To Distributor Costs, Says Myers

In declaring that compulsory block booking is unfair and should be ruled out, Mr. Myers at the Washington hearing said that banning of this trade practice would not necessarily force exhibitors to buy pictures singly, as had been stated. Neither would it increase selling costs as distributors had maintained, Mr. Myers said, but if it did it would be entirely in keeping with the purpose of the NRA.

Mr. Myers said that the film industry probably is the only industry in the world in which a buyer is forced to buy valueless product in order to obtain that which he regarded as valuable.

He also asked that the code be empowered to determine what constitutes violations of the Hays production code, claiming that independents are now being forced by the majors to play objectionable pictures in direct violation of the production code. Mr. Myers further said that while he considers arbitration is necessary it should be "fair."

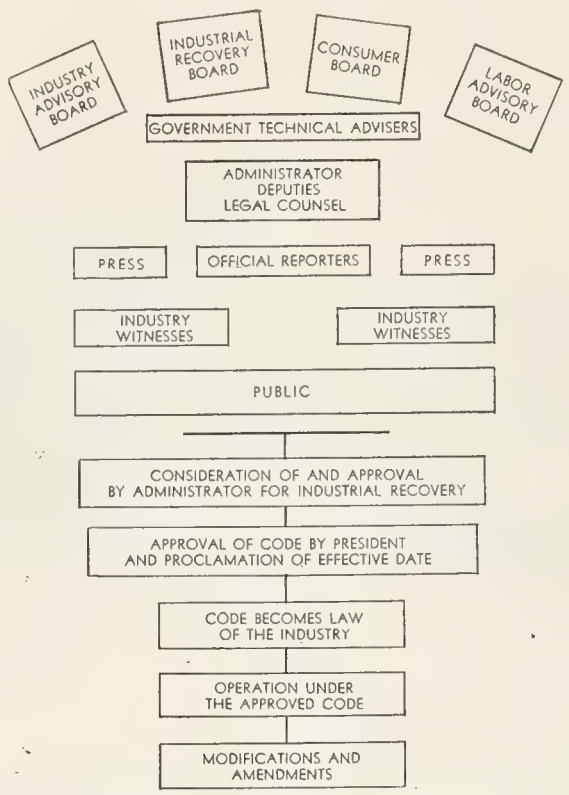
B. B. Kahane declared that the production branch of the industry faces "ruination" unless some method is set up to prevent continued campaigns by agents to make stars and important featured players dissatisfied by holding out promises of large increases in salary. He charged that unethical agents create serious problems in the industry through their practices and that no major company at the present time can stand the loss of many of its important people.

Of special interest to exhibitors was the question of Mr. Rosenblatt Thursday on details of "the right to buy." He demanded facts and figures to support the contention of distributors that their income would be decreased under a policy which permitted exhibitors the right to buy film in an open market. Charles L. O'Reilly, exhibition code coordinator, but speaking Thursday as president of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce, said that "we can meet every condition advanced by the affiliated or independent chains if we are given the chance. All of our code troubles revolve around this issue."

Jacob Schechter, counsel for the Federation of the Motion Picture Industry, declared that open buying would benefit production through increased revenue and would at the same time send the distribution sales upward as a result of increased rentals, which would inevitably follow the policy.

Arguments for both sides were advanced by many others at Thursday's hearing, including A. H. Schwarz, president of Century Circuit, New York; Leo Brecher, independent New York exhibitor; Sidney Samuelson, president of Allied of New Jersey, besides Mr. Kent, Nathan Burkan and Mr. Brandt.

WASHINGTON CODE PROCEDURE



This chart of the steps of procedure in establishment of an industry code, after presentation of the tentative code to the deputy administrator, is the copyrighted work of the National Industrial Advisory Corporation, private organization under management of the Sherman Corporation, business and management engineers.

Rosenblatt Indicates He Favors Including "5-5-5" Agreement

Another interesting development of the final session was the indication by Mr. Rosenblatt that he was in favor of including in the code the now famous "5-5-5" optional standard license agreement, completed a few years ago, and revised several months ago. It was understood there would be little or no opposition to this from the distributors, who claim they would have adopted the agreement some time ago had not their lawyers advised otherwise.

Mr. Rosenblatt condemned the practice of forcing higher rentals by threatening to build or acquire competitive theatres and declared it to be definitely unfair. He also is understood to have approved Article 30 in the distribution code which makes it unfair for a distributor to divulge "or authorize or knowingly permit" any checker or employee of a checking organization to reveal information concerning box-office receipts on percentage engagements, exhibitors having charged that through the employment by distributors of one checking organization, Ross Federal Checking Service, it has been possible for other distributors to acquire this knowledge and subsequently use it to rearrange percentage and flat rental terms. They therefore ask an individual checking service for each distributor.

Another clause on which it is understood the deputy administrator has placed his approval is Article 13 in the exhibition code which prohibits any theatre man from transferring ownership or possession of his theatre to avoid uncompleted contracts. With this clause Mr Rosenblatt is in complete accord, both as to phraseology and intent.

Article 38 of the exhibition code also has been approved by Mr. Rosenblatt. This provides for banning of unauthorized holdovers, switching and "bicycling." Both distributors and exhibitors agree that these practices should be banned, but it is understood they are not in agreement on penalties for violations. The exhibition code committee agreed on the penalties, but wanted those penalties to apply not only to exhibitors but to salesmen as well if found guilty of encouraging such practices, and, because of dissension over this point, Mr. Rosenblatt ordered it struck out.

The clause in the exhibition code which declares as unfair competition the representation of stage shows in halls and auditoriums will be revised, Mr. Rosenblatt announced last week. He did not, however, indicate what changes would be made. Jerome Wilzin, for the William Morris agency, opposed the measure, claiming it would throw many people out of work.

The question of whether or not the final industry code can be made retroactive to cover new season film contracts already closed is a legal one and has been turned over to the legal division of the NRA for an opinion, Mr. Rosenblatt said Thursday. Certain other provisions of the code also may be made retroactive, Mr. Rosenblatt said.

Producer Part in Exhibition Not within Province of NRA

Allied received a setback, when the deputy announced that it is not within the province of the NRA to rule whether or not producers should divorce themselves from exhibition. It will, therefore, be no part of a final code, and Allied has been campaigning for this.

One of the most difficult of all codifying activities has been the question of labor in theatres, Mr. Rosenblatt admitted Thursday at the end of the final session. One of the chief reasons for this is the difficulty of setting up wage scales to apply nationally.

Mr. Rosenblatt spent four hours with IATSE representatives over the weekend, after conferences which had continued after the final day of the hearing, in an effort to work out a solution for the demand for one man behind every projection machine.

Mr. Rosenblatt named committees representing all labor groups to work out their many and varied problems, as follows:

IATSE on theatre and studio crafts: J. P. Nick, Harlan Holmden, Louis Krause, Fred J. Dempsey, William C. Elliott and Abner Rubien as counsel.

All theatres, including major circuits, Allied States and the MPTOA: W. A. Steffes, Jack

Amicable Settlement Reached On 36-Hour Week at Studios

Meanwhile studio labor came to an agreement on proposals made by producers for a 40-hour wage scale with only 36 hours of work per week, the two groups which previously had been holding out for a 30-hour week at the same scale having come to an amicable settlement on 36 hours.

William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, asked for representation on behalf of labor crafts and also on behalf of actors, claiming in this instance that the Academy did not truly represent them and had always been dominated by the producer-employers.

Mr. Green declared workers in the motion picture industry total 290,000, including 30,000 in production, 10,000 in distribution and 250,000 in exhibition, the figures having been compiled by the Motion Picture Division of the Department of Commerce in June of this year.

Defense of Checking Service Wins Over Allied Proposal

Claiming that the Allied States Association attack on the employment of one checking service by two or more distributors is aimed at "an imaginary evil," Louis Nizer, attorney for Ross Federal Checking Service, won in his defense of this organization in a brief submitted at the industry code hearing last week, when Mr. Rosenblatt denied an exception and counter proposal.

The brief stated that the Ross Federal gives an average full-time employment to 800 persons weekly, with payrolls, now under the NRA, averaging $11,000 weekly. It also set forth that under the NRA the company increased its employees by 400 and added $1 per day to the salaries of a majority of employees and $5 and $10 a week to the salaries of executives and office help.

In his brief Mr. Nizer claimed that if the counter proposals to the exhibition code championed by Allied were to be adopted it would decrease payrolls and employment by eliminating the Ross organization "within a week."

Progress Is Made in Other Fields of Amusement Codes

While the National Recovery Administration's code-drafting activities pertaining to the motion picture industry were believed to be nearing a climax at Washington, progress was reported along other fronts in the formulation of agreements governing other amusement fields and branches of businesses which are related to films.

Adjourn Broadcasters Hearing

The National Association of Broadcasters, Inc., claiming to represent approximately 82 per cent of the volume of business done by the radio broadcasting industry, with its membership approximately 42 per cent of the radio stations of the country, finally submitted a proposed code to Sol A. Rosenblatt, NRA administrator for amusements. Immediately Mr. Rosenblatt set September 20 as the date for a hearing, but this was postponed until the morning of Wednesday, September 27. It will be held in the Raleigh Hotel, at Washington.

Tentative Date for Music Code

The music publishers' code will be discussed at a public hearing at Washington early next month. At the hearing, the publishers will bring in the motion picture industry in connection with certain activities involving song writers and the use made of their songs in production. They seek to stop, among others, the practice of producers continuing the use in other pictures of songs which were written expressly for another.

Laboratory Code Becomes Effective

Motion picture laboratories formally commenced operations under their code on Monday. The code was signed by President Roosevelt on September 7. It places the industry on a 40-hour week, with the privilege of working 60 hours in emergencies. A dual schedule of minimum wages went into effect under the code, one for laboratories employing up to 20 workers, another for larger plants. The code exempts laboratories owned, operated or controlled by motion picture producers and not competing with other laboratories.

Equipment Group Being Organized

Although D. W. Tracy, international president of the electrical workers union, was the only one named to act as labor advisor at the public hearings for a code for motion picture theatre supply dealers and equipment manufacturers, it was expected that others will be appointed within a few days by Mr. Rosenblatt, to sit with him at the hearings, which will be held at Washington on October 3, instead of September 25, as previously announced.

Solution for Ticket Brokers' Troubles

The code troubles involving members of the two rival factions of theatre ticket brokers—the National Theatre Ticket Distributors and the Ticket Brokers' Association, were nearing an end, as both groups took under advisement a plan suggested by Mr. Rosenblatt. As a result, each may have one representative on the National Legitimate Theatre Committee, which will govern the enforcement of their code when questions arise concerning the sale and distribution of theatre tickets. Mr. Rosenblatt also suggested that each of the two groups retain its separate identity.

Code for Ticket Manufacturers

The American Amusement Ticket Manufacturers' Association, members of which make tickets for motion picture theatres and for all other branches of amusement, and for clothing, railways, buses and restaurants, has finally sent a code to Washington. Besides setting up an enforcement administration and incorporating the usual clauses governing arbitration of disputes, monopolies, and the like, the ticket manufacturers' code provides:

A wage scale with minimum hourly wages of 40 cents for men and 30 cents for women, except apprentices.

A 40-hour week, except in emergencies, and then only when permission is given.

And the following "unfair" trade practices:

A. Inducing or attempting to induce the breach of a contract between a competitor and his customer during the term of such contract.

B. The defamation of a competitor by words or acts which untruthfully call in question his business integrity, his ability to perform his contracts, his credit standing, or the grade, quality, accuracy, or service of his goods.

C. Interference with a competitor's business through the enticement of employees from his employment.

D. Any discrimination in the price of commodities of the same class (not including discrimination in price on account of the difference in the grade, quality, or quantity of the product sold), or discrimination in price in the same or different communities not made in good faith to meet competition, where the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly.

E. The payment or allowance of secret rebates, bribes, refunds, credits, or unearned discounts, whether in the form of money or otherwise, or extending to certain purchasers' special services or privileges not extended to all purchasers under like terms and conditions.

F. The circularization of threats of suit for infringement of patent or trade mark among customers of a competitor, not made in good faith, but for the purpose of harassing and intimidating customers.

G. The practice of accepting orders for large quantities and shipping in small quantities (known as split shipments) and billing such small quantities shipped at the large quantity price.

H. Contracts of sales which permit the buyer to cancel or provide for a reduced price in the event of a market decline, and which do not permit the seller to cancel or provide for an enhanced price in the event of a market rise.

I. Printing the names of non-manufacturers on tickets, except when such non-manufacturer is in fact the exclusive selling agency of a manufacturer or a recognized ticket manufacturer.

J. No manufacturer shall sell goods for resale to any dealer, jobber, or distributor who in turn resells such goods at less than said manufacturer's published price list.

Violation of the following provisions shall constitute unfair practices:

K. 1. Quotations.—All quotations are made for immediate acceptance and are subject to change without notice.

2. Terms.—Net, no cash discounts.

BRITISH TRADE HAILS FAIRBANKS' VENTURE

Series of Production Units in Cooperation with London Film Productions Planned; Doug Junior Also in Project

by BERNARD CHARMAN
London Correspondent

Douglas Fairbanks' recent announcement that he is to enter British production on a wide scale has been hailed in London as one of the biggest things that ever happened to the industry in the United Kingdom. Not only has it been discussed with bated breath in trade circles, but it certainly has been given much attention in the daily press. The Daily Mail, one of the two leading nationals, gave it not only news space, but feature space and a picture and even wrote a leader about it. Incidentally, John Myers, press representative of London Films, with whom Doug is tying up, has just had his contract renewed!

Mr. Fairbanks' plan is to build up a series of production units in cooperation with London Film Productions, on lines similar to those of the United Artists organization in Hollywood. That is, each major star will have his own outfit, but will produce through the same studios and distribute through the same renter—United Artists. UA previously had contracted to handle the London Films output and the new idea is, therefore, an extension of existing arrangements.

Plenty of Backing

Behind the concern which Doug is developing in conjunction with Alexander Korda (chief of London Films) and Ludovico Toeplitz is a backing of a million sterling. Stars of international rank are to be invited to join and establish their own organizations inside the parent body.

With Doug is Doug Junior, who is planning to develop his unit as one of the first in the new company, and the two Fairbanks between them will be responsible for the first four pictures on the proposed schedule.

First of these is a film written around the history of Peter III and Catherine of Russia, and the star parts are being played by Doug Junior and Elizabeth Bergner, continental artist, who played in "Der Traumende Mund" and other notable German productions.

Boost for London Films

Second will be Pa Fairbanks' initial venture in this tight little island. It will be a subject with the self-explanatory title of "Exit Don Juan." October is announced as starting date.

Third is to be a sensational subject, in which Doug and Junior will appear together for the first time ever. The picture will be based on Doug's two silent classics, "The Mark of Zorro" and "Son of Zorro," and will have the brief title "Z." Fairbanks said he will shoot exteriors in Spain, Mexico and California, so the film should have the correct flavor.

Fourth will be a starring vehicle for Junior, who will bring to the screen Sir Walter Scott's immortal story of the days "when knights were bold"—"Ivanhoe." These films, it will be noted, take Junior right into the romantic field which his famous father occupied in silent days.

I think you'll agree that this venture is a pretty ambitious affair, and should certainly help British production on its way. If it gets going good and proper, the output will be identical with what the American UA organization has been manufacturing. Production locale should make little or no difference.

This plan puts London Films foursquare with the best producers in the world. They've already done some fairly big things, not least of which was the much-heralded "Private Life of Henry VIII," with Charles Laughton as the merry monarch. The subject had its London trade-showing the other day, and was a riot. "Henry VIII" is scheduled for an early Broadway premiere.

Idle speculation—will Laughton become a member of the organization?

Calls U. S. Market Improved

Between the dots—Maurice Ostrer, director of Gaumont-British, just back from United States, said chances of British films on that territory were never better than they are today. . . . Jack Buchanan ("Paris" "Monte Carlo" and other films) is turning theatre operator; will take over control of the Leicester Square, now playing vaudeville. . . . Raquel Torres and Greta Nissen reported signed by British International Pictures for Eleanor Smith's "Red Wagon." . . . Winfield Sheehan, who said he was in England on "Business and Pleasure," told reporters of the Fox plan to make Dickens' "Tale of Two Cities" in London next spring, with Warner Baxter. . . . Bristol licensing board barred "Sign of the Cross" from the city's cinemas; relented later conditional on excision of three scenes. . . . John Harrison, president-elect of CEA, the Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association, died unexpectedly.

Gaumont-British announced its productions for its second year, as follows:

"Mary Queen of Scots," historical subject; "Magnolia Street," from Louis Golding's novel; "Brown on Resolution," from C. S. Forester's novel; "Jew Suss," from Leon Feuchtwanger's masterpiece, with Conrad Veidt starring; "Rhodes," based on the life of the South African pioneer; "Evergreen," a C. B. Cochran West End stage success; "Chu Chin Chow," wartime musical show that ran four years in West End; "Road House," recent stage success written by Walter Hackett; "Men Without Work" and "On the Dole," revealing two sides of the depression; "Red Ensign," story of the merchant service; "Northbound," arctic story by Thea von Harbou, who wrote "Metropolis" and "The Spy" (famous German silents); "Covent Garden," based on the London fruit market; "Open All Night," story of London night life; "A Bit of a Test," farce with cricket background; "Bretherton," based on a successful war novel. To these will be added other subjects, featuring popular British players.

Carl Laemmle Sailing for Europe

The passenger list of the Ile de France, sailing Saturday, includes Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, who, accompanied by Jack Ross, his assistant, and Charles Ford, of the newsreel department, will visit England and France.

Hoffberg Gets Rights

J. H. Hoffberg Company, Inc., has acquired the foreign distribution rights to 21 Harold Lloyd comedies, formerly released by Pathe, from Embassy Pictures. The comedies will be synchronized with music and sound, and titled in foreign languages.

European Business Gaining: Otterson

Motion picture business in Europe is in general improved over a year ago, John E. Otterson, president of Electrical Research Products, Inc., declared on his return to New York recently. England, in particular, is moving steadily forward, he said. He did not include Germany in his observations.

"Theatre business is improved," Mr. Otterson said. "Generally, I should say conditions are better than I found them on my regular annual business trip abroad a year ago. Particularly is this true of England, where the industry is doing some nice production work now."

Warner Club Elects; All Benefits Increased

Alfred W. Schwalberg, head of exchange operations for Warner Bros., was elected president of the Warner Club for the new year, at the annual election held last Saturday at New York. The following constitutes the new board of officers: Jules Levey, the retiring president, who was elected vice president in charge of membership; Ruth Weisberg, vice president in charge of welfare; Steve Trilling, vice president in charge of entertainment; Thomas J. Martin, treasurer; Louis Aldrich, secretary.

Elected as members of the executive board were: A. W. Schwalberg, Jules Levey, Ruth Weisberg, Steve Trilling, T. J. Martin, Louis S. Aldrich, Harold Rodner, Karl MacDonald, Frank L. Gates, Alex MacBeath, W. S. MacDonald, C. A. Nichols, George O'Keefe, Margaret Peterson, E. Reilly, Arthur Sachson, S. Schneider, Max Blackman, Sid Goldberg, E. B. Barrison.

A vote of thanks was given Ralph Budd, retiring vice president, for bringing the membership up to its highest point in the history of the club. The year ended with close to 7000 members on the books.

Following the election the executive committee increased the various benefits to members. The death benefit was increased from $250 to $350. The sick benefit was increased from $10 a week for ten weeks, excepting the first two weeks, to $15 a week for 15 weeks, excepting the first two weeks. Donations to those who marry were increased from $25 to $50. Allocation to each branch club for social activities was increased from $2 per member to $3 per member.

During the past year it was announced, death benefits were paid to 28 families; $9,150 was paid out for births; an average of $43 was paid out in sick benefits to 317 people, and loans totaling $17,000 were made to 234 members.

Gaumont British Merging All Distribution, Is Report

Gaumont British, largest motion picture company in England, is reported to be planning elimination of both the Gaumont and the Ideal subsidiaries and concentrating all distribution in W. and F. Film Service, with C. M. Woolff, managing director of the corporation, in charge of selling, and Jeffrey Bernard assisting him.

PEOPLE DOING THIS EVERY DAY!

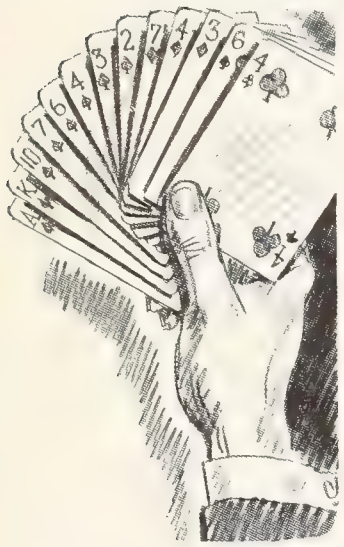
I WAS AMAZED WHEN I WALKED INTO THIS MAN'S OFFICE . .

I always thought Bridge was just a game of cards.



I play a little, two or three times a week, get mad as hell when my ace is trumped, try to follow the Culbertson laws . . . but all the time just thinking of him as a sort of Marquis of Queensbury stuffed away somewhere, eternally shuffling a deck of cards.

Then I got the shock of my life.

By appointment, I called on him. I'm the Advertising Manager of RKO-Radio and was to see him about the series of pictures, "My Bridge Experiences," he made for us, but instead of the stuffy little office I expected, I walked into the headquarters of one of America's major industries . . . an entire floor of a New York skyscraper.

A battery of forty or fifty stenographers were pounding away like a boiler factory. "What do they do?" I asked Bill Tower, Mr. Culbertson's assistant. "Fan mail and personal correspondence," said he. "How many a day?" I asked. "Oh, an average of 500." "500 a day! Why that's more fan mail than the biggest Hollywood stars get!" "Yes," said Tower, "but don't forget there are twenty million bridge players in the country . . . has any star that many movie fans?"

We walked down the line of clicking machines to another department. "This is the syndicate bureau . . . Mr. Culbertson's column is published, you know, in over 200 newspapers and Mrs. Culbertson's in almost as many . . . something like five million circulation daily . . . and over there is the publishing office . . . the Blue Book and Summary have sold almost 800,000 copies." I whistled. Eight hundred thousand is just eight times better than a 'best-seller' average!

All over the offices were gadgets . . . bridge tables, bridge lamps, playing cards, score pads, books, pencils, table covers, scoring devices, a hundred and one things bearing the Culbertson name and part of this fabulous industry into which I had stumbled.

"Now this," said Tower as he ushered me into another suite of offices, "is the teachers' bureau. Mr. Culbertson has almost 4,000 licensed teachers instructing in the Culbertson method." Another whistle from me. "4,000! Why, there aren't that many ten-cent stores in the country. How many pupils have they?" "Something like 600,000," he replied casually.

So this was bridge! Twenty million people playing every day. What an audience! Twenty million people—a third of the adult population of the country—vitally interested in one thing, with our Star, Ely Culbertson the supreme authority, laying down the law to them. What a ready-made audience for our pictures!

I revised my advertising ideas. "Hell, Bill," I said, "we've got a three-ring circus in these two-spool operas and all the time we've been thinking of 'em as side shows . . . I'm going back to the office and get out a "Bring 'Em Back Alive" press book and put out the kind of advertising stuff we would for the biggest feature . . . these pictures are going to pull people into theatres that haven't been there in months!"

"Mr. Culbertson is waiting," a secretary announced and I was ushered into the presence of one of the greatest showmen I ever met. I'll tell you about him next week.

SHOWMEN'S REVIEWS

S. O. S. Iceberg

(Universal)

Arctic Adventure

This Arctic adventure picture has been the object of much interest both within the industry and among theatre-goers for some time past. Thus there is a definite patronage awaiting its release. This knowledge, added to the fact that the show is a gripping novelty, gives it extra box office advantage.

Made almost in its entirety in Greenland and surrounding waters, it is the stark story of a group of polar explorers marooned on a drifting iceberg. Familiar names, with the exception of Rod LaRoque, who has been absent from the screen for some time, are lacking. Dialogue is held to a minimum. Actions of the players and natural elements, together with expressions and gestures expressive of the human reactions, carry the story.

Against its unusual adventure background, "S. O. S. Iceberg" tells a dramatic, tragic story. The comparatively minor romance atmosphere serves to stir further human interest. It boasts a continual thrill. Even the music, that in a great measure supplants dialogue, is emotion stirring in interpreting the story.

After the introduction, there is excitement in every sequence. There's the exploring party iced in; Lawrence setting out alone; the rest taking up his trail; terrific hardships, climaxed when the dog team plunges to destruction; Lawrence found almost dead, afloat on the drifting iceberg; panic; Dragan turning yellow; wireless stations all over the world getting the S. O. S. signals that fade before location is given; murder; Ellen flying in search, crashing against the berg; hunger; more murder.

Every foot of "S. O. S. Iceberg" is thrilling novelty. It's both educational and entertaining. As an example of accomplishment, it is a classic. Yet, while possessing the elements that are the backbone of almost every picture, its commercial possibilities will be best realized by those showmen who have the ability and ingenuity to tackle an unusual picture in an unusual way and convince their patrons that they have a picture that is really worthwhile seeing. That doesn't mean tieups with ice companies and electric refrigerator distributors; rather an extraordinary, forceful campaign.

Intensive efforts should be made to contact schools all the way from primary to high school grades. Similarly clubs and organizations should be interested. Line them up for the picture and the rank and file fans should follow in their footsteps.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Universal. Directed by Tay Garnett. Story by Dr. Arnold Fanck, leader of Greenland Expedition. Technical advisors, Dr. Fritz Loewe and Dr. Ernest Sorge, members of Wegener Expedition. Screenplay and continuity by Tom Reed. Photographed by Hans Schneeberger and Richard Angst. Dialogue by Edwin H. Knopf. Associate producer, Paul Kohner. Produced in Greenland with the cooperation of the Danish government. Expedition made camp on western coast of Greenland from May until December, 1932. and for short period in early 1933. Base of operations near Umanak. Knud Rasmussen, noted polar explorer, acting protectorate for expedition. Film editor, Andrew Marton. Sound engineer, Zoltan G. Kagl. Editorial supervision, Maurice Pivar. Assistant director, Robert Fellowes. Production manager, Alfred Stern. Original musical composition, Paul Desau. Running time, 70 minutes. Release date to be determined.

(United Artists)

Drama

The great Eugene O'Neill drama of the ambition-crazed Negro who rose in a flash from Pullman porter to native island emperor, and as rapidly descended to the depths of a fear-stricken, driveling idiot to meet a harrowing death, here comes to the screen. The production credit goes to the Krimsky-Cochran producing organization, and the exhibitor has much to sell.

It is, actually, a one-man picture, as it was a one-man play. In this instance the title role fell to the lot of perhaps one of the most capable of all Negro performers, Paul Robeson, physically a splendid specimen, in performing ability an unquestioned master. In addition to the imposing name of Robeson, there is the origin of the film, with Eugene O'Neill's name, and this particular play widely known, widely read and seen.

The small exhibitor in the outlying district, however, must anticipate that few will know much of O'Neill, few will have read his work, and fewer will have seen the play. To most of them, the name of Robeson will likely mean little. Here it will be necessary to convey something of the nature of the drama, Brutus Jones, the Negro buck who moves from a spiritual-singing community to Pullman porter, storms through Harlem as king pin of them all, kills his friend over crooked dice, is put to work with the chain gang, escapes after killing a guard, and finds himself eventually on a native island somewhere in the ocean. There, still driven by bounding ambition, he makes himself the Emperor Jones. When he sees the game is up he heads for the coast through the jungle, dressed in all his imperial majesty. The sound of an ever-pursuing tom-tom slowly pervades his consciousness, strips him of his bravado, and piece by piece, as his stark terror mounts in the night, he casts aside his regalia of emperor, eventually, a maddened craven, flinging himself down into the circle of his pursuers, dead.

Technically the picture offers much and is unusual. The only white role, that played by Dudley Digges, is handled with a fine touch. The story, particularly the latter sequences in the jungle, is strong meat, and must be handled as such in the selling. It is the type of production for which women's organizations and clubs should be contacted. It ends on a severely tragic note, the conclusion is harrowing, something which the exhibitor must bear in mind in his selling. It is not for children, but adults should be sold its excellence, and its origin.—Aaronson, New York.

Produced by John Krimsky and Gifford Cochran. Distributed by United Artists. From the play by Eugene O'Neill. Directed by Dudley Murphy. Screen version by DuBose Heyward. Photographed by Ernest Haller. Recording engineer, J. Kane. Release date, September 8, 1933. Running time, 80 minutes.

Golden Harvest

(Paramount-Rogers)

Comedy Drama

"Golden Harvest" has just about all the entertainment and production values necessary to a real money-making picture. Because of the nature of its fundamental farm story, and the way it's told, it has qualities to interest both sophisticates and the masses. It is directed and acted in a spirit of simple and wholesome sincerity.

The drama is dynamic without being vivid; love interest, never once sexy, makes for ideal and unexpected romance; the comedy treatment is light and homespun. Given a news-history background, it's modern and timely, combining rural and urban atmosphere. Not the least of its values is the fine photography.

"Golden Harvest" is a story of wheat; of Eben Martin and his two sons, Walt and Chris. Walt stayed home to till his father's increasing, mortgage plastered acres. Chris found his career in Chicago's grain pit. Falling prices bring foreclosed mortgages, Eben and Walt are impoverished almost to desperation; Chris grows fabulously wealthy gambling in grain futures. Walt inspires a farm strike, strives to hold his ruined neighbors in line. Chris tries to corner the market to hold prices up. Events overwhelm both into failure. Walt, before the Cabinet, suggests a price-pegging program to save agriculture and business.

That's the backbone. Interwoven is the sweet romance between Walt and Ellen; the Chris-Cynthia love story that has an inspiring climax. And there's the Loopey Lou and Lydia comedy contrast, wherein the unusual treatment and Roscoe Ates (sans his stuttering) color the dramatic motif with dozens of laughs. There's the spectacle of machine-age harvests; the exciting thrill of the grain pit. All give character to personalities, action and dialogue that is essentially entertainment.

Although there have been other farm pictures recently, "Golden Harvest" seems to have caught the spirit of the premise more effectively. It always seems close and real.

The picture, being out of the ordinary, necessitates extraordinary methods in selling. Its topic is one that should be given particular consideration in relation to the political and economic happenings of the day. Names of sufficient value are Dick Arlen, Chester Morris, Genevieve Tobin, Roscoe Ates, Julie Haydon, Berton Churchill and Elizabeth Patterson. The prestige of the author, Nina Wilcox Putnam, cannot be overlooked.

An advance campaign that carries a ring of truth, convincing patrons that you have a much better than ordinary show, should incite interest. That line should sell it to both adults and children.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Distributed by Paramount. A Charles R. Rogers production. Directed by Ralph Murphy from the novel by Nina Wilcox Putnam. Screen play by Casey Robinson. Photographed by Milton Krasner. Sound, Earl Hayman. Art director, Dave Garver. Running time, 70 minutes. Release date, Sept. 22, 1933.

The Secret of the Blue Room

(Universal)

Mystery

Inasmuch as mysteries are meant to maintain suspense and conceal the perpetrator of the inevitable crime or crimes, "The Secret of the Blue Room" fills the bill and should be found good all-around entertainment for all classes of patrons, especially for those who are devotees of the mystery film and the murder plot in screened drama.

The cast is salable, headed by Lionel Atwill, long master of the suspicion-engendering performance, and supported by Gloria Stuart, who has risen to a point where she is worthy of definite exhibitor notice; Paul Lukas, smooth and plausible in his performance; William Janney, young and giving a reasonably good portrayal of a rather difficult role.

These names will look well and should attract patronage on the marquee when connected with a mystery film. The title is sufficiently compelling, giving every indication of the type of film the patronage may expect. The exhibitor, with the assurance of a really mystifying mystery, may well use the exploitation method of challenging the audience to find the murderer, or of running copy which requests audiences not to tell their friends and neighbors the secret of the blue room, in order not to spoil the picture for them. These and other more or less conventional approaches in the selling of this type of film, all should find their places effectively in this instance.

The story has Atwill and his daughter, Miss Stuart, visited in their castle home by three suitors for the hand of Miss Stuart—Janney, Lukas and Onslow Stevens. Atwill, at Janney's insistence, tells the story of the blue room, one of the long-unused and locked bedrooms, in which, 20 years before, Atwill's sister and later a detective had met mysterious deaths. In order to prove his courage to Miss Stuart, Janney offers to sleep that night in the room, if Stevens and Lukas will follow him in turn. Janney disappears during the night, Stevens is killed the following night and the police are called in. Through a ruse planned by Lukas and Edward Arnold, the inspector on the case, the murderer is trapped, the conclusion handled well, the murderer quite unexpected in his identity.

The picture is not in any sense unusual, yet it possesses all the elements of effective mystery. As such, with a promise by the exhibitor of a mystery difficult or impossible of solution by the theatre audience, the picture may be sold as entertaining program material. There is no reason why the youngsters should not see it, though it has a few sequences which may raise juvenile hairs.—AARONSON, New York.

Produced and distributed by Universal. Directed by Kurt Neumann. Story by Erich Phillipi. Screen play and dialogue by William Hurlbut. Photographed by Charles Stumar. Release date, July 20, 1933. Running time, 65 minutes.

Mr. Broadway

(Broadway-Hollywood)

Pictorial Review

In the nature of a Broadway advertisement, more suitable and salable in the neighborhood theatre in and around New York than in the hinterland, "Mr. Broadway" wanders about the big street in the big town, picturing in snatches of a moment various notable and notorious figures of the day in the sporting and theatrical world.

Johnny Walker is credited with the direction of the piece, and himself takes a rather offstage part, while the real guide of the tour of Broadway is Ed Sullivan, columnist of the New York Daily News and, it must be said, rather a better reporter than performer.

The small-town exhibitor is in the position of being able to sell flashes of big names for what they may be worth to his particular audience, plus the name of Ed Sullivan, more or less well known columnist of the popular style of the moment.

Under the guidance of Mr. Sullivan, the film moves from the Hollywood Restaurant to the Paradise Club and then to the Central Park Casino, while the floor shows go on, and Sullivan appears either at the microphone of the master of ceremonies for this particular picture, or seated with some one and pointing out the not always impressive sights and individuals.

In the Casino, in evening clothes, Sullivan sits with Walker and Josephine Dunn, and to them recounts a story of the big street, that of two pals, who are drawn apart to the point of one virtually murdering his friend, then committing suicide, as the result of the slick handling of a woman. As Sullivan recounts the story, it is enacted on the screen, and, highly melodramatic, makes for a few minutes of action and story.

For the rest, and that means the most part, the "names" are seen, and in some cases heard in the three night clubs visited by Sullivan, on the socalled "Dawn Patrol." Not especially impressive, the film may do in midweek, in the event the exhibitor thinks the names involved will carry enough weight with the curious among his patronage to draw them to the theatre. The persons pictured are appended as a cast of characters. Actually they appear only for brief flashes.—AARONSON, New York.

The Private Life of Henry VIII

(United Artists)

Comedy-Drama

Under the fine touch of Alexander Korda, notable English director, England's great obese and highly amorous monarch of the sixteenth century, who is recorded in history as the Bluebeard of kings, appears on the screen in the person of Charles Laughton, one of the most able of English screen players.

The picture gives Laughton his greatest opportunity to date, without doubt, and he makes an unforgettable most of that opportunity. From the standpoint of the exhibitor attempting to sell the picture, Laughton will be chiefly remembered for his role as the Emperor Nero of Rome in Cecil B. deMille's "The Sign of the Cross." Outside of Laughton the exhibitor has no salable name to attach to the marquee, as the players are all English, but it is a one-man picture, and since Laughton is that man, there is little loss in the lack of familiarity with the host of supporting players.

There is room for wide open selling and exploitation in the title and its indication of the Bluebeard of kings, who married six women and caused two of the six to pay for their infidelity with their deaths under the ax of the executioner. The first wife was divorced, the second, the famed Anne Boleyn, was beheaded; the third died giving Henry his first son and third child; the fourth, the German Duchess of Cleves, was his wife for only a day and part of a night; the fifth went the cruel, quick way of Anne Boleyn, and the sixth, an elderly nurse, henpecked the aging king into taking care of his health and, as the picture closes, is characterized by him: "and the best is the worst."

Perhaps Mr. Korda and the scribes have taken liberties with sixteenth century English royal history. It does not matter, for they have turned out a picture which is permeated with flashing dialogue, risque though enormously amusing and entertaining situations, and the powerful picture of a king who was a man. Laughton has made Henry of history a definitely human figure, running the gamut of hilarious, boisterous eating and laughing, hunting and drinking, loving and storming, and driven to the depths of genuine grief as the wife he thought was really true and whom he really loved, was revealed as an adultress, her lover his own personal aide.

The highlighting sequence of the entire film is the delightful bit in which the Duchess of Cleves, determined on a divorce so that she can marry one of the king's retainers, makes herself unattractive as possible, then plays cards with the king on the royal bed, to win from him his jewelry, much money and her freedom.

A preview of the picture will enable the exhibitor to catch innumerable flashes, situations which will make for powerful advertising copy. He may well place selling emphasis on the comedy, the flashing performance of Laughton. The film is beautifully mounted. It is a costume picture, but only in its setting. The touch of star and director made it an outstanding, almost brilliant production, and as such it should be sold.—AARONSON, New York.

Saturday's Millions

(Universal)

Comedy-Drama

First of the seasonal football pictures, this show has much besides topical timeliness. Supporting the sport appeal is a different story premise in which the standard elements of drama, romance, comedy, thrill, spectacle are nicely balanced. In line with present production trends, character portrayal assumes major importance. Thus while there is enough sport appeal to interest football fans, there is much to lure the other type of patrons.

The title is a natural. Short and unusual, it possesses that ring that stirs curiosity. This asset is made more valuable by the fact that the story is appearing currently in Saturday Evening Post. In many ways the picture is a departure. Name football players are conspicuous by their absence, the entire story being pictured by established screen personalities. Likewise, story treatment has been given a different slant; the hero is a heel all the way through, even to his last grandstand play in which he loses the big game. Yet, because of this treatment, the boy is continually recipient of audience sympathy.

The story is localed in a Midwest college town. Fowler is an All-American who commercializes his "rep," has little regard for school spirit and is generally the antithesis of the school hero. Human interest is introduced by the bringing in of his father, Ezra, who played one season for Midwest 40 years ago. Ezra cannot understand the actions of his boy. The romantic angle takes on an added color when Joan's father turns out to be an old teammate of Ezra. The Andy-Thelma comedy breaking in to counterbalance the building drama and the gambling clique cabal in action, the story comes down to the football game in which Jim plays as he never did before, but State gets a three-point lead and holds it despite the frantic last-minute Allan-Jim pass that fails when Jim drops the ball.

Football furore naturally is the peg upon which to hang advance interest. Tieups with schools, readaptations of all the circus ideas used in connection with "70,000 Witness," "The All-American" and other gridiron pictures are strictly in line. News and sport page contacts will take care of the men and boys. No one will overlook the possibilities attached to Saturday Evening Post distributors; starting now, if you have the picture booked, inform readers when they can see the picture.

But for the older folk and the women, who might fail to enthuse to that line, concentrate on the romance, the father and son twist and the well worked out regeneration angle. The lead names, Robert Young, Leila Hyams, Johnny Mack Brown, Mary Carlisle and Grant Mitchell, should be effective in this connection.

For those who like to see new faces, Lucille Lund, the College Humor All-American girl contest winner, playing the part of the society reporter, affords alert managers an opportunity to cash in on the fan excitement which that contest created.

"Saturday's Millions" should be more than satisfactory to all types of fans, children as well as adults. It's clean in every phase, sex suggestion being entirely eliminated without losing any thrill.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Universal. Directed by Edward Sedgwick. Original story by Lucien Cary. Screen play by Dale Van Avery. Photography by Charles Stumar. Running time, 72 minutes. Release date, to be determined.

I Was a Spy

(Gaumont-British-Fox)

Drama

Here is the most vivid, the most moving and the most exciting motion picture ever to come from a British studio. [A cabled first account of the production's London preview appeared in the issue of August 5.]

It gives for the first time a glimpse of the hidden armies in the World War: the simple peasants who ran messages through the sewers of espionage, and by tiny fragments of apparently innocent speech built up the devastating intelligence report which formed the spearhead of action. There is not much war in the whole picture; rather is it a reflex of war picked up just behind the zone of battle. Only once or twice does the full fury of war descend upon our characters in shrapnel; for the rest they are torn more in the soul than the flesh for all that they move among the maimed, choking, half demented casualties from the field.

Martha Cnockhaert (Madeline Carroll), a young Belgian girl, is ordered by the German medical officer (Gerald Du Maurier) to serve as a nurse in the German troop hospital. Because she is first a woman and then a Belgian she goes and it is only when she has worked her way into the confidence of a grateful German staff that her Belgian compatriots absorb her into an amazing espionage system they have built up. Operating with Martha is a young hospital orderly, Stephen (Herbert Marshall), and the two crawl along an aqueduct to blow up a dump of gas cylinders prepared for the first surprise chemical attack.

Martha passes word to the allies that a huge gathering of German troops is arranged for at an open air church; she learns that an air raid will be carried out, and then, when it is too late to prevent the raid, she is ordered by the German Kommandant (Conrad Veidt) to take all the convalescents to attend the service, and later she must send on their few belongings to their families. With one hand she has healed and with the other killed them.

Later, to get most important information, she accepts the Kommandant's proposal to accompany him to Brussels, where the Kaiser is expected. She buys her information with her honor and when later the Royal visit is cancelled and it is too late to pass through the information, suspicion falls upon her. A raid takes place at the hour originally set for the Kaiser's arrival. Only the Kommandant, a few high officers and Martha had known it. So the net begins to draw about her. She is offered her life if she will give away her confederates and instructors. She refuses, but Stephan admits his complicity, and takes sentence to save Martha.

There are supreme moments of high drama, yet there is no heaviness, no morbid detail of war. The well knit story indicts not the guns of battle so much as the silent brooding of spirit which they produce. Cleverly the story has been contrived without any national feeling at all; the participants are intensely human, the beauty of Miss Carroll's work being responded to by the other principals.

Photographically and in every other technical detail the picture represents a new high standard. For the Belgian street scenes some of the greatest sets ever erected in any studio were undertaken. The production cost exceeded that of any previous British film, and every dime was well spent.

American release is assured through Fox, and it is this writer's opinion that theatre results will give American exhibitors a new interest and a new faith in British-made product. It must be regarded as a pioneering triumph for Victor Saville, the young Englishman director. For American release one suggests elimination of an epilogue introduced as a concession to popular British sentiment. If that is dispensed with, every iota of prejudice will have disappeared, leaving the picture told in a universal tongue.—Mooring, London.

Produced by Gaumont-British. Directed by Victor Saville. Distribution in U. S. A. by Fox. Story by Martha McKenna (based on historical fact). Scenario and dialogue by W. P. Lipscomb. Additional dialogue by Ian Hay. Photography by C. Van Enger. Art direction by A. Junge. Costumes by Gordon Conway. Recorded by W. Salter. Running time, 75 minutes.

Busy Bodies

(MGM-Hal Roach)

Laurel and Hardy

Dialogue held to an absolute minimum, this Laurel and Hardy comedy is pretty much a throwback to the silent shorts. Slow tempoed pantomime productive of all kinds of hilarity predominates. Most of the action takes place in a lumber yard and wood working mill, although the opening shot has the funsters riding along in a battered Ford, to bring about a phonograph gag substituting for a radio. The gags in the mill include Hardy getting his hands caught in a window casing and Laurel's efforts to free him, Laurel socking Hardy with a glue brush, resorting to shaving to get the hairs of the fat man's chin, Hardy taking a trip through the sawdust ventilator. In the finale the two are again in their car, which is sawed down the center as they run afoul a band saw. The abundance of laughs, with the added novelty of but little dialogue, should make it pleasing to all types of fans. Running time, 18 minutes.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Salt Water Daffy

(Vitaphone)

Good Comedy

With Jack Haley, one of the better known of Broadway's musical comedy star comedians, in the lead, and Shep Howard as his stooge, this comedy of the two boys who get into the navy by mistake and get into complications with the petty officer, the captain, whose watch Howard had previously "lifted," and a spurious visiting diplomat, has a good quota of laughs, and Haley's entertaining mannerisms and by-play for effectiveness. When they reveal the fake count they are about to be rewarded, but when the captain discovers they were the lifters of his watch, the reward turns into a ton of potatoes, all to be peeled.—Running time 21 minutes.

Hot from Petrograd

(Vitaphone)

Entertaining

There is entertainment of the song and dance variety in this number of the "Melody Masters" series, featuring Dave Apollon and his orchestra. As Russian immigrants, they entertain in the steerage to America. A booker aboard signs them, and Dave then assembles a Russian band. Next seen in a cafe, the orchestra entertains with popular numbers, while specialty performers do their part. Entertaining, and with elaborate set in the cafe sequences, the short is lively and of good quality.—Running time, 10 minutes.

The Gay Nighties

(RKO Radio)

Fair Comedy

Those who like the comic combination of Clark and McCullough will doubtless enjoy this comedy, wherein the pair, as campaign managers for a certain candidate, pull their nonsensical gags and attempt to frame the rival candidate in an arrangement in the hotel rooms with the attractive wife of their own candidate. The excitement waxes fast and furious at times, much in the nature of slapstick, but the short as a whole has a few laughs, and is rather amusing.—Running time, 20 minutes.

King Klunk

(Universal)

Amusing

Pooch the pup and his girl are in Africa, when a giant ape captures the girl. Pooch rescues her and they bring back the ape to exhibit in a sideshow. Everything goes well until the ape breaks loose, captures the girl again and escapes to the top of a skyscraper with her. Pooch effects another rescue, via a cartoonist's idea of an aeroplane, and destroys the monster. It is an amusing takeoff in cartoon form on "King Kong."—Running time, 9 minutes.

Barber Shop Blues

(Vitaphone)

Good

Claude Hopkins, well known colored band leader, and his orchestra herein do their stuff. An elderly colored barber wins a fortune on the sweepstakes, and renovates his shop, employing Hopkins and his colored band to entertain the patrons. The shoe shining boys tap dance and whirl about their work, the barbers shave to the rhythm, while the band plays numerous popular numbers in an entertaining manner.—Running time, 9 minutes.

LARGEST RADIO PLANT IN WORLD READY NOV. 15

35 Studios in Radio City Will Cover 400,000 Square Feet; Auditorium Studio Three Stories; Special Plans for Visitors

Radio's newest technical advance in the competition it is waging for a top position as an entertainment purveyor will be accomplished November 15 by David Sarnoff's Radio Corporation of America, when its subsidiary, National Broadcasting Company, will dedicate at Radio City the largest broadcasting plant in the world.

Too, on November 15, NBC will celebrate its seventh anniversary. Also, that date will mark the passing of another milestone in radio progress. Thirteen years ago, Dr. Frank Conrad, of Westinghouse Electric, reported the results of the Harding presidential election through Station KDKA, Pittsburgh. That program, broadcast from Dr. Conrad's garage, inaugurated the world's first regular daily broadcast schedule. Previously, radio had sporadic broadcasts.

Since Dr. Conrad's inception of daily broadcasts, motion picture exhibitors have variously spoken derogatorily against certain competitive tactics of radio, principally broadcasts by socalled "big-name" motion picture and theatrical stars, and the inviting of thousands of the public to witness broadcasts in the radio studios.

Thirty-five Studios

Merlin Hall Aylesworth, president of NBC, also of RKO, in announcing inauguration of the new broadcasting plant, outlined the extent of the facilities to be made available, as follows:

"The new studios in the central building of Rockefeller Center (RCA Building), are the largest, most modern and most completely equipped broadcasting studios in the world. Their opening will be an event of real importance to the whole listening public of the United States as it will result, through better facilities, in general improvement of program transmission.

"The National Broadcasting Company will have 35 studios in Radio City—covering some 400,000 square feet of space. Sixteen studios will be completely equipped and in operation on the night of the opening. Eleven more, including five audition studios, will be complete except for technical equipment. The remaining eight, occupying the sixth and seventh floors, will be left entirely unfinished for the time being. These floors will be available for future development."

One Studio Three Stories High

"The auditorium studio will be the largest in the world. It is 78 by 132 feet, and three stories in height. Along one side, at the second floor level, runs a balcony which will seat more than 250 spectators. Opposite this is a semicircular stage, which will be large enough to accommodate a 100-piece orchestra," reported Mr. Aylesworth.

"The next largest studio is 50 by 89 feet, and two stories in height. Known as the 'Radio Guild Studio,' it is equipped with a stage and a glass curtain.

"Next come two studios 50 by 80, four 30 by 50, and two 25 by 40. All these studios are two stories high. Along one side they have galleries for spectators, separated from the main portion of the studios by glass. These galleries are equipped with loud-speakers so that the spectators may hear the program they are watching.

"On the eighth floor is a 'Children's Studio,' 20 by 30, which will be used exclusively for children's programs, and is appropriately decorated. Adjoining it is a special lounge room for children.

"On the ninth floor is a group of four studios with an unusual arrangement. They are built around one central control room of circular design, the floor of which consists of a huge turn-table. Thus it may be swung mechanically to face any of the four surrounding studios. It is possible that this may be of great use in the future for television broadcasting, since all that would be necessary to shift scenes would be to swing from one studio to another.

"The remainder of the completed studios are smaller, for the use of speakers.

Arrangements for Visitors

"The whole studio section has been so arranged that it will be possible to accommodate the largest number of visitors with the least confusion. Visitors will enter through a large mezzanine rotunda, from which they will take special elevators to the second floor lobby, where they will be greeted by hostesses. Here are large lounge and smoking rooms, opening out on terraces overlooking the street.

"From this floor visitors will be taken, again by special elevators, to the fourth and ninth floors, on which are the balconies overlooking the two and three-story studios.

"Arrangements also have been made so that visitors may view the main control room through which programs are routed to the networks, and the control room of the huge air conditioning plant. These are on the fifth and tenth floors, respectively.

"Behind the control board is the main equipment room, in which are some 400 panels similar to those in a telephone switch board."

SOME STATISTICS

NBC's new broadcasting plant at Rockefeller Center will be the largest in the world, according to Merlin Hall Aylesworth, president, who offers some statistics:

NBC space—400,000 sq. ft.
Number of studios—35.
Number in operation at opening—16.
Miles of wire—1,250.
Miles of cable—89.
Miles of broadcast electric conduit—125.
Microphone outlets—250.
Soundproof doors—296.
Electric clocks—325.
Wall fabrics—244,908 sq. ft.
Drapes—4,698 sq. ft.
Rockwool for soundproofing—500,000 pounds (11 carloads).
Lumber—175,000 lineal feet (4½ carloads).
Perforated transite for soundproofing 153,600 sq. ft.

EDWARD FINNEY

Ed Finney Joins Monogram Pictures

W. Ray Johnston, president of Monogram Pictures, this week appointed Edward Finney as director of advertising and publicity and story editor for his company. Mr. Finney will leave his present position, as publicity director at United Artists, on October 1.

Mr. Johnston said his plans for the coming year include the building up of his organization to handle the biggest program Monogram has sponsored since its inception.

"It is our plan to build a strong advertising, publicity and exploitation campaign around each picture," said Mr. Johnston. "I believe that Ed Finney, with his long training in the business and his experience in handling big pictures, will give us the type of showmanship material we need."

Mr. Finney was associated with United Artists for six years, first as press book editor and then as assistant advertising and publicity director before his last appointment. He has been in the business 12 years and prior to his United Artists connection was with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Associated Exhibitors in executive capacities in the advertising and sales departments. Finney was a newspaper man before entering the film business and is a C. C. N. Y. alumnus.

Set Record Time Shipping Film to Bogota, Colombia

A record of four days, 19 hours and 45 minutes was established for the shipping of film recently when two reels, weighing 69½ pounds, were shipped from San Francisco to Bogota, capital of Colombia, by the Colombian National Federation of Coffee Growers on the Coast to Bogota headquarters.

The shipment was carried aboard a Railway Express plane in San Francisco at 7:20 P. M., Monday evening; reached Miami, via United Air Lines, American Airways and Eastern Air Transport at 5:40 A. M., Wednesday, and left by the Pan-American Airways at 8 A. M. Delivery was completed at Bogota at 3:05 P. M., Friday.

Get and screen Paramount's *"Golden Harvest" as soon as possible!

Note:

Exactly one year ago another surprise picture produced by Charles R. Rogers and directed by Ralph Murphy went out and cleaned up the biggest grosses of the Fall. This picture was "70,000 Witnesses"... "GOLDEN HARVEST" with its unusual story angle, splendid acting and astute direction offers the same possibilities to all showmen.

*"GOLDEN HARVEST" with Richard Arlen, Chester Morris, Genevieve Tobin, Rosco Ates. Directed by Ralph Murphy. A Charles R. Rogers Production. A Paramount Picture.

A print will be in your Paramount Exchange, September 20th

"MAN'S CASTLE" SECOND BIG FILM FROM COLUMBIA

Borzage Masterpiece Follows on Heels of Successful "Lady For A Day"—Hailed as Great Love Story of Two-a-Day Calibre

Columbia is now prepared to give the country its second great picture for the 1933-34 season, "Man's Castle," directed by Frank Borzage. With "Lady For A Day," a Frank Capra production, already released and a recognized hit, Columbia is forging ahead with its policy of big pictures by big directors.

"Man's Castle" is the first Columbia picture Frank Borzage has done. Shooting was finished the latter part of August, and the film is now being cut.

Spencer Tracy and Loretta Young are the stars, and the supporting cast boasts a number of outstanding performers.

One of the features of "Man's Castle" is the immense and realistic set depicting a settlement on the river banks of New York.

Those privileged to see it are unanimous in acclaiming it as the finest love romance since "Seventh Heaven." It was adapted by Jo Swerling.

"Lady For A Day" Wins Raves of N. Y. Critics

"Lady For A Day," Columbia's smash hit and the first Frank Capra production of the season, literally packed them in at Radio City Music Hall last week, and is proceeding to do the same thing all over the United States.

Here are some of the newspaper raves:

William Boehnel, World-Telegram: "Required motion picture going for the week includes 'Lady For A Day' . . . a grand story told in a grand way."

Rose Pelswick, Evening Journal: ". . . a magnificent picture. Columbia Pictures can point with pride to this production, and this column can only urge you not to miss it."

Regina Crewe, American: "Wonderfully effective entertainment . . . one of the few films that will be remembered always."

Mordaunt Hall, Times: ". . . its entertainment value is not to be denied."

Richard Watts, Jr., Herald Tribune: ". . . so wisely amiable in its appeal that it must be set down as one of the most engaging cinema orgies of the season . . . I enjoyed it enormously."

Bland Johaneson, Daily Mirror: "Rush right over to Radio City if you want to see a movie which combines every happy element of entertainment. . . . It is a delightful picture and a great one; probably, even at this early date, one of the ten best pictures of 1933."

Kate Cameron, Daily News: ". . . delightfully presented . . . thoroughly entertaining from beginning to end."

Thornton Delehanty, Evening Post: " . . . lively, convincing and uncommonly entertaining . . . has an insinuating charm."

Capra, Borzage, Milestone and Gilbert Miller Pictures Promise To Be Big Ones

Three of the greatest directors in motion pictures and the foremost American stage director are turning out pictures for Columbia.

The three directors are Lewis Milestone, Frank Capra and Frank Borzage. The stage director is Gilbert Miller.

"Lady For A Day," directed by Frank Capra, was the first of the big pictures to be released for the 1933-34 season. Taken from the story by Damon Runyon and adapted by Robert Riskin, it received unanimous acclaim. Capra is already at work on his second, a starring production for Robert Montgomery. It is "Night Bus," from the Cosmopolitan story by Samuel Hopkins Adams. Robert Riskin, who did "Lady For A Day," is adapting it.

Frank Borzage has recently completed "Man's Castle," his first for Columbia. This idyllic love tale adapted by Jo Swerling from a play by Lawrence Hazard, features Spencer Tracy and Loretta Young. His second Columbia picture is a story by Jo Swerling, tentatively known as "No Cannons Roar," based on a novel by Ferenc Molnar, and work has already begun on it.

Lewis Milestone has been selected by Columbia to direct a story by Laurence Stallings, tentatively titled "Red Square."

Grabbing Columbia Shorts

Exhibitors are booking Columbia shorts as rapidly as they are released. The shorts for the new season reach a new high, appealing to all tastes and modes. Exhibitors have expressed admiration at their unusual quality. Twenty-six two-reel comedies, as yet untitled, are being made, as well as seven single-reel series.

The two-reel comedies include a Mickey McGuire, a George Sidney and Charles Murray, and a Smith and Dale Series. Another series with musical comedy headliners, popular stage comedians, outstanding radio personalities and famous Hollywood names will be featured.

Completes 1932-33 List

Columbia Pictures is completing production on the four pictures which will complete its 1932-33 program. "My Woman," is already in the cutting room. Shooting on "Fury of the Jungle," "East of Fifth Avenue" and "Man of Steel" are in their advanced stages. "Fury of the jungle" would have been finished long ago except for the interruption of the strike. "East of Fifth Avenue" will go into the cutting room any day now.

"Man of Steel," the Jack Holt picture, is in its last week of production. Fay Wray has the feminine lead.

West Coast Studios Speed Production

Columbia is keeping to its slogan of "March Forward," by having seven productions in work, 18 being rushed into shape and six in the cutting room. The pictures now in active production include, "Man's Castle," "My Woman," "Fury of the Jungle," "East of Fifth Avenue," "Man of Steel," "Hold the Press," and "The Lady is Willing."

The 18 productions being readied for the cameras will be started in a few weeks. "The Ninth Guest" is awaiting cast assignments. "World's Fair" is in script form. The script of "Night Bus," with Robert Montgomery, is nearing completion. Song hits for "Let's Fall in Love" are being written by Ted Koehler and Harold Arlen. The remaining pictures awaiting production cues are "Take the Witness," "The Most Precious Thing in Life," "Once to Every Woman," "Sisters Under the Skin," "Fighting Code" and "Straightaway."

Among the productions now in the cutting room are "Above the Clouds," "The Thrill Hunter" and "Police Car 17."

Other important productions being prepared are "No Cannons Roar," "Fog," "Shadows of Sing Sing," "Hello Big Boy," "Whom the Gods Destroy," "Produce the Body," "House of Murder," and "Murder in the Studio."

"Lady" Gets Top Spots, Best Time Over Country

Columbia's "Lady For A Day" is capturing the best spots, preferred playing time and extended runs. Theatres which formerly played a picture four days are giving this Columbia moneymaker a full week.

The picture is playing this week in first-run houses in Boston, Syracuse, Los Angeles, Frisco, Cleveland, Detroit, Washington, Columbus, Dayton, Cincinnati, Buffalo, Louisville, Terre Haute, Fort Wayne, Trenton, Lowell, Rochester, Troy, Schenectady, Albany, Hartford, Providence, Chicago, Akron and Stamford.

Backing up this remarkable list of engagements is an exceptionally strong publicity and exploitation campaign. In addition to the "Apple Annie" stunt pulled nationally and repeated in a score of cities, Columbia is backing first-runs with a naltional advertising campaign and a broadcasting campaign in fifty key cities.

"Brief Moment" for Roxy

"Brief Moment," Columbia's picture which opens Friday, Sept. 29th, at the Roxy Theatre, New York, is attracting great notices and business everywhere.

"Brief Moment" was adapted from the S. N. Behrman play of the same name and stars Carole Lombard and Gene Raymond.

"Lady" Pressbook Praised

Columbia's pressbook on "Lady For A Day" has been the recipient of large bunches of orchids.

The entire "Apple Annie" stunt that grabbed columns of space in the N. Y. dailies before the picture opened at the Music Hall, was taken bodily from the pressbook.

YOU CAN'T SELL GOLD WITH APPEAL OF BRASS

SUPPOSE you were in the market for a car?

Several automobile agencies listed you as a prospect and sent their salesmen to your home or office.

WHAT WOULD BE your reaction if the expensive car salesman drove up in a cheap car? Your entire favorable mental trend toward the high-priced vehicle would suffer. Every desire for one would temporarily be detoured because of the psychological effect.

YET there are thousands of exhibitors today who in their panicky effort to hold down overhead are succeeding admirably in reducing receipts simultaneously by trying to sell forthcoming talking pictures with poor trailers. We know of nothing so detrimental in selling a coming attraction as utilization of unattractive trailers. This effort brings forth an avalanche of adjectives on a sound track to the ears of prospects with accompanying reproductions which somehow belittle the sales effort.

IF YOU WERE a tailor you certainly would not expect your salesmen to wear shabby clothes. Then why do you for the sake of a few dollars destroy every remaining possibility to bring into your theatre tomorrow, today's audience?

A TRAILER is presumed to be a sample of the product your customers will get. How can you expect theatregoers to become enthused over a coming picture if you haven't sufficient courage of your own convictions? The sound track on poor trailers is a lot of conversation, and little else. Talking picture trailers are effective merely because prospective customers hear the voices of their favorites; they listen to the actual music; they get a fast slant of the story.

THE SUBSEQUENT RUN house is faced with the same situation as the first run in its effort to attract additional business or at least to get customers to come back. First runs invariably use the regular talking picture trailer because to do otherwise would be trying to the intelligence of their audiences.

WE KNOW of exhibitors whose hackneyed ideas and method of operations calls for a standing order of two 24-sheet stands; so many sixes; threes and ones. Every picture regardless of box-office possibilities receives the same treatment. And, of course, the only change they ever made was to save $2 a week more or less by substituting a poor trailer for a regular talking picture trailer.

IN THEATRES under our close observation we find that exhibitors concentrate on one production each week and depend entirely upon talking picture trailers of coming attractions to sell the subsequent shows. That is how important talking picture trailers are and they have regularly proven themselves dependable in the matter of enhancing interest and curiosity in future features.

IF YOU EXHIBITORS use the same old routine in printing programs, window cards and other accessories and merely giving titles, stars and dates, please give them at least a real selling talking picture trailer composed of excerpts from the film.

THE WRITER recalls that even when big time vaudeville contemplated its last come-back, the importance of talking trailers was stressed by executives. Four big acts made talking trailers at their own expense because by seeing and hearing them a week in advance, greater enthusiasm was created and better business was sure to result.

TAKE A HALF-HOUR off from the film row conversational parley and spend it in your theatre with your staff. Talk the matter over with them and we'll bet you dollars to doughnuts that their unanimous opinion will be that talking picture trailers where scenes and voices from the attraction itself are regularly used invariably are much more interesting, attention-creating and sustaining subjects; will sell prospective customers 99 times out of a 100 if the feature is half-way good.

IT'S SMART to be economical but dumb to be penny-wise and pound foolish.

In the accompanying article, the writer discourses on trailers, good and bad. He maintains that no class house can afford to cheapen its screen. A clothing salesman can't afford to wear shabby clothes. Likewise, a theatre dare not sell its forthcoming screen entertainment with a dull, meaningless trailer. Exhibitors who read this article will know it will hit home.

JENKINS' COLYUM

Lamar, Colo.

Dear Herald:

It is a relief to get off the arid tableland where the crops are practically all burned up and get down into the irrigated valley of the Arkansas river. Here the crops are fine and things look prosperous. Alfalfa, sugar beets and melons are the main crops and are grown profusely in this valley from Pueblo to the Kansas line.

At Rocky Ford we met L. L. Roberts, who operates the Grand theatre, which formerly was one of the Fox circuit. Mr. Roberts was arranging with the director of the local band for a series of concerts to be played in connection with his picture programs.

E. C. King operates the Rourke theatre at La Junta. This town is another center for Rocky Ford melons. They call them all "Rocky Fords" and La Junta ought to make a kick about that because La Junta melons are just as good as Rocky Ford melons and you pay the same price for 'em in the cafes.

C. W. Simons operates the Simons theatre at Los Animas. He's a showman with an experience that dates back to the time when the flickers first began to flicker and he was "Broncho Billy's" official sexton. We had a delightful visit with him and Mrs. Simons. Los Animas is another Rocky Ford melon town.

Fred Lee is another oldtimer in the show business who operates the Victory theatre here in Lamar. There are two theatres in Lamar, the Iris and Victory. We didn't get to meet the manager of the Iris as he was away when we called. That was tough on both of us. The Iris was playing "Gold Diggers" and that made business mighty bad for the Victory, but Mr. Lee didn't seem to be discouraged on that account.

Garden City, Kan.

There, it turned out just as we told you it would last week. When we hit the Kansas line there stood old man Hay Fever waiting for us and he flagged us down and jumped into the car and said: "Say there, you old reprobate, I've been looking for you all summer. Where have you been?" And we replied, "Cachoo, cachoo, snonobyourdabbissness," or something like that. Any man who can drive around the country with the hay fever and be sweet and agreeable to exhibitors is entitled to a congressional medal. The Democrats ought to do something about this; they are trying to regulate everything else.

Frank F. Northrup operates the Northrup, at Syracuse. The Northrup is a much finer theatre than we found there on our visit some years ago. The other one looked like a livery barn, the Northrup looks like a theatre, and Mr. and Mrs. Northrup looked like people who knew how a theatre ought to be managed. We had a delightful visit with them and that helped to relieve this durned hay fever.

Cimarron is bounded on the north by a vast arid plain and on the south by the Arkansas river and a lot of atmosphere that is so dry that it cracks open. Frank D. Morris operates the Morris theatre and he is the most optimistic cuss in Kansas. He says, "No, we haven't raised a crop in four years but we are going to have a good crop next year." Can you beat that? That's the way with these jayhawkers, the ice cream and cake is just over the hill, but boy, we'd want a little sowbelly and beans in the meantime to make sure we get over the hill.

Homer A. Ellison manages the State theatre here in Garden City, which belongs to the Fox circuit. Homer says he met E. E. Sprague and us at the Brown Palace hotel in Denver three years ago and that we put on a party. Why Homer, you ought to be ashamed of yourself, we never put on a party in our whole life, no sir, we never did, that is, not much of a party. Homer, you are mistaken.

Plainville, Kan.

We asked C. C. Sterrett of the Palace theatre at Kinsley when they had their last rain and he said, "Well, let me see. I was born in 1871." And we said, "Well, that's far enough back; how's your business?" And he said, "Good." There you are again, these Jayhawkers have got the world beat. They never run up the white flag.

John Schnack of the Electric theatre at Larned is said to be the oldest exhibitor in point of service in Kansas since the passing of our old friend John Patti of Lawrence. Patti is said to have brought the first motion picture machine into Kansas.

We met Mr. Wooten, who operates the opposition house here in Larned, for the first time, and we only had a few minutes with him. Our guess is that two theatres in Larned is aplenty.

L. W. Morris operates the Plaza theatre at Great Bend for the O. K. Mason chain. L. W. is a HERALD fan, and that means that he is a theatre operator who knows his business; we never knew an exception. The HERALD and Good Operation are twin brothers. They are both the same age.

Warren Weber of the Ellendale theatre at Ellendale sets his clock by "What the Picture Did for Me" and he never lets it run down. His chief fault is that he don't report to that department. He ought to be ashamed of himself.

Mrs. H. F. Wiggins has a brand new theatre at Ellsworth and it's a doodle. She calls it the Uptown. Her husband took us across the street to a cafe and told the waitress to "draw two." Seems like we heard that expression before.

▽

At Lincoln we found Mayme Musselman, who is a constant contributor to "What the Picture Did for Me," powdering her nose, frizzing her hair and packing her grips to go to the World's Fair at Chicago. Did you ever hear of an exhibitor before who could go to the World's Fair? Ray, her recreant husband, was hobbling around with a broken ankle that he received sliding to third base. We hope Ray behaves himself like a husband ought to while Mayme is gone. A lot of 'em don't.

Lawrence Gilbreath still operates the New Isis at Lucas. Lawrence is the hardest working guy in Kansas without any exception. He's the mayor of the town, justice of the peace, city marshal, town clerk, and they wanted to make him superintendent of the Sunday school but he wouldn't have it. He also runs a grocery store in his spare time.

Mrs. Moore of the Moore theatre here in Plainville invited Mr. Ringler of the Mid-West film company out of K. C. and us up to her home to a fried chicken dinner last night, and oh boy, you ought to see that Ringler mow away chicken and mashed potatoes. George Moore was away when we called the last time, but of course he would be here this time. Well, we have spent a mighty pleasant Sunday with them, just as we always do when we come here.

What the Picture Did for Me
MOTION PICTURE HERALD
1790 Broadway, New York

Columbia

FORBIDDEN TRAIL: Buck Jones, Barbara Weeks—A very good western picture that is filled with thrills and action from beginning to end. This one will please any Saturday patrons and should do a good business. Business above average and everybody well pleased. Running time, 64 minutes. Played August 12.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

HELLO TROUBLE: Buck Jones—Business all right. Westerns are coming back as the farmer gets money. The reason they flopped was because the farmer more than any one else hung on to his dough, although the terrible tale of the farmers' miseries is largely "boloney." The farmer has had only one-third the foreclosures the business man has had, and only one-fourth that of real estate. Westerns are coming back as the farmer spends.—H. J. Brown, Majestic Theatre, Nampa, Idaho. General patronage.

WHAT PRICE INNOCENCE?: Willard Mack, Jean Parker—Put on a good newspaper campaign for this for four days previous to the showing, advertised no children under 16 years would be admitted without their parents and did three times normal Friday and Saturday business. Better draw than "State Fair" and "Adorable" and you know what they do to the box office. Best of all, it is a real good picture and one that you feel proud to present to your audience. Best money maker from Columbia this year. Put it on best days of the week and advertise it. Running time, 64 minutes.—J. A. Blatt, Rex Theatre, Corry, Pa. General patronage.

WOMAN I STOLE, THE: Jack Holt—A good all-around melodrama with plenty of action for the men, also plenty of appeal for the better halves.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

First National

CENTRAL AIRPORT: Richard Barthelmess, Sally Eilers—A very good picture, shows some clever stunt flying. The ending is very unusual, and makes the patrons comment on it. Ain't that somethin'. Tom Brown shares the honors in this one. Did good business with this; ran it in double bill. Running time, 70 minutes. Played August 30-31.—Wm. A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

SILVER DOLLAR: Edward G. Robinson—A fine, big picture, but it took an awful beating against free medicine show opposition. Played August 27-28.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

Fox

ADORABLE: Janet Gaynor, Henry Garat—Here is a happy, joyous entertainment to drive dull care away. A fairy tale romance, to be sure, but what a fairy tale. A lot of money was spent on this. Everyone seemed to enjoy this hugely. A picture for the whole family, from grandpa-grandma down to the grandchildren. Drawing power above average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

ADORABLE: Janet Gaynor, Henry Garat—One of these mythical kingdom kind where the poor boy gets the princess. Dressed up in costume and with a foreign star, but I will be fair and say that he does not talk through his nose as did Farrell and while he is unknown and the public knew nothing about him, he has a good singing voice and Janet her sweet gooey self as usual. The music is good, but is the same hackneyed story that a lot of these costume pictures have, if I recollect right.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

BEST OF ENEMIES: Buddy Rogers, Marian Nixon—It's a picture with plenty wisecracks in it, lots of talking, some songs and some music. You just sit through it and grin. Among pictures that draw for me are those that have a feeling of true honesty. Running time, eight reels.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

BEST OF ENEMIES: Marian Nixon, Buddy Rogers—A clean, entertaining comedy romance. Not a strong cast, but excellent entertainment. Marian Nixon, ideally cast, and Buddy Rogers furnish this romance. Frank Morgan and Joseph Cawthorn the comedy. Running time, 77 minutes. Played September 8-9.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

CALL HER SAVAGE: Clara Bow—A very good picture with a very unusual story. Fine acting of Miss Bow, but the wrong type story for her comeback. Played July 24-25.—W. F. Roth, Jr., New Palace Theatre, Gallatin, Tenn. Small town patronage.

CAVALCADE: Clive Brook, Diana Wynyard—Here's a picture that will lose every small town exhibitor money, with its type story and the "rental." My advice is don't buy it. I wouldn't have seen it myself, but the sound is so varied throughout the picture, I had to stay and keep same uniform. I have a rheostat on the back of my seat to regulate sound.—W. F. Roth, Jr., New Palace Theatre, Gallatin, Tenn. Small town patronage.

DANGEROUSLY YOURS: Warner Baxter, Mimi Jordan—A program picture. Not good, not bad, just ordinary. Running time, 70 minutes. Played August 11-12.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

F. P. 1.: Conrad Veidt, Jill Esmond, Leslie Fenton—The three principal players are good. Rather hard to understand at times (foreign made). It is clean, good photography and music. Action enough for children. Patrons went out without comment for or against. Personally did not see much to it. Played August 22-23.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

ROBBERS' ROOST: George O'Brien—Another good one from Zane Grey and Fox. This will please your western fans. It is short and must fill in program with a variety of shorts to complete same. Played July 28-29.—W. F. Roth, Jr., New Palace Theatre, Gallatin, Tenn. Small town patronage.

SAILOR'S LUCK: James Dunn, Sally Eilers—This is a dandy Friday-Saturday picture, with plenty of action. Dunn and Eilers team up fine and turn out a very good performance. Plenty of comedy in this, too. Played July 21-22.—W. F. Roth, Jr., New Palace Theatre, Gallatin, Tenn. Small town patronage.

SMOKE LIGHTNING: George O'Brien—Considered this slightly better than the average Zane Grey western. Where westerns go, this picture will please. Running time, 61 minutes. Played August 25-26.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

TOO BUSY TO WORK: Will Rogers—A very good picture to good business. A nice clean picture like this pleases everyone and offends no one, in marked contrast to the sophisticated bilge we too often are expected to peddle to the populace for entertainment. Played September 3-4.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

WARRIOR'S HUSBAND, THE: Elissa Landi, David Manners—Well, this picture is another dressed up one in costumes we Americans know nothing about. I cannot see how any producer could ever expect any theatre, especially in small towns, to get people to come and see a picture like this one. Running time, 73 minutes.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

ZOO IN BUDAPEST: Loretta Young, Gene Raymond—May I be permitted to comment on this picture before I play it for the benefit of those exhibitors who have an early playdate? I overheard someone remark when I saw it at a downtown theatre, "This is not just a picture, it is an amusement event." The trouble with the picture is the title, which is doubly bad because it suggests both an animal picture and a foreign picture. If you can overcome the handicap of the title, you can please them. You have the beautiful romance of an orphan girl, all the thrills, suspense and excitement you could ask for. Get behind it as you would with the biggest special and your patrons will enjoy a rare and exceptional amusement treat. This is the humble opinion of yours truly.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

Majestic

UNWRITTEN LAW, THE: Greta Nissen, Skeets Gallagher—Well cast and well acted. Possibly a little draggy in one or two spots.—C. D. Armentrout, Iowa Theatre, Mason City, Iowa. General patronage.

WORLD GONE MAD, THE: Pat O'Brien, Mary Brian, Neil Hamilton, Evelyn Brent—Good enough for any theatre. Some might consider a little strange. Pleased our patrons.—C. D. Armentrout, Iowa Theatre, Mason City, Iowa. General patronage.

MGM

HELL BELOW: Robert Montgomery, Walter Huston—I give this one a big OK. It has thrills, comedy, drama, kangaroo boxing, cannon, airplanes, merry-go-rounds, ferris wheels, gatling guns, big ship fights, thousands of other exciting things which I have no space to tell you. Play it and write the balance for me. Running time, 108 minutes.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

HOLD YOUR MAN: Clark Gable, Jean Harlow—Good picture, but not so much dress-up in it as expected for Miss Harlow. Nice audience for first night but did not draw second night as big. Gable and Harlow have the drawing power at my theatre when they are in a picture suitable for their quality. Recording wonderful. We have just installed in our theatre the RCA Victor Photophone High Fidelity Sound System.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

REUNION IN VIENNA: John Barrymore—This one is a great big one of its kind. Big scenery, grand apartments, some fine dramatic parts, with music and love-making that make you have those creeping feelings that you cannot help but enjoy. But there are other parts I leave for some other exhibitor to write to you about. Running time, 100 minutes.—Walter Odom, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

REUNION IN VIENNA: John Barrymore, Diana Wynyard—Reunions are very popular in this part of the country, but not the ones in Vienna. There is no question but what it is a class picture and for that reason, despite the wonderful acting of both Barrymore and this girl, Wynyard, who has that definite something that makes her roles stand out, the picture flopped for the reason that it is not a small town picture. There is one very torrid love scene that was well done and not in any way offensive. The fact remains that most of the country town audiences are not going for these two dollar shows on Broadway. Over their heads, I guess. No other reason, except that it is a high-brow picture and not for the masses. Personally, without any egotism, I liked it.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

STRANGER'S RETURN, THE: Lionel Barrymore, Franchot Tone, Miriam Hopkins—Ranking as one of the best, with Barrymore splendid in his role. Clean, good story, rustic settings and a real small town picture that we played Friday and Saturday. It is with a good deal of regret to say that it did not pull as well as an action picture of the regular type that we run for these days.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

TODAY WE LIVE: Joan Crawford, Gary Cooper—Too much war, Crawford and film. Crawford is not a great draw here. Ran this Friday and Saturday. Matinee low, night fair. Just didn't go over. Ran an advance trailer which didn't help much, as it showed too much Crawford mush and not the air fights and speedboat chasers. Running time, 112 minutes. Played August 25-26.—Wm. A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

TUGBOAT ANNIE: Marie Dressler, Wallace Beery—Patrons' opinion divided. Some liked it, while others were disappointed. I think why some were disappointed was that it was not dressed up a little. Too much tugboat and garbage. Good for the whole family, except for Beery's being drunk all the time. Several did not like his part on that account. Played September 3-4.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

Paramount

BEDTIME STORY, A: Maurice Chevalier, Helen Twelvetrees, Baby LeRoy—This was the most universally pleasing picture that this star has made lately. Nice crowd and everybody was satisfied. Play it, it's a good bet. Played July 17-18.—W. F. Roth, Jr., New Palace Theatre, Gallatin, Tenn. Small town patronage.

BIG EXECUTIVE: Ricardo Cortez—A very good program picture. All characters good, especially Richard Bennett, who steals the show. Played September 6-7.—W. A. Collins, Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. Small town patronage.

BIG EXECUTIVE: Ricardo Cortez—A real good picture, but one with absolutely no draw at the box office. With the exception of Cortez (who is very good) there is no one in the cast that will draw any business. Business off 100 per cent on this one. Played September 9.—R. W. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill. General patronage.

COLLEGE HUMOR: Bing Crosby, Jack Oakie—Excellent entertainment for the whole family. One of the best pictures in a long time. Played August 27-28.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

COLLEGE HUMOR: Bing Crosby, Jack Oakie—Brimful of what it takes to make everybody happy. All voices in this picture plain good old American talking; the music and songs fill your soul with joy. It takes this kind of a picture for your customers and the exhibitor both feel they got their money's worth. Running time, nine reels.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

EAGLE AND THE HAWK, THE: Fredric March Cary Grant, Jack Oakie—Just an airplane picture is all I see in this one and we sure have had enough of this class of pictures to do me the rest of my days. Running time, 75 minutes.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

GIRL IN 419, THE: James Dunn, Gloria Stuart—This picture will please. Well connected. Fine recording. Running time, seven reels.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

HER BODYGUARD: Wynne Gibson, Edmund Lowe—Good little picture. Will be liked by all classes. Played August 29-30.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

LUXURY LINER: George Brent, Zita Johann—Was very much surprised at this, after having read so many adverse reports. This was a good show and pleased all that came out. Played July 10-11.—W. F. Roth, Jr., New Palace Theatre, Gallatin, Tenn. Small town patronage.

MIDNIGHT CLUB: Clive Brooks, George Raft—Fair entertaiment. Nothing to rave about, but will get by. Played August 31-September 1.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

MURDERS IN THE ZOO: Charles Ruggles, Lionel Atwill—This one is only fair, Ruggles was very good as usual. Picture too short, so must fill up the program with all the shorts available to bring it up to regular running time. Played August 4-5.—W. F. Roth, Jr., New Palace Theatre, Gallatin, Tenn. Small town patronage.

NIGHT AFTER NIGHT: George Raft, Constance Cummings—A program picture better than the average. Didn't draw for us as this is the first time we have had George Raft, but those who saw it were pleased and said so. Running time, 75 minutes. Played August 4-5.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Gogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

NO MAN OF HER OWN: Clark Gable, Carole Lombard—We got a very poor print of this picture. It drew better than an average business, however, and pleased. Running time, 76 minutes. Played August 18-19.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

ONE SUNDAY AFTERNOON: Gary Cooper—A very pleasing picture that drew many favorable comments. Especially liked by middle aged people and old-timers, as it brought back memories. Gary Cooper excellent as a small town beau. Rather slow moving and best played away from nights when they crave action. Running time, 70 minutes. Played September 3-5.—W. A. Collins, Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. Small town patronage.

ONE SUNDAY AFTERNOON: Gary Cooper—Would easily class this picture as the best one of the new releases on the Paramount program. Clean and entertaining throughout. Business picked up on the second night. Played September 5-6.—R. W. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill. General patronage.

SONG OF SONGS: Marlene Dietrich—This is supposed to be the first 1933-34 "Smash Hit" on the Paramount program. It didn't smash a thing for me, but is a fair picture at that. See where it played an extended run in St. Louis, which speaks pretty well for it, but nevertheless it is not a good small town picture. The picture failed to draw any extra business. The public seem to be all fed up on these sleepy looking dames. Would not suggest a Sunday showing and absolutely no good for children. Played August 20-21.—R. W. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill. General patronage.

THREE CORNERED MOON: Claudette Colbert, Richard Arlen—If you follow the press sheets you'll advertise this one as a rip-roaring comedy, which is a mistake. Nothing funny about it. However it will satisfy, and should draw some extra business. Played September 7-8.—R. W. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill. General patronage.

UNDER COVER MAN: George Raft, Nancy Carroll—A drama of the underworld that holds interest all the way. Drew an average business and pleased. Running time, 75 minutes. Played September 1-2.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

WOMAN ACCUSED, THE: Nancy Carroll, Cary Grant—Here's a picture that is from one of Liberty's prize stories and should please anyone. Something doing all the time and you must watch this fellow Grant; he's a coming star. This picture failed to draw for some reason. Played August 7-8.—W. F. Roth, Jr., New Palace Thtatre, Gallatin, Tenn. Small town patronage.

"POP'S" THISTLES PERK UP MUNCIE

That man, J. P. ("Pop") Dibble, veteran exhibitor, somehow cannot be kept out of the news. Now comes a paragraph from a columnist of the Evening Press at Muncie, Ind., to this effect:

"Thistles seldom are prized, but one in Muncie is. It is growing in 'Pop' Dibble's back yard on West Adams Street. The plant is nearly 10 feet tall and has more than 100 blossoms on it. 'Pop' Dibble, it will be remembered, is the man who gained fame as the first motion picture exhibitor in the United States."

BED OF ROSES: Constance Bennett, Pert Kelton, Joel McCrea—Better than the average Bennett pictures, but we can't get any play on her any more, due to what she has had in the past two years. This Pert Kelton is a miniature Mae West in her hard-boiled character and what little she had she stole the show from Bennett.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

GREAT JASPER, THE: Richard Dix, Florence Eldridge, Wera Engels, Edna May Oliver—Good entertainment for adults. Dix gives excellent performance. Played August 26.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

NO MARRIAGE TIES: Richard Dix, Doris Kenyon—Dix does not get any money here. Just a fair show.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

PROFESSIONAL SWEETHEART: Ginger Rogers, Norman Foster—Nice little program picture. Good for the whole family because it is clean and entertaining. Played August 24-25.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

SAILOR BE GOOD: Jack Oakie—Not so hot, and business according. Played August 18-19.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

SCARLET RIVER: Tom Keene—Good western, average business. Played September 2.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

SCARLET RIVER: Tom Keene—A western with a different theme. Just enough western atmosphere to hold attention of children. Adults seemed to like it. Played September 2.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

RKO-Pathe

BEYOND THE ROCKIES: Tom Keene, Rochelle Hudson—A very fine western with good singing. They liked it.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

Universal

AFRAID TO TALK: Eric Linden, Sidney Fox—Good picture, slim Sunday business. Played August 20-21.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

HER FIRST MATE: Slim Summerville, Zasu Pitts—Mr. Joe Hewitt, exhibitor from Robinson, Ill., told Carl Laemmle, Jr., not to make over three pictures a year with these stars. Joe is wrong. One every ten years like "Her First Mate" would be plenty. Not a laugh in the whole picture. Poor old Zasu couldn't even get her hands to working right. Someone slipped badly on this one, which will hurt the two stars for a long time. Played September 3-4.—R. W. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill. General patronage.

KISS BEFORE THE MIRROR: Frank Morgan, Paul Lukas, Nancy Carroll—Very dramatic. Morgan steals the show as the defense counsel. Too heavy for the patrons of this community theatre. Glad I ran it double billed with "Out All Night" to put some comedy into the show. Running time, 70 minutes. Played August 28-29.—Wm. A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

MOONLIGHT AND PRETZELS: Mary Brian, Roger Pryor, Lillian Miles, Leo Carrillo—The idea in this picture is not new and it starts slow, gaining in tempo as it comes along. The ballet ensembles are great and the "Moonlight and Pretzels" number is novel and good. Very good. It was good to hear a well rounded baritone voice again in Alexander Gray, after the crooners of the modern picture. The chorus work in this number with Gray's voice is outstanding in "Dusty Shoes." Our first of the musicals with the exception of "King of Jazz" and they liked it. There is an eyeful in the silhouette of the number, "I Got to Get Up and Go to Work."—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

OUT ALL NIGHT: Slim Summerville, Zasu Pitts—Good business, but a lot of adverse criticism on the uncalled for suggestive lines. It would be just as funny and a lot better family entertainment without the vulgarity that they have put into it. I am off this pair if Universal can't let them be funny without being dirty. Played August 25-26.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

OUT ALL NIGHT: Zasu Pitts, Slim Summerville—A splendid comedy, well liked. Did better business second night, proving it advertistd itself, it was so good. Ran it on a double bill. Did pretty good business. Running time, 69 minutes. Played August 28-29.—Wm. A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

OUT ALL NIGHT: Slim Summerville, Zasu Pitts—About as clever a comedy drama as we have ever given our patrons. And how they went for it. Both male and female. Played the picture second run and did exceptionally good business. Running time, 68 minutes.—C. D. Armentrout, Iowa Theatre, Mason City, Iowa. General patronage.

REBEL, THE: Luis Trenker, Vilma Banky—Plenty entertainment in this one. Big scenes. Beautiful views. Should please any audience. It is different from the ordinary run of pictures. If you can get them in, they should be pleased. Running time, 74 minutes.—C. D. Armentrout, Iowa Theatre, Mason City, Iowa. Central patronage.

Warner

KEYHOLE, THE: Kay Francis, George Brent—Kay Francis and George Brent are in their element in this one. A good society drama with lots of comedy, well liked by patrons. Ran it in double bill, did good business. Running time, 65 minutes. Played August 30-31.—Wm. A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

MARY STEVENS, M.D.: Kay Francis—Good picture from Warners. Unusual story, but proved to be well liked and drew a fair business. Played September 10-11.—R. W. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill. General patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

SNAPSHOT: No. 3—A good novelty reel.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

Educational

DORA'S DUNKING DOUGHNUTS: Andy Clyde—An unusually good two-reel Andy Clyde comedy.—W. A. Collins, Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. Small town patronage.

KRAKATOA: This short subject is one of the most remarkable shorts ever shown. The eruption of the submarine volcano brings the most awe-inspiring scenes ever pictured. It is worth big exploitation.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

PAIR OF SOCKS, A: Moran and Mack—Just about as poor as they come is this one and that is saying a lot, for most of the comedies have been poor this year, with a very few exceptions.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

MGM

ALLEZ OOP: Sport Champion—One of the best of this series this year. Acrobatic stunts.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

CALL HER SAUSAGE: Taxi Boys—Not much.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

FIJI AND SAMOA: FitzPatrick Traveltalk—Good.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

MIDNIGHT PATROL: Laurel and Hardy—Typical L. & H. comedy. Got a few laughs.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

NERTSERY RHYMES: Colortone Musical Revue—Excellent. Believe about one reel. The "Woman in the Shoe" part appeared to have been taken from a feature we had one time.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

PAPUA AND KALABAHAL: FitzPatrick Traveltalk—Good.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

ROMANTIC ARGENTINA: FitzPatrick Traveltalk

—A very entertaining travel feature. Patrons liked this for a change. Running time, 9 minutes.—Wm. A. Crue, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

Paramount

BETTY BOOP'S MAY PARTY: Talkartoon—Average Betty Boop.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

DETECTIVE TOM HOWARD OF THE SUICIDE SQUAD: Tom Howard—A good single reel comedy that pleased.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

DINAH: Mills Brothers—Part cartoon featuring Mills Brothers' music. Very pleasing. The Mills Brothers sing "Dinah." Running time, 10 minutes.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

DUCKY DEAR: A good two-reel comedy.—W. A. Collins, Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. Small town patronage.

PARAMOUNT PICTORIAL: No. 1—Excellent.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

PARAMOUNT PICTORIAL: No. 10—Excellent—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

PHARMACIST, THE: W. C. Fields—Not good. It is tiresome and not funny. Running time, 20 minutes. —C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

POPEYE, THE SAILOR: Talkartoon—A knockout cartoon. Don't miss it.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

SWEET COOKIE: Another good slapstick comedy from Paramount. Audience Saturday night in a roar most of time.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

UNCLE JAKE: A great two-reel comedy for Saturday night. Slapstick and funny.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

RKO

A. M. TO P. M.: Fable—Just average fable.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

GAY NIGHTIES, THE: Clark and McCullough—Just a fair two-reel comedy.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

THROUGH THIN AND THICKET: Masquer Comedy—Very good comedy burlesque.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

United Artists

KING NEPTUNE: Silly Symphony—A first-class colored cartoon. Was favorably commented on by both young and old. One of the best of its kind to date. Make it a featurette on your bill. It is good. Running time, 7 minutes.—Wm. A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

Universal

BUSY BARBER: Oswald Cartoon—Not much.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

CARNIVAL CAPERS: Oswald Cartoon—Good anywhere you need a cartoon.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

LIGHTS OUT: James Gleason—Just two reels. Nothing objectionable, but did not get the laughs.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

Warner Vitaphone

HEY, HEY, WESTERNER: Broadway Brevity—Good. This two reeler had part of the ending missing. That ruined the whole two reeler. Running time, 17 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

HOW TO BREAK 90: No. 5 with Bobby Jones—This series OK for golf fans. Running time, 9 minutes.—J. E. Tunstall, Nottawa Theatre, Blackstone, Va. Small town patronage.

MUNICIPAL BAND WAGON: Melody Master Series—Good musical one reeler.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

MUSIC TO MY EARS: Jack Denny and Band—Wonderful. This had more entertainment than half of the features we have to run. Everyone pleased with this one. Running time, one reel.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

NORTHERN EXPOSURE: Broadway Brevity—A fine color two-reel musical. A good filler for any program.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

NOTHING EVER HAPPENS: Broadway Brevity —Excellent. A very clever burlesque on "Grand Hotel." Running time, 18 minutes.—J. E. Tunstall, Nottawa Theatre, Blackstone, Va. Small town patronage.

PASSING THE BUCK: Broadway Brevity—Good musical and dancing subject.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

RAMBLING ROUND RADIO ROW: Pepper Pot—An interesting one-reeler that will fit any program. Running time, 9 minutes.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

TEE FOR TWO: Color Musical—Good comedy, singing and dancing, all in color. Running time, 20 minutes.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N.D. Small town and rural patronage.

YOU CALL IT MADNESS: Richy Craig, Jr.—Can't give this much; it is silly, not funny. Running time, 20 minutes.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

Serials

Mascot

THREE MUSKETEERS, THE: John Wayne—This starts off like a good serial.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

Universal

PHANTOM OF THE AIR: Tom Tyler—I have shown many serials, but this is one of the serials in which the kids laugh at the easy way in which the hero escapes from sure death. For example, a terrific airplane crash from which it seems no one could escape alive—in the next chapter the hero has emerged without a scratch. And so on, chapter after chapter. The story as a whole is such that no one cares much about what is to happen.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

Warners Will Have 50% of Product Completed by Dec. 1

With 11 pictures on the 1933-34 schedule completed, five in production and ten more in preparation, Warner Bros.' Burbank studios expect to have 50 per cent of the year's program completed by December 1st, with about 20 pictures in the branches ready for distribution.

Pictures already completed and which have been promised to the home office by October 1st are: "I Loved a Woman," "Wild Boys of the Road," "Footlight Parade," "Ever in My Heart," "The Kennel Murder Case," "Female," "The World Changes," "The House on 56th Street," "Son of the Gobs," "Havana Widows" and "From Headquarters."

RKO Radio Designs New Type Of Press Book for Exhibitor

A new treatment in the production of the press book for exhibitors has been devised by S. Barrett McCormick and his advertising staff at the RKO Radio home office. The new type was introduced with the Katharine Hepburn feature, "Morning Glory," recently released.

The book, attractively covered, is arranged for the greatest convenience of the exhibitor, with thumb tabs indicating the location in the book of exhibitor hints on posters, advertisements, publicity and merchandising. An advertising schedule for two weeks in advance of showing is presented and publicity matter is designed to meet the requirements of various types of newspapers.

Chaplin Plans New Silent

Alfred Reeves, Charles Chaplin's general manager, has announced at Hollywood that the comedian will make another silent picture, with Paulette Goddard as his leading woman.

Barnstyn with Resolute

Jack Barnstyn has been appointed foreign sales manager of Resolute Pictures, rounding out the executive personnel of the company.

TECHNOLOGICAL

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 191.—(A) How would you test for grounds with a battery? (B) How would you test for grounds with a magneto? (C) Suppose you had a grounded coil or grid in one of your rheostats. How would you locate it? (D) Should your projector lamphouse and mechanism be permanently grounded? On what do you base your answer? (E) Would you or would you not ground the metal work in your projection room?

Answer to Question No. 184

Bluebook School Question No. 184 was: (A) What has been your experience in the matter of sound servicing? Have you found it and the sound service man to be, in the main, satisfactory? No names will be published with relation to this section of the question. (B) Should a fuse blow and the new one installed blow at once, what would be indicated? Should the new one blow after a time, say several minutes, what would you look for? If it blew after say half an hour or a full hour, what would you think was probably the seat of trouble? (C) Name one possible cause of sudden overload and visible evidence of same.

A careful examination of answers to Section A shows 461 who speak well or even highly of sound service men. Seventy-four condemn them as unsatisfactory and inefficient, while the rest, to the number of about 300, approve of them in general, but enter certain complaints which seem mostly to indicate more or less carelessness on the part of their sound service man.

On the whole, the general indication seems to be that there are many hard working, capable, careful sound service men who render all possible assistance to projectionists and do everything possible to keep things moving smoothly. On the other hand, there seems to be a considerable percentage who are inclined to sidestep wherever they can get away with it. It goes without saying that these men should be weeded out. They should be reported to the companies servicing the theatres by the manager. If he fails, then by the projectionist himself. The companies don't want such work as this. They would, without exception, I am very certain, discipline or discharge any service man in their employ just as quickly as convincing evidence of anything but the best possible work was presented.

If any projectionist or manager fears a comeback by reason of having reported a service man, he may send me the report, backed by competent evidence, and I will make the report myself without implicating the theatre. This may be done merely by advising the company officials that complaints have been received concerning a certain service man, advising them to check on him carefully. That will be quite sufficient. The company will, I am sure, make the check, and be very glad to do it.

The following made satisfactory reply to sections B and C: G. E. Doe; C. Rau and S. Evans; H. F. Menifee; J. Wentworth; D. Danielson; T. Van Vaulkenburg; K. Dowling; L. Van Buskirk and E. Kroll; W. Ostrum; A. Bailey; H. Edwards; C. Traxler; D. Johnson and A. Lomberg; G. Thompson and D. Lilley; A. E. Wyatt; H. D. Schofield; G. M. Marksley; D. B. Bates and L. J. Major; M. Compton; O. (B) I have found a great many excellent answers to this one, but believe that of H. Edwards is perhaps a bit the best. He says: "Under the first condition named a short or heavy ground would be indicated. The circuit affected would of course be and remain dead until the trouble was located and removed. If the newly installed fuse blew after a short period use, say five minutes to half an hour, I would immediately feel the fuse contacts to see if they were more than normally warm. A poor contact will set up heat which may gradually increase the temperature of the fuse until it finally melts. In such case the heat is wholly mechanical. If the contacts gave no evidence of anything wrong, I would then suspect current leakage through a slow ground, and would proceed to test for ground. Such current leakage might easily increase amperage sufficiently to blow a fuse, especially if it be working at capacity, or possibly under a bit of overload. Then, too, there is such a thing as an intermittent ground, though of course that is rare. If satisfied the contacts were OK, the fuses not overloaded and found the circuit to test free from grounds, I would look for such a ground, usually caused by a weak or worn spot in insulation that, due to movement of the wires, permits occasional current carrying contact. True, this latter is unlikely, but it is nevertheless possible and does happen.

(C) Rau and Evans say: "One possible cause of sudden overload is increase in supply voltage. This would be evidenced by increased brightness of all incandescent lamps. Also the ammeter would register higher."

Note: Charles B. Duncan, projectionist at the Carolina theatre, Spindale, N. C., has addressed an inquiry. As his letter is typical of many received from time to time, I will answer it in print. He says: "The Bluebook School has been quite beneficial to me during the past few years. Have used your articles and the School both as a reference and to gain better knowledge of the equipment I handle. Are small town projectionists invited to answer the Bluebook School questions? You being recognized internationally as our most significant authority on projection, I would very much like to try to answer your questions each week. If I may, please give me a list of the rules and regulations I must abide by."

Any projectionist, any student of projection or, for that matter, any interested person, may send in answers to the Bluebook School questions. There are absolutely no "rules and regulations," but it is expected that those answering try to do so each week and try to get the answer in as soon as possible after publication of the questions. Also, that they do not feel offended or discouraged if their names are not included in the published list. If your name fails to appear, study the published answer and see just why your name was left out that week. The reason for asking you to be as prompt as possible with answers is because of the considerable task involved in reading and sorting out the correct and incorrect answers. I might add that "students" in the Bluebook School should have the Bluebook, though that of course is not indicated as a requirement.

S.O.S. Corp., New York, issued this week a new catalogue listing replacement parts for all types of American-made projectors and sound apparatus, and for general theatre use.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

NRA IS SHOWMANSHIP

If we were translating the efforts of President Roosevelt in the present crisis into Round Table terms, the story would run something like this:

"Recently transferred from the 'New York State Theatre,' at Albany, N. Y., to the position of 'Manager' of the 'United States Theatre,' Washington, D. C., Franklin D. Roosevelt is putting over an intensive nationwide campaign to pull his 'house' out of the red.

"One of the high lights of his big drive is the creation of the NRA, with which he has tied up every civic, industrial, agricultural and political organization to promote the 'Act' along the recognized showmanly line of newspaper ads and stories, radio broadcasts, window displays, street ballys, banners and posters. 'F. D.' has organized local committees of arrangements everywhere to work out ideas in line with the plans laid out by leaders in Washington now cooperating with this enterprising 'Manager.'

"A series of NRA Days is being put over by communities, the big event of which is a monster street bally in the form of a parade. Staged recently in New York, with 250,000 paraders in line, the Mayor and other notables in the reviewing stand besides millions of others who were given a half day off by their employers to take in the event, it was a traffic stopper for sure.

"A lot of other swell slants are being whipped across by this hustling executive and he is leaving nothing undone in his efforts to build up his 'box office' as well as adding to the good will and prestige of his 'house.' "

APPRECIATION

In our determination to leave no stone unturned to improve managers' working conditions, we have not lost sight of the fact that there are many exhibitors who voluntarily and without seeking publicity are giving their house staffs every possible break.

Foremost among these broad visioned employers is Arthur Mayer, operator of the Rialto Theatre, in New York, who has already tilted salaries some 15%, and did so without any urging or pressure brought to bear from any outside influence. For Mayer is that type of person, and is so regarded by his appreciative employees.

And thinking along these lines, we are inclined to wonder if the many "regular guys" who operate theatres (and there are a few) are sufficiently rewarded for their thoughtfulness and consideration. You hear plenty about the tough exhibitors, their callousness to their employees, the general disregard of the welfare of those who labor long and diligently. But there seems to be little broadcasting of the efforts of the decent element, those only too anxious to share the good breaks.

Therefore your Chairman moves a resolution of appreciation to the Arthur Mayers of showbusiness, with the fervent hope that the dividends obtained from their kindly practices may tempt others to invest in large, profitable blocks of human consideration.

COURTESY

Harry Sugarman's article in this issue stresses that one thing a theatre must dispense in order to exist—courtesy. The greatest screen attraction, the finest stage presentation, the grandest equipment means less than a plugged penny at the box office if your patrons are not accorded every courteous consideration. The theatre is the daily heir to a thousand and one different happenings that harrass the tempers of the house staff, but the elementary lessons of showmanship cannot be considered well learned if the most transient of patrons has reason to complain of the slightest deviation from good manners.

"ADULT" PRICES

Sid Holland seems to have started something with his pertinent article criticising the practice of charging adult admission prices to twelve-year-old children. In this issue, another far-seeing manager adds voice to this criticism, strenuously questioning this policy, and we anticipate added reactions from other interested members.

We hold with those who would smooth the path for our younger patrons. As Touchett states, requiring adult prices from this most profitable patronage not only keeps the youngsters away, but much more serious is the fact that on this account, families with children of this inconvenient (?) age have stopped going to the theatre.

Manager Touchett speaks well when he writes that this discussion should not be closed until it is disposed of satisfactorily. We invite further opinions on this questioned practice.

Contest Winners Enjoy Chicago Trip

We have waited until now to report on the doings of the winners in the Round Table July Exploitation World's Fair Contest in Chicago, due to the fact that all these winners could not get away before to enjoy their awards. Mr. E. S. Clifford of the HERALD Chicago office, who was kind enough to arrange the swell entertainment the boys enjoyed, gives us the following dope:

Mitchell W. Connery, Kingston Theatre, Kingston, Pa., and Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich., Paramount and Fox award winners, respectively, arrived in Chicago at the same time; Bob Hutchings of the Eastwood Theatre, Madison, Wis., winner of the Fox award, got there a little later and F. P. Larson, Paramount Theatre, Idaho Falls, Idaho, who received the MGM award, managed to get to the Windy City on September 9.

Sid Holland, Warner prize winner, was called to New York and will make his trip some time in the future; Ed Hart, Radio prize winner, has not yet been able to arrange his getaway, and Sam Hammond, who copped the Monogram prize, has still to report.

Mr. Clifford had arranged a very elaborate entertainment for the group of winners, expecting that they would arrive at one time. As this was not to be, the program of activity was revised to fit the desires and leisure time of each individual, all reporting a high time.

The following were some of the amusements that had been arranged. One night as guests of Ben Bernie, another night as guests of "Hollywood-at-the-Fair;" a midnight performance at the NBC studios, luncheon with the exploitation staff of the World's Fair, passes to the Balaban and Katz Theatres, and other activities which included, of course, unlimited trips to the Century of Progress Exposition.

Those who made the trip evidently had a swell time, to judge from the letters we have received. We are very pleased to know that they enjoyed themselves so thoroughly and returned to their theatres refreshed and rested. We are looking forward to our next contest and hope we can dig up still bigger and better prizes to be contested for as keenly as were the trips to the Fair.

Raynor Engineers Citywide Campaign

One of the toughest problems of showbusiness is putting over the theatre that has been closed for some time, but the opening campaign for the Brooklyn, N. Y., Paramount, fashioned by head man Bill Raynor and his publicity shover, Dave Davidson, indicates that these boys are in a fair way to bring that theatre back into the deep black.

A thorough newspaper campaign in eight leading New York and Brooklyn papers was the first broadside, and the ads, a skillful combination of reverses, line drawing bendays and half tones, had no difficulty in selling the theatre message. Good art and story breaks were also secured in advance and during the opening week.

A bannered sound truck containing a portable projection machine and screen showing trailers was sent out to all sections of Brooklyn and to the nearby beaches. Stopping at prominent corners, the bally gathered crowds who stopped to see the ambulating movies, while theatre plugs were broadcast from an enclosed mike.

Thousands of four-page tabs were distributed at subway stations and other busy points, and an autogyro, flying an announcement banner, flew over New York and Brooklyn two days in advance. Radio plugs, merchant tieups, heavy bill posting, special one-sheets and window cards—all were used to put over the sock opening this well rounded campaign deserved.

PARDON, RUDY

In the issue of Sept. 2, commenting editorially on the relief manager system in effect at the theatres of the Consolidated Amusement Enterprises of New York, through no fault of our own we did not give the proper credit to the showman responsible for originating this swell idea.

Rudy Kuehn put it across in 1928, while general manager of the Consolidated circuit, according to his statement, and we therefore hasten to bring this to the attention of the membership. The relief idea is both practical and profitable, and we are pleased that a Round Tabler put it across and made it work. Thanks for setting us straight, Rudy.

Agrees 12-Year-Old Prices Are Too High

Sid Holland's criticism of the policy of charging adult prices to 12-year-olds finds favor with Manager V. T. Touchett, Fond du Lac Theatre, Fond du Lac (Wis.). This member declares himself in the following letter to the Round Table, asking that something be done for these "forgotten young men."

DEAR SIRS:

With reference to your article in the September 2nd issue of the HERALD, "When Is An Adult?" you have opened up a subject which should not be closed until disposed of.

The practice of charging adult prices for children between the ages of twelve and sixteen has long since been admitted a mistake by thinking showmen, but the solution has always been feared and evaded. What is to prevent young men between the ages of sixteen and nineteen getting under the wire? Who is to definitely determine when the whisker seeds begin to sprout?

These and many other arguments of a similar nature are advanced in opposition to a change in the child-adult deadline. All these things are very true and we can plainly see where we would lose a few shekels, BUT we are too blind to see the mountain of loss we incur by letting boy and girl twelve live down the show-going habit for four or five years.

Many parents quit going to shows themselves when their families get around the twelve-year-old mark, because what they can no longer afford for their children, they will not spend for themselves. Does anyone attempt to contradict this?

Let's get good and mad and do something about the forgotten young men.

"Butterfly" Lands Window in Tokyo Store

The Americanizing of Japanese motion picture theatre advertising and exploitation goes on apace according to Albert Deane, manager of Paramount's foreign advertising department, who sends along a report on the "Madam Butterfly" campaign in Tokyo.

The Mimatsu department store, one of the largest in that city, was willing to turn over a prominent window to plug the picture providing that some of the original properties used in the production were obtained from the studio. This was done, accompanied by authenticated affidavits and letters from the stars and director, with the result that, according to Deane, the resultant display helped the picture to roll up one of the largest grosses in the history of the country.

BUT CLEVER, JOE

At lunch with Dr. Joe Lee, we asked him to contribute a "really happened" from the bottomless bag of his experiences. The omnipotent physician to ailing theatres gives us this, a happening of a few weeks ago. Listen to Joe:

"While handling the New York opening and campaign on "Forgotten Men," in a jesting way I suggested to the advertising agency that we place an ad in a Chinese newspaper. The agency replied, in all seriousness, that for $10 I would receive a fairly large amount of space. I ran the ad and it was very easy to keep a check on the Oriental customers it brought in. In three days we had 3,600 Chinese customers at the Rialto on an investment of $10, our gross returns being $1,-800. The strange part of the entire transaction was that the editor of the Chinese newspaper guaranteed the advertising agency that they would not charge us for the ad if I wasn't satisfied and didn't receive my money's worth. However, the editor didn't get any complaints from either Arthur Mayer, the managing director, or from me.

"Damn funny, these Chinese!"

SID DANNENBERG PUT ON SMASH CAMPAIGN FOR "MAYOR OF HELL"

Sid Dannenberg put over a smash campaign on "The Mayor of Hell" at the Lake Theatre in Cleveland. Dannenberg's front contained plenty of punch stressing the sensational story angle and James Cagney as the bang-up performer the public likes. Blow-ups of star heads and scenes from the picture made this a very striking front, which created a great deal of comment from passersby.

Sid tied up with the Cleveland News Co. to place 500 special cards in windows and to use large banners on all of its trucks. In addition to spotting the cards, representatives of the company secured several full windows, in which were displayed "Modern Screen" magazines only, plus the cards bearing copy on picture. Sid also secured window displays in stores in the downtown sector.

A special screening was held for the leading figures in organizations interested in juvenile crime prevention, newspaper critics, and representatives of radio station WGAR. The radio station featured the special 15-minute dramatization taken from the picture.

Letters of thanks were sent to all persons invited to the screening, consisting of copy conducive to the recipient's encouraging their associates and friends to attend the showing at the theatre, in addition to the above, Dannenberg arranged for the placing of forty 11 by 14 inch in selected windows in the downtown section.

All in all a well rounded campaign in keeping with Sid's practical exploitation ideas that usually result in a favorable box-office reaction.

Coast Cries "Happy New Year This August"

The annual announcement books of the producers are of such high quality pictorially that many managers are using them as part of the display on their new season campaigns. Hal P. Neides, city manager, Los Angeles, Fox West Coast Theatres, forwards a flash (see photo) of how he used these books in the lobby, patrons being invited to review the anticipated productions from the major studios.

As part of his further campaign small Christmas teaser cards containing the words, "Happy New Year," were distributed throughout the city as were bumper cards for automobiles and window snipes, all carrying the same copy. Then a week later window cards were distributed in which the copy was changed to "Happy New Entertainment Year" followed by a co-op newspaper page divided into 31 spaces, each of which was occupied by a different merchant ad and a star cut. The stars were not named and passes were given to the first 10 persons sending in correct lists of these names.

Hal says that though the entire campaign was effective, the announcement books in the lobby caused the most comment and at all times during the day there were crowds around examining the display.

Harbor Bally Plugs "Tugboat Annie"

Sedge Coppack, whose signal success with railroad tieups has been reported in these columns, now jumps to water exploitation by using a bannered motor launch in New York Harbor to plug the showing of "Tugboat Annie" at the Paramount, Stapleton, S. I. Sedge had the boat following the various municipal ferries that ply between New York and Staten Island, and as the ferries carry over 30,000 commuters to and from the island each day, you can judge just how effective was this unique bally.

The above was the highlight of the campaign that succeeded in breaking a house record already broken seven times in the theatre's history. Coppack started a month in advance and kept on adding to his campaign as the picture date neared. In addition to special cards on all train's station platforms, Sedge mailed thousands of post cards to his mailing list within an area of 60 square miles, besides many other advertising aids regularly employed on the bigger pictures.

To indicate the strength of the results of his campaign, Coppack reports that nearly 2,000 tickets were sold in one hour and that a final check disclosed an attendance of approximately 20 per cent of the total island population.

SHOW BUSINESS IN BRAZIL

Good pictures speak a universal language, as illustrated by this photo of the Cinema Odeon, Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, South America, at the premiere of "Cavalcade." The smash front indicates those fast stepping Brazilian showmen know the angles. Maurice Ahern says the first week's busines was a record breaker, and the long lines at the box office bear him out.

HOUSE 'PERSONAL EQUATION'

California Manager Stresses Personality Plus in Successful Operation of Today's Theatre

by HARRY M. SUGARMAN, Mgr.
Egyptian, Hollywood, Cal.

Today, more than ever, the public demands "Personal Equation" amplied by a "Personality." Men and women who have had the good fortune of having means, who could buy courtesy in every direction, suddenly find themselves either without funds or now fighting for a mere something we call existence.

Harry M. Sugarman

Human nature tells us that both have had brought to light the fact that there is no distinction between rich and poor when the hand of fate tosses all about. And from the financial destruction of rich and poor alike has come the understanding that courtesy offered in any line of business by a personality who practices personal equation, is a genuine gesture rather than a mere front.

The world will rise again out of the chaos of the last few years, and those who have builded their business well will have made their establishment indelible in the hearts of those to whom they have extended this personal service. To them will come the reward of increased business and increased loyalty of patrons.

To those who need a broader interpretation of the meaning of personal equation, it can be quickly summarized by the explanation that it is the sincerity with which you approach your problems, not only supervision such as is written in text books on showmanship, and not assigning of complaints and important requests of patrons to an assistant. Personal equation is the handling of those apparently trivial matters by you, the head of the institution. It is the meeting and knowing your patrons and their various likes and dislikes as well as their eccentricities, and upon the study of human nature which is almost a necessity in dealing with the public.

In dealing further with this subject one might better express it as being personal supervision, as in the proper operation of your theatre. It is a most noticeable thing in the manager that he polices the aisles of his theatre frequently and observes the audience at close range.

There is little doubt that such a policy will carry the word that yours is a theatre in which orderly conduct is in favor, and soon enough you will reap a harvest from those mothers who send or wish to send unchaperoned children to the theatre. To them you will be expressing the protection offered through the watchful eye of the management over their children.

"Personality" is your form of self-expression and friendliness, and is that which gains for you the "hail-fellow-well-met" stamp of approval in the operation of your theatre, and is best expressed by the manner in which the patron is received.

At this point I must express a definite disapproval of the contention of some circuits that a militaristic effect in their staff has any place in the theatre operation. It is conducive to dissatisfaction and gives the first impression of a lack of personality in the operation of that theatre. As I am a great believer of first impressions, I believe that the public to whom the theatre is always selling its screen and stage, is the one place where "personality" is most important from the front of the theatre to and including the screen fare that is offered.

Shields Describes Radio Scrip Hookup

In a recent story of the activities of Manager I. L. Shields, Royal Theatre, Columbus (Ga.), mention was made of a radio scrip plan put on by the theatre in cooperation with a local station. "I. L." now sends us the details of the campaign, which is based on the premium giveaway and auction idea, publicized strongly by the station and the participating merchants.

In this case the premium copy, called "radio scrip," was sold by the station to the stores, and in turn, the stores gave the scrip with purchases. In addition, an auction is held on the stage of the theatre once a month, articles promoted from merchants being bid for with the scrip money. To give the stage sale more draw, the station furnishes a band, girl chorus and other acts, plugs the stunt over the air, advertises in the papers, and bills the countryside.

Shields states that this is one of the most effective ideas he has yet put over, as so far he is playing to capacity on the auction nights and building up all kinds of valuable good will among his merchants. The stunt is billed to continue until December, when on the final auction night an automobile will be the main prize.

Street Radio Bally

This is a shot of the radio broadcast that he put on with "Pick Up," described in a recent issue. The gag was planted in a town window and while it gave a lot of folks their first opportunity to witness an actual broadcast, it also cleverly sold the picture.

Welcome, Louie

A return to the management of the newly reopened Uptown, Milwaukee (Wis.) is in the nature of a triumphant home coming for Louie Orlove who was skipper of the house for three years under the Fox banner, and now signs up again for the Saxe Amusement Company, present operators.

Local papers gave Louie and the theatre plenty of front page break, and Orlove replied with a broadside of exploitation on "College Humor" on which he planted the wise crack newspaper contest among other gags, and followed that up with door knob hangers, heralds, circulars on coming attractions, also plugging his new low prices.

Welcome home, Louie, and don't forget your Round Table!

New Marylander Reports Activities

Perry Spencer recently at the Arcade and Strand Theatres in Waynesboro, Pa., has now transferred his activities to Hagerstown, Md., where he is doing his stuff for Frank Boucher at the Colonial Theatre.

Perry has a Kiddies Club every Saturday, at which time he uses a number of local acts and such contests as pie eating and other youthful delights. A Buck Jones Ranger Club has just been started with the opening of the serial "Gordon of Ghost City," and Perry has arranged for a Boy Scout parade with free soda pop and candy.

On his return "42nd" Street date, Spencer put over a typical first-run campaign. One of the gags (see photo) was a street parade of youthful sandwich men, the boys parading three feet apart up and down the main streets and other parts of town.

The front was all done in metallics against a blue background and all light posts were tagged with arrows pointing to the theatre and imprinted with the title. Various other tieups were arranged and Perry states that, in spite of a steady rain, the picture played to a very satisfactory business.

Spencer reports that he is sending in some good campaigns on his newer pictures and we are looking forward to receiving them, as we do all the effective exploitation from Frank Boucher's territory.

A Bit Warmish

Si Seadler, MGM ad chief, sends along an idea used by an anonymous Fox West Coast theatre on "Hold Your Man," in which pieces of scorched wall paper were printed and distributed, these purporting to be taken from one of the scenes of the picture. A "P.S." suggests that the cooling plant will be more than necessary. A good "warm weather" gag, Si?

"It Really Happened"

by BILL DANZIGER
Paramount Studios, Hollywood

Here's one from that shining star of exploitation, Bill Danziger, now handling exploitation for Bob Gillham at the Paramount Hollywood studios. Bill is one of the real aces of bally, and the following is an experience of some years back. Bill speaking:

About ten years ago we conceived the idea of taking a pigeon and building a publicity stunt around it for Paramount Week. We bought the pigeon in Cincinnati, and took it to Ironton, Ohio, in a box. On arrival we took the bird to our room and let it fly around while we lined up the mayor and other city officials to cooperate with us in this stunt for the promotion of Paramount Week.

We told them that the pigeon was from Adolph Zukor's Long Island estate, and that Zukor had eight such pigeons—named after movie stars of that day, including Gloria Swanson, Wallie Reid and Tommy Meighan. We said that our pigeon was named after Meighan and the mayor agreed to make a public address while he attached a gold band, bearing the good wishes of the city to Zukor, on the pigeon's leg. A crowd attended. There was plenty of red fire, a brass band, and with great pomp and ceremony, and after a long oration, the pigeon was finally flung into the air.

Instead of starting for Long Island towards the east, it perched upon the nearest telegraph wire and refused to leave. We finally threw stones to dislodge it—and then, instead of flying east the bird flew west toward Cincinnati, its point of origin.

Consequently we had a hard time convincing the city fathers that the pigeon was a "genuine homing pigeon from Zukor's prize collection." The Public Library, however, saved our bacon, for on reading up, I found that these birds frequently circled about for a time when taking off before adopting a definite route.

STRONG CAMPAIGNS ON "COLLEGE HUMOR" BRING BIG GROSSES

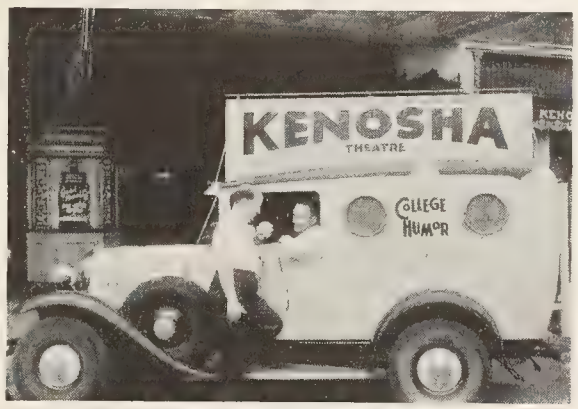
HARRY BOTWICK,
Mgr. Paramount, Rutland, Vt.

Advance trailers changed each week for three weeks before opening, and advance electric bally transcription used on house p. a. system during intermissions. A month before date spotted coming lobby posters, followed with special display including 50 by 75 inch frame with 35 stills, beaver board easels on each side of balcony stairs, mounted sidewall frames, one-sheet photo enlargements and lobbywide banner, all moved out to sidewalk in front of theatre during opening.

Arranged windows in all prominent women's dress and shoe stores plugging star fashions, did likewise with leading men's stores, tied up with all music stores and magazine dealers; provided tire covers for all taxis; covered surrounding summer resorts with extra space in country papers and put over costless advance radio broadcasts.

JESSE C. LUND,
Mgr. Kenosha, Kenosha, Wis.

Sent out sound truck (see photo) to cover city, nearby towns and all surrounding summer resorts. Driver broadcast theatre and playdates through microphone, also playing Bing Crosby records. P. A. system installed in lobby, with loudspeakers on marquee, through which announcements were made and records played.



"Humor" Sound Truck

Special heralds inserted in all locally sold Chicago and Milwaukee papers; also distributed house to house. Restaurant menus were imprinted, tire covers used on employees' cars; theme song advance trailer spliced into regular newsreel, and striking lobby effect was obtained by using raised cut-out letters on gold paper background.

JOHN C. RUNDELL,
Mgr. Kaufman, Montpelier, Ohio

Ran ads asking for college pennants giving passes for their use, and planted most of these pennants in a furniture window (see photo) which was made up to represent a student's room and included plenty of plug for the picture. Put out the collegiate flivver with sound attachment, with four students who did the bally, working the city and surrounding towns.

"Humor" Window

Lobby decorated with pennants, stills and banners, and though Montpelier has only a weekly paper, John took more than his usual space to emphasize the merits of the picture, this splash alone being responsible for extra admissions. The entire cost of this campaign was around $20.

The above three campaigns illustrate the exploitation put on in the medium sized and smaller communities, with limited advertising budgets. Harry Botwick and Jesse Lund took advantage of the possibilities of their location in summer resort country to make a bid for this business, and John Rundell's gag of advertising for college pennants strikes us as very effective in bringing the picture to the attention of his theatregoers.

Club Index from June 17th to September 2nd

Herewith we list the many items of exploitation, etc., which appeared on the Club pages. By keeping this issue close at hand you can refer to it whenever necessary as a means of locating some particular form of show-selling. We hope our members and readers are finding this service useful. The Club would welcome suggestions to improve it.

"WIRED"...

Earle M. Holden, Mgr. Georgia Theatre, Atlanta, Ga.

Southern premiere "Tarzan, the Fearless." Special Tarzan trailer on screen two weeks advance, followed with special stories and scenes from picture in all three Atlanta papers. Three-sheet cutouts placed prominent spots; also window trims all stores selling Tarzan books followed by Tarzan coloring contest for children. This tied in with Constitution, which runs Tarzan strip, and mention made daily in strip of picture opening. Billing two hundred block and one hundred pictorial threes plus four twenty-fours and five thousand heralds. Block three and pictorial used together made snappy six-sheet. Tarzan trailer from exchange used one week advance; opening fader full up for Tarzan yell at beginning which makes audiences stop, look and listen. Lobby advance and during run plenty of cutouts and stills and during run transferred lobby into jungle, even importing Spanish moss up from Florida. Newspaper advertising heavier than usual with highlight being use of two-column fifteen-inch figure of Tarzan as shown in press sheet. This stole page it was on. No mention made any part of campaign of serial angle, selling as straight feature, and will follow after picture has opened with serial angle. Street truck bally used before and during run.

John W. Creamer, Mgr. Fox Waldo Theatre, Kansas City, Mo.

Realizing that "Be Mine Tonight" would not appeal to my regular patrons, we mailed special cards to all residents of country club district. Society responded nicely, giving largest two days gross in months. Copy follows, I want to remind you to see "Be Mine Tonight" when it is shown at the Waldo Theatre on Thursday and Friday this week. This was followed by comments from Liberty Magazine, Mae Tinee and Walter Winchell. Cards were also mailed to every school of music, organists and music teachers.

E. H. Brient, Mgr. Loew's Theatre, Richmond, Va.

Dear Mike, "One Sunday Afternoon" shot in on short notice. Used regular space in newspapers. Used Herald's house to house. Hagen, author of play lives in Richmond so got two column story on that angle in advance and have Hagen as our guest opening night, when he will take bows. Used old-fashioned buggy with girl and boy dressed in nineteen hundred attire as street ballyhoo. Advance and current regards.

Meyers Tells How To Put On Local Movie

A stunt that brought a month's free newspaper publicity plus six days of box office increase is the local movie produced by Manager George B. Myers, Capitol Theatre, Frankfort, Ky., called "Reunion in Versailles," which went over so well.

The hookup was made with the local paper, in which a cash prize was first offered for the best original one-reel scenario, the daily running stories during the contest, also announcing the winners and publishing the prize scenario.

A week later, the second contest was started, offering screen tests for parts in the movie, the actual tests being taken on the stage with a 35 mm. camera and two Eastman Kodakflectors, which Myers says give plenty of light for indoor photography. This screening was advertised as an added attraction to give the folks an opportunity to see how movies are made.

The printed film returned from the laboratory, George put it on with his regular show advertising it as another added attraction, at the same time announcing the winners, the first actual screening date, and locations on the screen and in his paper, to which the public was invited, thus assuring traffic blocking crowds, as many of the locations were in prominent sections of the town.

Myers then put on a Hollywood opening, with lights, p. a. system announcing local celebrities who were spotlighted on arrival, and ran the completed picture for two days with the rest of his show, getting back more than the cost of the stunt in the extra admissions.

Myers took the pictures himself as he has camera experience and states that the entire cost was about $175. He recommends the employment of some skilled amateur and the renting of a good 35 mm. camera, and suggests that the old standby of including pictures of store fronts and merchants not be used unless the idea cannot be put over without this added help.

We are in accord with George that this is a sweet idea where theatres can afford to handle it. Papers in most cases will be glad to cooperate and the lure of the movies will assure plenty of applicants for parts in the drama, as well as paying audiences to see the picture made and then shown at the theatre.

In Myers' case, the papers ran almost continuous stories and cuts for a month and the house ads carried the names of the local actors, everything being pointed to get the maximum response at the box office.

CHECK!

"Cleaning the Theatre: Chief Methods," by Jack Knight, appears in the current "Better Theatres," published with this issue of Motion Picture Herald, comprehensively describes the most effective cleaning materials and methods in this latest contribution to Mr. Knight's series on maintenance. This practical advice on a most important phase of theatre management should have the undivided attention of every showman. Francis M. Falge's "Selling the Theatre with Light" in the same issue is another feature that should not be ignored. Study them both.

McCaskey Also Goes For That Water Stuff

The colonial city of Williamsburg, Va., now being restored by John D. Rockefeller, places rigid restrictions against most all forms of theatre exploitation, such as street ballys and bill boards, even window displays must be approved for their harmony with the general setting. Therefore, the task of Tom McCaskey, manager of the Williamsburg Theatre, is a bit more difficult in putting over his pictures, in spite of which he did very well on the following "Melody Cruise" campaign.

"Melody" Water Bally

A bannered yacht (see photo) a la Coppock, was used at a nearby bathing beach and with a flock of pretty gals aboard cruised up and down before the bathers, the gals throwing out imprinted candy packages, which also were used by McCaskey in the dining halls and student boarding houses of his local college.

For the first time Tom devoted his lobby completely to art work on the advance campaign of this picture and managed to get in a lot of attractive coloring in spite of restrictions. Advertising in his weekly paper and student publications with flip college copy also helped roll up an attractive gross.

J. Maxwell Joice

Our good old friend, Joice, turns up at the World's Fair as chief of the Amusement Section. He heads the Special Features Division, which "runs the show" at A Century of Progress. Joice has been in showbusiness 13 years as theatre and company manager and director of publicity and advertising for important enterprises, so he is certainly capable of holding down his present connection. Hear you're doing a marvelous job of it, Max, but that doesn't surprise us any.

POSTER ART WORK FOR THE THEATRE!

The above poster is the work of Robert Ewing, artist for the Luna Theatre, Lafayette, Ind. This display was flooded with a green light and the circle had a flasher bulb behind it. The display itself was painted black and white and from all accounts was very attractive. We've had so many requests for samples of art work we'd like you boys to get busy and send some in.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1933, unless otherwise specified.

THE FIRST LINK IN THE CHAIN

THE exhibitor, the laboratory, the actor, the cameraman... back of them all is the negative film on which your pictures are made. For the super-photography you are now able to show your patrons, you can rightly give substantial credit to Eastman Super-sensitive Panchromatic Negative... the first and one of the most important links in the production chain. Eastman Kodak Company. (J. E. Brulatour, Inc., Distributors, New York, Chicago, Hollywood.)

EASTMAN SUPER-SENSITIVE PANCHROMATIC NEGATIVE

"I'm No Angel"...says MAE WEST! "but I've spread my wings a bit... there're people who've been places and seen things... but I've been things and seen places."

Gentlemen:

In view of the fact that we believed the sound at our Ritz Theatre was the best in town, we could not possibly see that your New Wide Range Equipment would be an improvement, and were naturally reluctant in making a change. However, now that we have completed the installation, our only regrets are that we did not know of it sooner.

The improvement was positively a revelation, and we lost no time in installing your New Wide Range Equipment in our other three theatres.

We now believe the sound in our theatres is unequalled, and congratulate you on what we believe is the best equipment on the market.

Very truly yours,
The Ritz Amusement Company.

Louis Gaertner,
General Manager.

Gentlemen:

We are very pleased to inform you that on the strength of the excellent results obtained from the DeForest Sound Systems in our Edgewood and Waverly Theatres we recently gave you orders for twelve additional equipments.

These additional installations are performing very satisfactorily and we are well pleased with same.

Very truly yours,

Where shall we go?

Not only Your entertainment but THEIR COMFORT decides it

IF you are skeptical about the drawing power of comfort, just notice which chairs are left unoccupied in your own home when you have guests—or make the same observation in any hotel lobby.

The public has been too well educated to a taste of real comfort to continue patronizing a theatre whose uncomfortable seats remind them that they'd rather be home resting. People come to the theatre to rest, to relax—as much as they come to be entertained. It won't take them long to discover the theatre that doesn't offer comfort—and the one that does.

Comfort in your seats — generously upholstered, shaped to fit the body, designed for complete relaxation—is luxury for your patrons—but for you it's just good sound business.

We've made it our business to know what type of seat is most appropriate for each type of theatre. Permit us to discuss your seating needs and you will find our advice to be dependable, practical and profitable.

Observations

¶ A new show season has again begun. Once more the motion picture theatre enters upon that period of eight or nine months when people of town and city maintain the even tenor of urban existence. Lake and shore, links and highway have had their fling. A million snapshots (as yet unmounted) are all that remain of June's madness. The schools are open, the front porch will be soon a mere architectural appendage. Fresh curtains are at the windows, and the panes have been cleaned for safer outlooks. Even the conventions are being dusted off! Life is returning inside.

All of that happens every year, but for the past few years it has meant little of cheer to the showman. This new show season, however, is the first under the New Deal. It follows a summer of feverish, ingenious and quite successful effort to rehabilitate the nation. This first month of the new season, indeed, marks virtual completion of the broader aims of the national recovery program. The 1933-34 show season is new with justifiable hope.

We of the show business first learned of better times during the off-season just past. Instead of decreasing, as it normally does during the summer months, motion picture theatre patronage actually increased. Still more surprising is the fact that June, July and August saw scores of reopenings.

Business in general, of course, is enjoying a steady pickup. Perhaps everyone is more or less cognizant of that. Before us lies a copy of a recent issue of Printers' Ink, leading advertising journal. Advertising is a persuasive index. And we have a half-dozen newspapers announcing increases in lineage over that of 1932. During July, 1933, the amount of advertising in the Chicago Tribune was 35% greater than that of July, 1932. There is no need in our reciting the evidence here, however, for it is being published daily in the public press. Suffice it to repeat the latest advice of the government, that since last March employment has already risen 23%, while wages have increased over 50%.

There was nothing like that to report in September, 1923. To the contrary. Then came January, February—what right did we have to expect anything but the worst? Let us remember those dark months when some circumstance incites us to complain that we have not yet attained the best. This new show season begins with times definitely better. How much better they become is partly up to all of us in this show business.

¶ Are architects people? If so, why? And when an architect designs a motion picture theatre, is he a theatre architect? There is no particular reason for cutting the list of questions short at that point, of course, but then there is no particular reason, we suppose, for extending it. We have our own pet notions about these matters anyway, and maybe nobody else is interested. What we really started out to say is that George E. Eichenlaub is both right and wrong in his notions about exhibitors and editors.

Mr. Eichenlaub is the well known architect of Erie, Pa., who for several years has elected to forget all about his previous congenial relations with this journal. Now comes a letter which, omitting an apology, deplores the alleged indifference on the part of theatre operators toward the alleged value of architects. Says Mr. Eichenlaub:

"Since the investment is measured in thousands and the architect's fee in tens or hundreds, it obviously is poor judgment to save on the tens. But boy [We're not a boy, but let Mr. E. have his joke—Ed.], I'm here to tell that most theatre owners do just that! It still is a mystery how successful business men—money-makers, I mean—so often walk around the architect hoping to save the tens when thousands are being spent and the future mortgaged on the result, which experience shows frequently to turn out as the 'successee's' one bad investment and headache. Don't ask me for the list."

We didn't, but we did write back, rather seriously, that most of the smaller exhibitors "find it difficult to realize how specialized is the modern picture theatre as a building, and that to save $100 in an architect's fee is usually to waste a good deal more money in errors of design and construction." To which Mr. E. has the audacity to reply, "Oh, all right, all right. The Ed. voices his fear that exhibs can't part with $100, which only shows what boobs editors can be!"

Well, all right, all right. Only we don't fear that exhibs can't part with $100. They just don't want to! Maybe they will want to when the profession of architecture itself fully appreciates the function of the motion picture theatre, as a social instrument and as an art mechanism.—G. S.

SELLING THE THEATRE WITH LIGHT

By FRANCIS M. FALGE

What makes up true modern illumination, and its application to the advertising purposes of the motion picture theatre exterior

A BOLD attempt to venture into the modern in the past has not always meant the smoothest sailing because modern has so often been misinterpreted. "Modernistic," "futuristic" and other rather sensational, purely stylistic effects have been confused with the simple, true modern treatment which utilizes to every advantage, functional and otherwise, the facilities that are products of our own time.

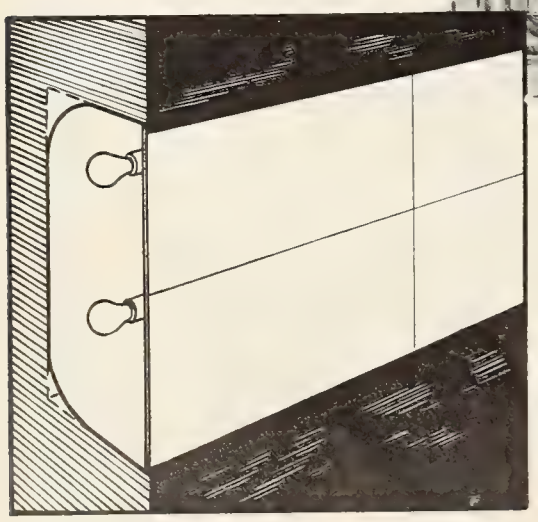
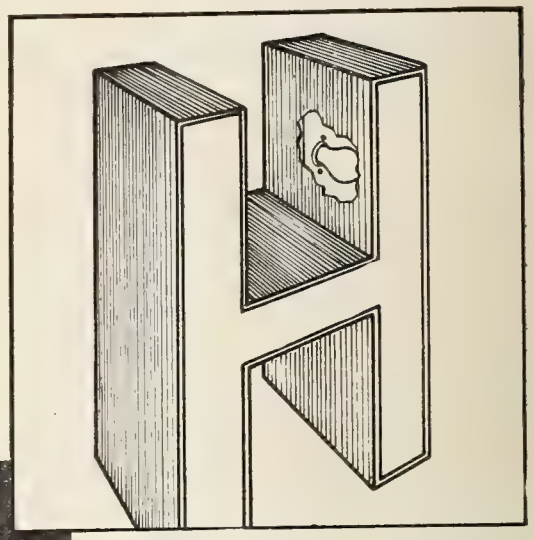
Modern lighting effects are planned to give a structure a distinctive night-time aspect, to be a component part of the building and wholly in harmony with it. They are built in rather than stuck on. Soft-glowing, indirectly lighted surfaces, striking silhouettes, carefully planned color effects, and a wide variety of luminous panels are a few of the many elements of modern light architecture which are capable of infinite variety and appeal.

Figure 1



Now of all the establishments which can incorporate modern lighting to advantage, the theatre can perhaps profit most. The prevailing form of theatrical entertainment is modern in concept. The theatre was among the first to embrace such modern developments as air conditioning and colored lighting effects. Pictures are modern in scenery and costuming. Yet rarely has our modern theatre more than touched the rich resources of lighting. Then, too, the theatre does its best business at night, when modern lighting effects are at their best, whereas many others who wish to attract the public, such as stores, do their selling during the daytime and only their advertising at night. With the theatre the opportunity and the wish to buy come at the same time.



At left is a sketch of a brilliantly modern theatre facade designed to show the use of letters in silhouette against a luminous background, reversing the usual sign procedure. Above is Figure 2.

Large and small and narrow and wide panels are prominently featured in modern illumination effects. Vertical columns, horizontal elements, ceilings, pylons, or sign elements are a few of the applications of panels to the exteriors of theatres.

MODERN DEVICES

COVE LIGHTING is the commonly accepted term for the luminous recesses extensively used in the theatre, but modifications of the earlier concepts of cove lighting allow us to use light more efficiently and effectively. By covering cove recesses with diffusing glass, as shown in Figure 1, a more finished effect is produced and the lighting element stays cleaner and may be cleaned easier. Proper design and planning of the cove recesses assures the desired smoothness of lighting effect with a minimum of lamps and equipment.

Solid-appearing block letters of modern character are made smoothly luminous by facing the channels with a good type of diffusing glass, such as flashed-opal (Figure 2). This type of letter is widely used in Europe. Its use on many buildings at the Century of Progress in Chicago indicates its effectiveness, and suggests that it has many possibilities in this country.

A most interesting effect that is coming into new prominence is the production of sharp black silhouettes, featuring areas in light and shade (Figure 3), or using opaque letters silhouetted against a lighted background (Figure 4). This treatment seems to add interest as compared with a large unbroken luminous area. Silhouettes, of course, are not new, but the modern methods of using them are.

The Colosseum theatre in Berlin and how it sells itself with light. In addition to luminous panels and a glass-faced block letter sign is a marquee completely of diffusing glass. Posters are a feature of the theatre front rather than an afterthought.

Above, a sketch of a design for a theatre front employing the new forms and materials, which are built in, not stuck on, in the true modern technique, and at the same time provide the elements that attract public attention. At left is Figure 3.

In the element shown in Figure 3, a thin channel just large enough for the lamps is used to conceal the lamps and form the silhouette. Much wider areas, decorative shapes, etc., may be used to conceal the lamps and produce the silhouettes. Silhouettes may be produced with open illuminated recesses, or those faced with diffusing glass.

Silhouette letters (Figure 4) are the most legible type of luminous display. Furthermore, they feature the use of large areas of white space, a sound principle in advertising. They are less costly to operate because so much more of the light is really useful than with older types of cutout letters. When the letters are three dimensional, the display has an unusually fine appearance both by day and by night.

In Figure 5 is illustrated a new idea for changeable attraction letters. By an ingenious mounting arrangement, opaque changeable letters are slipped into place between opaque horizontal strips which also act as supports for the glass. The glass is permanently mounted, and not affected when changes of copy are made. In addition to the advantage of economy, these letters require less storage space, are easier to handle without breakage, offer much more flexibility as to letter type, and the panel stays cleaner and is easier to clean. Less than half the wattage required with older types produces a brighter and better effect.

Today, of course, there is available a wealth of newly developed glasses of various degrees of diffusion and attractive colorings. Perhaps of most interest from the illumination standpoint is flashed-opal glass, which has a very thin layer of opal applied to clear glass. With proper lamping, adequate smoothness is obtained and there is a greatly increased light output compared with the older solid opal glasses.

THE MAKE-UP OF MODERN ELEMENTS

FOR SPARKLE, there is a wide variety of configurated glasses, and designs may be etched or ground into diffusing glass to lend interest and sparkle.

The fact that white or lightly tinted surfaces reflect much more light than the darker surfaces has always been recognized but not always used to advantage. The unseen interiors of luminous elements should be of a good matte white, and reflecting surfaces white or lightly tinted.

Letters with some body are to be preferred to flat metal cutout letters. This is especially true from the daytime standpoint, since the former appear in relief and have a more finished appearance.

Polished metals such as chromium, aluminum or stainless steel are a prominent part of modern design. Spacing bars allowing glass to be made in reasonable sizes are desirable and can be made a feature in the design, though because of irradiation the lighted areas appear too close in on them and make them inconspicuous.

Most of the new normal types of modern display are not only more attractive but cost less to operate.

A FAMOUS THEATRE PASSES: THE CINEMA MARCHES ON!

The obituary of an institution and an era. The Tootle theatre, pride of another day and its troupers, is gone

By EUGENE D. RICH

ONCE THE MOST beautiful theatre west of Chicago and the most noted playhouse west of New York City, the Tootle theatre in St. Joseph, Mo., has bowed before the march of time. A large modern office building will replace the famous old Tootle Opera House, as it was once called, where virtually every great star of the past half-century has appeared. Today St. Joe goes to the movies.

The Tootle Opera House was a gift to St. Joseph by Milton Tootle, Sr., then recognized from Coast to Coast as the "merchant prince of the northwest." It is his son, Milton Tootle, Jr., who supervised the razing of the noted pleasure palace. And so well was this great theatre constructed in 1872, that the four outer walls of the building have been left standing, to be used for the new structure.

Many stars and many managers have been in the Tootle theatre during the half-century that it has offered everything from the grandest grand opera to small-time tab shows and motion pictures. There was the time that Martin Beck himself came to St. Joseph in 1904 to supervise Orpheum circuit presentations there.

One still marvels at the beauty that was the interior of the theatre. The massive staircase in the lobby was constructed in 1893, when the theatre was remodeled. It was of solid red marble, with brass stepnoses on every step. Its highly polished finish presented a dazzling spectacle when the varicolored lights were on in the lobby. On one wall in the lobby was a mirror approximately 20 by 30 feet.

The interior walls, ceiling and ornamentations remained well preserved. There was a sky effect on the ceiling and dome finished in French renaissance and rococo Louis XIV architecture. There were three large painted figures in oils on the ceiling —one, the goddess of Drama holding a mask, another the goddess of Music kneeling beside a harp, and the third a dancing girl. These were all painted by well-known artists of the day in New York City and sent to St. Joseph. They became a little faded by time.

The woodwork of the balcony and box exteriors were done in old ivory and gold leaf. The outside box ornamentations were massive. There were carved animal figures on the old loges, fitted first with gas then electric lights. Each of the figures had red glass eyes, giving a dazzling effect when lighted. Heavy curtains were in the loges and boxes, which were outfitted with easy chairs for the patrons. Heavily covered plush chairs were used in the orchestra pit and balconies.

The Tootle was one of the first theatres in the United States to have three separate balconies besides the orchestra. Yet the seating capacity was only 1,472. On the main floor were two huge boxes, each seating several persons; 12 large loges, 24 divans, and the orchestra of 360 seats. The total first floor seating capacity was 502. The first and second balconies each seated 275 persons, while the third balcony contained nearly 300 seats. W. Angelo Powell, a noted architect of a half century ago, arranged the floor plans. So deceiving were the seating arrangements, due to the three balconies, that a noted Shakespearean actor once doubted when he was told that the capacity house was only 1,400.

When gas was used in the house, the theatre was noted for its fine chandelier. The makers were proud of its 132 separate jets, which, they boasted, "gave forth a great array of light."

No show was ever too big for presentation at the Tootle theatre. The stage proper measured 50 feet deep, approximately 100 feet wide, and 67 feet high. In addition, there was a scenery construction room 45 feet high, 60 feet long and 25 feet deep, equipped with a massive sliding scaffold.

The switchboard was made of solid marble, containing 39 switches with corresponding ones for gas cut-offs. There were 40 complete sets of scenery with 36 additional sets of ropes for visiting company scenes. In all there were 80,000 feet of 5/8-inch rigging rope. The clothes closets of the dressing rooms were bigger than most dressing rooms of today. All wood finishings backstage were of walnut, mahogany and oak.

Built into the stage roof was a huge steel water tower, of several thousand gallons

CLEANING THE THEATRE: CHIEF METHODS

By J. T. KNIGHT, JR.

A practical discussion of materials and their use—the fifth article in a series on the maintenance of motion picture theatres

IN LISTING the items that require periodic cleaning in a number of theatres, it becomes apparent that there is a very large variety of surfaces, textiles and fixtures to be cared for and cleaned. Even a partial list of items within one particular theatre will emphasize the real necessity for proper supervision and intelligent instruction of the janitors or cleaning force.

A full appreciation of the scope of this problem makes it obvious that the entire subject cannot be covered in one article. Each article, however, will contain information of immediate interest and use to each manager who reads any one of this series.

This article covers materials most generally used. The knowledge of cleaning materials is necessary and important if the theatre is to be properly cleaned. The cleaners cannot do good and satisfactory work with improper materials. Unfortunately the mentality of the average theatre cleaner is not of sufficiently high calibre to enable him to always make a wise selection. The manager must provide the proper materials and instruct the help in their proper use.

The following paragraphs are written to bring to the attention of the manager some important considerations.

Possibly the five most universally used commodities in the cleaning process of any theatre are (1) water, (2) soap, (3) cleaning compounds and powders, (4) metal polish, and (5) furniture polish.

It is well to consider each of these in some detail in order that all may understand and appreciate their importance in the cleaning methods of any theatre. Because water is used in most of the cleaning processes about a theatre it is not out of order to consider it first and bring consideration of it to theatre managers at this time.

PREPARATION OF WATER

WATER is generally classified as hard or soft. Hardness in water is most easily detected by the reaction which occurs when soap is added. Such reaction with the soap forms insoluble substances which are of a waxy or gummy nature and adhere to any surface or object met with in the cleaning process.

Hardness in water is caused by the presence in varying amounts of other chemicals. Most frequently these "other chemicals" are magnesium and calcium. However other elements of less importance are present in the water of many localities, for instance iron and aluminum. These elements are the causes of the gummy reactions when soap is added to such water. Such gummy deposits as often seen in cleaning pails about the water line, and in wash basins and slop sinks, indicate clearly the presence of elements in the water which classify that water as hard.

Such hard water detracts from the efficient results of your cleaners' efforts. On all surfaces this waxy or gummy deposit is detrimental. This is especially so on floors, particularly marble floors, for it makes them very slippery thereby liable to cause accidents.

To render hard water soft offers no particular difficulty and the expense involved is almost negligible. There are many commercial water softening compounds on the market in either crystal, powder or liquid form. Because the softening of water in most states requires such a small quantity of water softening compound, the greatest difficulty may be in avoiding an excess of the chemicals employed. In adding softening agents the water to be softened should be warm in order to get the desired effect; in cold water the process of softening does not take place effectively. After the softening agent has been added, and the hardness overcome, the addition of soap should permit the easy formation of suds which usually persists for several minutes after the agitation of the water has been discontinued.

For specific information about the degree of hardness of water in any particular locality contact the municipal authorities, bureau of water supply, or write to the geological department of your State.

The use of water softener is recommended in order to efficiently carry out a cleaning program with facility and with the least amount of damage to the surfaces cleaned.

KINDS OF SOAP AND THEIR USE

THE SECOND of the basic commodities used in the cleaning of theatres is soap. It therefore should be discussed here. Soap is a chemical compound or mixture of chemical compounds resulting from the combination of fatty oils and fats with alkalis, such as potash, soda, or ammonia.

Almost without exception potash soap, even if made from solid fatty substances, are soft or jelly soaps, while soda soaps are the hard soaps. There are, however, considerable variations in consistency obtained according to the prevailing fatty substance, or by mixtures of different soaps with varying characteristics.

The cleansing or detergent power of soap when in solution with water is due to the formation of an absorption compound with the dirt, whereby the dirt is loosened from the surface being cleaned, and carried in suspension in the so-called lather of the soap. In this process the dirt is hindered from redepositing on the surface being cleaned. As the soapy lather carried the dirt in suspension then all of the soap lather must be removed by sufficient rinsing of the surface. It follows that when a floor for instance has not been thoroughly rinsed, some dirt must necessarily remain on the floor.

The application of a soapy solution to a dirty surface in a sense "lubricates" the dirt particles, thereby rendering them less adherent and easily removed by rubbing with either mop, rag or brush. A solution of soap exerts a solvent or emulsifying action on oils and greases, thereby facilitating their removal from the dirty surface.

CLEANING COMPOUNDS AND THEIR USE

THE THIRD of the basic elements necessary in the work of cleaning a theatre, and which must be discussed here, is the cleaning compound. Most of the cleaning compounds known to the trade contain a small percentage of soap with an added amount of alkaline salts, plus a large percentage of an abrasive. This abrasive may be fine and soft or large, gritty and sharp. The percentage of alkaline salts and the kinds of abrasive are the important considerations in selecting a proper cleaning powder.

Alkaline salts generally found in cleaning compounds are most generally sodium carbonate, sodium bicarbonate, trisodium phosphate or the sodium borates. All of these materials have a detergent action on the surface to which they are applied. In addition they have to some degree a softening effect upon the water.

The presence of the alkaline salts is to make the cleaning of a dirty surface easier, but it definitely has an injurious effect upon the surface cleaned unless handled carefully and in only sufficient amount to accomplish the job in hand—there should be no excess. The surface must be thoroughly rinsed several times after cleaning with any compound containing alkalis.

In order to illustrate the detrimental effect of alkaline salts in a cleaning compound, consider a marble tile such as might be part of any marble floor. Such a piece of marble could be submerged and soaked in a strong alkaline solution for months without resulting in any appreciable damage. But if this piece of marble were alternately submerged and taken out and dried an entirely different physical action would take place.

The salt solution penetrates the marble, and in the drying process only the water evaporates, leaving the salt crystals in the pores of the marble. These salt crystals which continue to form in the marble increase in size with each submersion and drying process until these crystals exert such a pressure, or internal strain within the marble that it causes it to crack. The severity of this internal pressure is not generally appreciated. It is the use of improper cleaning compounds with insufficient rinsing that has caused many fine marble lobby floors to crack and otherwise show signs of disintegration.

It follows that it is much better to use cleaning compounds very sparingly. Unless the floor or other surface to be cleaned is very dirty, don't use the so-called scouring powders on it but rather clean it by using a mild and neutral soap.

The abrasive present in cleaning powders is generally powdered pumice stone, crushed quartz, volcanic ash or soap stone.

Powdered pumice is an excellent abrasive and depending upon its fineness is an effective and satisfactory agent in any cleaning compound; it, however, is a sharp and cutting element and is detrimental unless it is very, very fine.

Crushed quartz is not so satisfactory for theatre use as its abrasive action is very sharp and cutting.

Volcanic ash is a natural mineral product found in the vicinity of ancient, extinct volcanoes and when crushed takes the form of flat infinitesimal flakes. This shape gives it a very smooth scouring quality when used as an element of a cleaning powder.

Soap stone also becomes a very good scouring agent, dependent upon the fineness to which it is ground.

Finally, the ideal cleaning powder is one which will:

(1) Actually remove dirt and grime and mud with the minimum amount of material and labor.

(2) Clean without scratching or otherwise marring the surface being cleaned.

(3) Can readily be removed by mopping or rinsing after the cleaning operation has been completed.

(4) Not disintegrate floors or other surfaces because of the presence of an excess quantity of alkaline salt.

KINDS AND USE OF METAL POLISH

METAL POLISHES are made in three different forms: powder, paste and liquid. Each of these types has its distinct advantages and its disadvantages. The quantity of metal to be polished during any one cleaning period, the frequency with which the metal is polished, the kind of metal to be polished and the personal preference of the user will determine the type of polish to be used. The personal selection of the manager should be determined by careful consideration of the results obtained and the cost. Cost is the cost of materiol and labor.

Liquid metal polish is in most general use at the present time, primarily because it permits of more economical use than either the powder or paste forms. Liquid polishes may be divided into three classes; oil, benzine, and water types.

The oil type is very satisfactory so far as final results are concerned, but it requires an excess of manual labor in order to remove the superfluous oil or grease.

The benzine polish works the fastest, therefore requires the least labor, but it leaves a residue of pinkish or whitish powder in scratches, cracks and crevices of the metal cleaned. In addition it leaves no protective coating against rapid tarnishing of the metal.

The water polish containing an ammonia soap has a free and rapid effect; it does not leave a powdery residue and does protect against rapid tarnishing of the metal by leaving a film of oil (from the soap content) which protects the metal.

SELECTION OF POLISHING MATERIAL

ALL METAL POLISHES are designed with the twofold purpose of cleaning and polishing. The perfect polish should be easily applied, should act quickly removing grime, tarnish and other incrustations, should leave a high lustre, should not scratch and must be harmless to the metal upon which it is used, and harmless to the hands of the worker applying it. All of these requirements, plus a protective coating, are highly necessary and desirable.

There are some polishes on the market that are very quick acting, too quick acting, which indicates that either the abrasive used in them is entirely too coarse and too sharp, or that they contain an acid which eats into the metal and which would undoubtedly injure the hands of the worker using that polish. Such polishes should be avoided even though they apparently do a satisfactory job. Their continued use will loosen the joints of brass rails, the fastenings of grilles and signs and will actually pit the metal. Such action will in the long run require expensive repairs or replacements.

It becomes necessary to consider carefully all these various points in selecting a polish suitable for the particular work in hand.

If the metal to be cleaned is not worked on frequently and it is badly coated with tarnish and corroded, it becomes necessary to select a polish with a gritty abrasive to accomplish this purpose. On the other hand, where the metal surface is cleaned daily or every other day a polish containing a fine, smooth or soft abrasive will accomplish very satisfactory results.

Select metal polish carefully. A liquid polish of the ammonia soap base type with a soft abrasive is recommended for general theatre use.

THE POLISHING OF FURNITURE

THERE IS on the market today a great variety of furniture polish, sold under trade names and usually at prices much above their real value. In general furniture polish may be placed in one of three classifications: (1) oils, (2) oil and water emulsions, and (3) wax pastes.

Many contain very mild abrasives to aid in removing grime and dirt, some contain soap for the same purpose, and a few contain an acid.

A polish for finished wood surfaces should have cleansing properties, should act quickly and easily and leave, when wiped and rubbed dry, a glossy, dry surface which will not streak when a dry finger is passed across the surface.

OIL TYPE POLISH

The straight oil type of polish, when first applied and rubbed off, gives the impression of an excellent polish. The surface has really been left with a thin coating of oil adhering to it, thus giving the result a uniform appearance, reflecting light from the oil film; but when rubbed with the finger streaks appear which proves the presence of an excess of oil. This film of oil most naturally collects and holds dust and in a short time the surface becomes dull and grimy.

WAX TYPE POLISH

The wax type of polish is generally excellent. Its use requires a maximum of labor. The excess of wax must be removed, then the surface vigorously rubbed to bring it up to a brilliant polish.

OIL-WATER EMULSION

The oil and water emulsion polish is considered best for general theatre use. Polish of this type generally combines the functions of cleaning and polishing. With a minimum of effort they produce a clean, lustrous and non-streakable surface on the furniture.

APPLICATION OF POLISH

Cleaning and polishing should always be done with straight line back and forth motion with the grain of the wood. Do not use a circular motion. Grit adhering to the varnish surface puts microscopic scratches in the finished surface each of which reflects light. The more parallel these scratches are kept the higher reflective finish will be attained.

All polishing processes consist of means of producing a smooth surface. Under the microscope a polished surface shows a maze of scratches. The finer and the more uniform the scratches are the higher the brilliancy will be produced in the finished surface.

CONSTRUCTING THEATRE ADVERTISING

3.—The Art of Photoengraving

Reviewing the elementals of a craft that is taking a greater and greater part in the field of advertising

By GEORGE SCHUTZ

PHOTOENGRAVING may be described as a method of transforming pictures into metal for printing. By means of the art, a picture first is taken, the negative is transferred to a sensitized metal plate, and into this plate is etched a likeness of the subject photographed in such manner that it may be transferred to paper.

Photoengraving is intimately allied in the commercial and periodical printing today. In the preparation of all kinds of advertising it is used extensively—much more than even the appearance of some advertisements indicates. All advertising illustrations (except in very rare instances) are made in this way. But in addition, the type matter itself is frequently printed from engraved plates. In advertising, photoengraving is being used more and more to supply publishers a finished advertisement, ready for printing without any composition or makeup at the publisher's hands.

The extent to which a knowledge of photoengraving processes is valuable in the management of theatres depends upon the practices of the theatre. Many smaller houses dispense with illustrations altogether in their newspaper advertising. Others use stereotype mattes or ready-made cuts supplied by the distribtuor or an advertising service. Members of theatre staffs, however, never know when they will be placed in a position in which some knowledge of photoengraving would enable them to handle their advertising with greater effectiveness and facility.

When we arrive in this series to a discussion of advertising layout, the steps taken in the preparation of various examples of theatre advertising will be described, with an explanation of any photoengraving processes involved. In order that these explanations may be readily understood by those unfamiliar with modern photoengraving a knowledge of its elementals is necessary.

MAIN DIVISIONS OF PHOTOENGRAVING

THE ART of photoengraving is divided into two principal divisions: halftones and line etchings. The processes are much the same, except with respect to photographing and the material of which the plate is made. Whether one or the other is to be used is geenrally indicated by the nature of the copy. A photograph of a landscape, for example, would be reproduced by the halftone process because of its geenral opacity and variation in tone. A pen and ink drawing of the same landscape could be reproduced as a line etching, only the lines made by the pen being desired. Let us consider these distinctions further.

HALFTONES

In order to make a true likeness of the photograph to be reproduced, with all its varying degrees of darkness and lightness, the subject is photographed by the engraver through a screen. The effect on the negative is that of a vast number of dots, varying in intensity according to the tones of the original photograph. It is these dots that print and effect a reproduction of the subject on paper.

In line etchings no variation in tone is possible without a special process (except to the extent the copy may have a smaller or greater number of lines or dots concentrated in certain areas). The subject is not photographed through a screen, but directly, and the plate prints merely black (or whatever colored ink is used) and white. There are no tones. Any portion of the copy that is not dark enough to make a proper impression on the photographic plate (negative) is totally lost to the finished engraving.

Thus, in the main, may be indicated the basic distinction between halftones and line etchings. A further technical difference lies in the use of copper plates, etched by chloride of iron, for halftones; and zinc plates, etched by nitric acid, for line etchings. Because of the softness of newsprint, calling for a very coarse screen (sparse dot formation), and because a softer metal than copper is suitable to their processes, newspapers can also use zinc for halftones. In all cases, however, the sheet of metal containing an impression of the subject and properly prepared, is placed in a chemical bath, and the chemicals cut away those portions of the plate from which no impression is wanted in printing.

Examples of the two basic photoengraving methods. The left-hand engravings are line etchings, the first as made from the copy, the second with tones added by the Ben Day process. The two reproductions of a portrait of Ruth Chatterton are halftones, the first made with a 55-line screen, the other made with a 133-line screen.

BEN DAY PROCESSING

IN REFERENCE to line etchings, it was stated that variations in tone could not be attained in this type of reproduction without employing a special process. That special process is called Ben Day, after the man who invented it.

Briefly, this process consists in transferring to the entire negative, or to any portion of it, an effect of a screen, stripes, weaves or any of many other patterns.

This does not mean, however, that the tonal qualities of a photograph could thus be achieved. Without use of a halftone screen these would be entirely lost or transformed into black. The Ben Day process (except in special cases that need not be touched on here) is used to add interest to line drawings by filling certain white areas, or lightening certain dark areas.

As such Ben Day is extensively employed today in the making of line etchings, especially for advertising. It permits the "painting in" of interesting backgrounds without the services of an artist. It can give a certain photographic quality to drawings. It is even being used today for the making of color plates from pen or pencil subjects.

The process as developed today is fairly simple, requiring relatively little more time than an ordinary "black-and-white" line etching, and adding, on the average, only in the neighborhood of 50 per cent to the cost. It is not photographic, but entirely mechanical. Having made his photographic plate from the copy, the engraver covers with gambage those portions of this negative which are not to receive a Ben Day effect. Then he lays the proper Ben Day film upon the negative and rolls an impression of the film upon it. The gambage is then removed, and the negative bears the Ben Day effect only where it was wanted. Many different effects may thus be transferred to the same negative, a few of which are shown in accompanying illustrations. Any engraver can supply examples of the various Ben Day effects, with a corresponding number to aid ordering.

MISCELLANEOUS ENGRAVING EFFECTS

HALFTONES as well as line etchings sometimes lend themselves to special mechanical processing for effect. One usually sees halftones squares or rectangular, and probably there are relatively few occasions when they would be as pleasing otherwise. Sometimes, however, the subject suggests emphasis on certain elements, or the layout may indicate variation from the usual shape.

Possible treatments in such cases in a circular or oval shape, an outline and a vignette. The first two are self-explanatory. By an outline halftone is meant one in which the background is cut away from certain elements of the subject. Everything except a small portion of the area on which a figure is standing is sometimes so removed, or the spire of a building is so outlined that its only background is the paper itself when the engraving is printed. This effect is achieved merely by tooling around the element and routing out the unwanted metal.

A vignette is obtained in the acid-etching stage of the process. By controlling the effect of the acid on the plate through the use of acid-resistant material, the dot formation shades off gradually toward the edges of the engraving, and when printed, the reproduction seems to blend into the tone of the paper.

Halftones may also be combined with line etchings, which is a possibility so important to the theatre advertiser that it will be considered in this article under a separate heading. In this connection especially it should be pointed out that line etchings may also be made in reverse—that is, instead of the engraving printing black on white, the letters or pattern are formed by the paper, which appears through the etched-out portions of the reproduction. The reverse engraving is extensively used for variation and for making conspicuous trade-mark logotypes.

Reproduction of a Radio City advertisement in the New York Times, incorporating a large line drawing, Ben Day and reverse effects. The background for the figure was inked in in black by the artist, then stippled by the engraver. The star name and title are drawn letters and were reproduced with the figure by the line etching process. In this case the main body of the type matter could have been similarly reproduced, or the type itself inserted into a mortise.

ADAPTATION OF SCREENS

AS WE NOTED above, halftones make their impression in printing by means of tiny dots, the variation of which effects the tones of the subject. The screen through which the subject, or copy, is photographed in order to render the dot formation upon the negative, is selected according to the nature of the paper upon which the engraving is to be printed. Very soft paper of loose texture spreads ink, and consequently it requires a very sparse dot formation—that is, a very coarse screen. If the proper screen has 55 lines to the inch, it is designated a 55-line screen. There are screens for almost any practical density, as high as 175 lines to the inch. The latter could be used for only the hardest coated papers. A halftone made with a fine screen and printed on soft paper would look smudgy, while one of coarse screen printed on hard enamel paper would appear little more than so many dots.

These considerations are of significance in theatre advertising chiefly with respect to announcements, programs and so on, when the person in charge of advertising might have to select the paper. Newspapers and other periodicals have a fixed grade of screen. For some it is a 55-line screen, for others (those using a slightly better quality of newsprint) it is a 65-line screen. (See accompanying illustrations.)

THE COMPLETE ZINC ADVERTISEMENT

GROWING IN use, especially in the larger cities, is the zinc etching of the complete advertisement. General advertisers have employed this method extensively for quite some time, and it is increasing in favor among theatres, particularly those which frequently use good-sized space and considerable illustration.

The method varies according to whether photographs, wash drawings or line sketches are used. It is simplest when the illustrations are entirely in line. In this case, the advertisement is laid out in both type arrangement and art work. The latter, of course, is much larger than even the entire advertisement is to be. The layout is therefore scaled in a larger size according to the space to be used, and the type is ordered accordingly. After spacing and allocating the type according to the layout, the compositor "pulls" a clean, clear proof, and this proof is sent to the theatre, where it is pasted into the large layout in proper relationship to the art work. This entire paste-up comprises the engraver's copy, which which a zinc etching is made in a reduction to fit the advertising space purchased. Type an dillustrations are thus on a single plate, and no composition or make-up is required of the newspaper.

A variation in this method is possible and sometimes necessary, as when type of the proper sizes for the large layout is not available in the faces (styles) wanted. In such an event, the type can be set in dimensions smaller than those corresponding to the size of the original art work. A proof of this type is then made into an engraver's negative an event the type can be set in dimensions, proportionate to the large layout, but smaller. A proof of this type may then be made into an engraver's negative of the dimensions called for by the size of the advertisement. At the same time, an engraver's negative is made of the

By LEO T. PARKER

Continuing a discussion of the attitude of the courts toward union action, begun in the August 26th issue

UNION MEMBERS may peacefully enforce their demands for wages by strikes if they violate no contracts of employment with their employer, although a theatre owner may be affected unfavorably by the regulations of the union. So held the higher court in the recent case of Bayer vs. Brotherhood of America (154 Atl. 759, Trenton, New Jersey).

CASE:

The facts of this case are that according to its adopted custom a union placed an employer on its "unfair" list and attempted to collect fines from the employer's employees. However, no threats or other violent means were used by the union to compel the employer or his employees to meet the union demands. The employer filed suit against the union and asked for an injunction to prevent the union from continuing its practice. In refusing to grant the injunction to the petitioners, the court said:

DECISION:

"Ordinarily, when such a combination of persons does not use violence, actual or threatened, to accomplish their purpose, it is difficult to point out with clearness the illegal means or end which makes the combination an unlawful conspiracy; for it is generally lawful for the combiners to withdraw their intercourse and its benefits from any person, and to announce their intention of doing so, and it is equally lawful for the others, of their own motion, to do that which the combiners seek to compel them to do. In the instant case, there is no charge that defendants have resorted to violence or threatened violence."

UNION ACTS THAT ARE ILLEGAL

IT IS ILLEGAL for members of a union to perform acts of duress, or make threats or otherwise attempt to intimidate theatre patrons. Moreover, if the testimony shows that the acts of the members, who are picketing the theatre, are liable to cause injury to theatre patrons, or if presence of these members is intended to block pedestrians from entering the theatre, these acts are unlawful and the court will grant an injunction.

CASE:

In the case of Bomes vs. Motion Picture Operators (155 Atl. 581, Providence, Rhode Island), the testimony indicated that the union members attempted to force a theatre owner to make a contract to employ only members of the union. Further testimony showed that during the time the theatre was open for business two members of the union continuously parade back and forth on the sidewalk in front of the theatre with paper placards upon which were conspicuously printed the words, "This theatre does not employ union moving picture machine operators affiliated with the American Federation of Labor."

The theatre owner filed suit and argued that the court should issue an injunction to prevent picketing because the presence of two men walking back and forth on the sidewalk blocked the pedestrian traffic. Other evidence was given that the pickets had pushed against a theatre patron, and other persons were told by the pickets that it was dangerous to enter the theatre.

DECISION:

In view of this testimony the court is-

A SAFEGUARD IN THEATRE BUYING

BY M. MARVIN BERGER
MEMBER NEW YORK BAR

THE PROSPECTIVE purchaser or lessor of a motion picture theatre should be always mindful of the possibility of future competition from the person from whom he acquires his theatre.

Assume that John Jones, wishing to own a motion picture theatre, approaches Fred Smith with the proposal to purchase Smith's theatre. The theatre is the only one in a town of say, 8,000, and Smith, in the course of the years during which he has owned it, has built up a valuable good will. The parties come to an agreement on price, and the theatre changes hands, simply by Smith giving Jones a deed to the property. A few months later Smith informs Jones that he has decided that the town can support two theatres, and that he intends to erect another theatre.

Such a happening is always possible in the transfer of a theatre, yet with the proper precautions it can easily be avoided. The courts, recognizing the necessity for protecting the purchaser of a business, will enforce an agreement which reasonably restricts competition by the seller.

The usual form of such an agreement is a promise by the seller of the business not to engage in a business competing either directly or indirectly with that of the purchaser, for a certain period of time within a certain area. In the case of a theatre, such an agreement need not be confined to the outright purchase of a theatre. It may extend to the leasing of a theatre or even to the purchase of the stock of a corporation owning a theatre.

In the case of an agreement not to compete, as applied to the sale or lease of a theatre, it is necessary to consider the district from which the theatre draws its patronage, in fixing the area of non-competition. This area will necessarily vary according to the circumstances of each case.

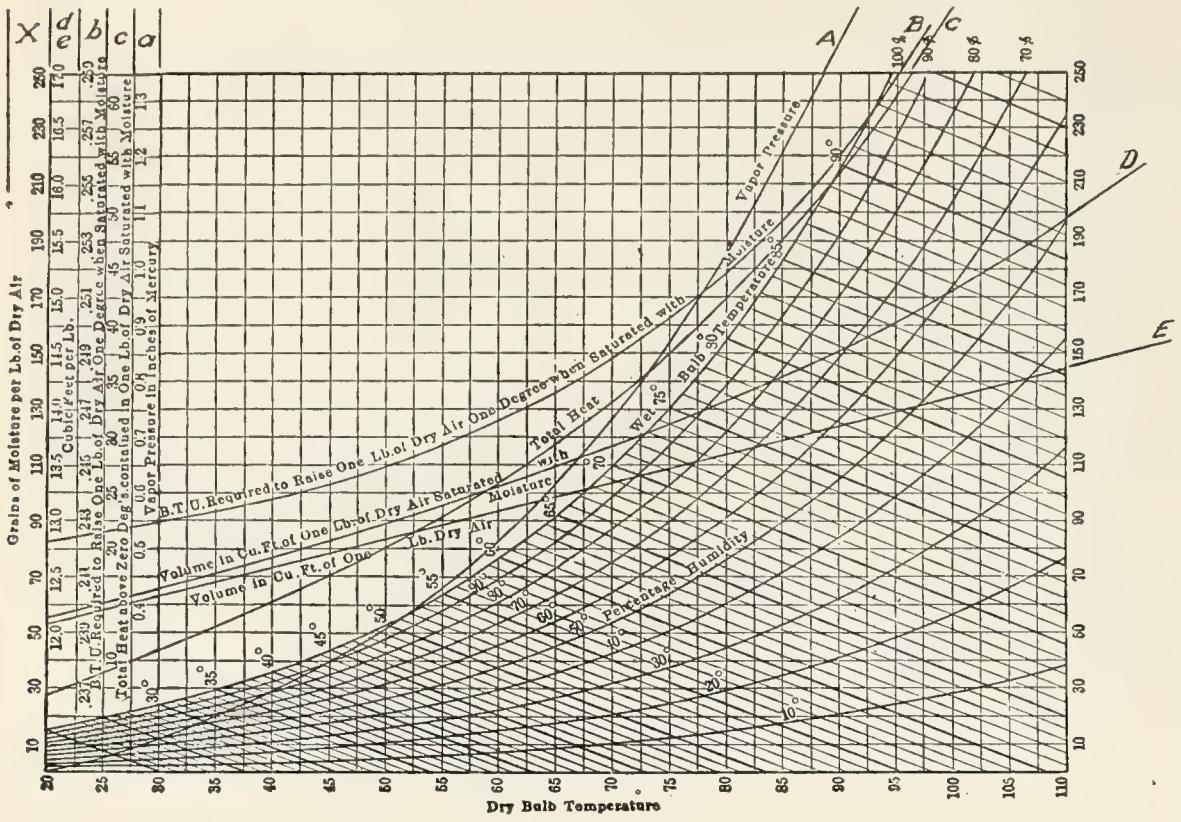
In the case of a theatre located in a large city, a restriction to the extent of more than a mile or two from the theatre sold might be held unreasonable. On the other hand, where a theatre located in a small town attracts its patronage, not only from the town, but from a surrounding rural area of, say, 20 miles, the seller may properly be excluded from competing with the purchaser within an area of 20 miles for a period of years.

An agreement in the latter case may go even further and provide that the seller is forever not to compete within the twenty mile area.

In the event that a restrictive agreement is violated by the seller, the courts, if they find the restriction to be reasonable will, by injunction, prohibit the seller from competing with the buyer.

To be reasonably certain of protecting what he is about to purchase, the buyer or lessor of a theatre should insist upon the inclusion of a clause restricting competition in the contract of sale.

AIR CONDITIONING GUIDE SHEET NO. 4



PSYCHROMETRIC CHART: WITH VAPOR PRESSURE, B. T. U., VOLUME CURVES AND SCALES

[The last of four charts applied to theatre air conditions.]

The chart presented herewith is universally used by air conditioning, ventilating and fan engineers. Some understanding of the uses to which this chart can be put will, of course, be of advantage to every theatre manager and every theatre engineer regardless of the type or condition of the equipment at present in any particular theatre.

In general this chart represents still air conditions. In this respect it is somewhat similar to the second chart of this series, presented in the July 29 issue of Better Theatres, with some additional curves and scales.

The additional curves and scales will be indicated, described and explained. One example will be worked out for the purpose of illustrating the use to be made of this chart

The five additional curves have been extended beyond the edges of the chart and on these extended portions of the curves a capital letter of the alphabet has been placed. These curves during the discussion will be referred to by these letters.

The additional scales shown along the lefthand edge of the chart, and related to the additional curves, will be indicated with the same letter of the alphabet at the curve to which they refer (except that the letter will not be printed as a capital):

Curve A—Vapor pressure.

Curve B—B.T.U. required to raise one pound of dry air one degree when saturated with moisture.

Curve C—Total heat.

Curve D—Volume in cubic feet of one pound of dry air saturated with moisture.

Curve E—Volume in cubic feet of one pound of dry air.

It is to be noted here that as the scales on the left-hand of the chart are compared with the curves, first that one scale represents readings from two of the curves, second that there is no curve shown on the chart to correspond with the first scale (labeled X) on the left-hand side of the chart. A curve representing the grains of moisture per cubic foot of saturated air always appears on a complete Psychrometric Chart

A fall-of-the-year problem: Given an outside air condition represented by a dew point of 50 degrees, and a dry bulb of 60 degrees; the fans, an air washer spray, and steam are available in the theatre. Steam has got to be used. But should the air washer be used?

Follow with a pencil up the vertical lines labeled 60 (dry bulb temperature) at the bottom of the chart until the point is reached which will be the intersection of this line with a horizontal line through the point marked 50 degrees on the curve labeled "wet bulb temperature." The horizontal line passing through this point marked 50 degrees may be drawn very lightly in pencil. Follow along this horizontal line to the right until the pencil intersects the line of a dry bulb temperature of 70 degrees (the temperature desirable in the theatre, steam being used to gain this heat). This point located indicates a relative humidity of slightly less than 50 per cent.

Now by using steam only to heat the incoming air, these conditions exist inside the theatre—that is, dry bulb temperature 70 degrees, relative humidity 50 per cent.

Referring to the Comfort chart (the first one in this series, and published in Better Theatres of June 3) it may be seen that this condition represents an effective temperature of 66 degrees, an ideal mid-winter condition (when everybody is wearing winter-weight clothing). But such a condition would undoubtedly be very chilly for early fall.

By using the air washers the moisture content (relative humidity) could be increased and a more comfortable condition would exist inside the theatre.

Assume now that the washers have been turned on, and the resulting condition within the theatre is represented by 70 degrees dry bulb, relative humidity 80 per cent. Then outside conditions are still the same, dew point 50 degrees, dry bulb 60 degrees. Completing the data on these two conditions by reading from the chart:

Outside conditions, dry bulb 60 degrees, wet bulb 54 degrees, dew point 50 degrees, relative humidity 70 per cent

Inside conditions, dry bulb 70 degrees, wet bulb 65½ degrees, dew point 63½ degrees, relative humidity 80 per cent.

With these conditions find the difference in total heat between a mixture of one pound of dry air and the quantity of moisture present at the wet bulb temperature of 65½ degrees (inside conditions) and a similar mixture at the wet bulb temperature of 54 degrees (outside conditions).

As total heat is a function of the wet bulb temperature, independent of the dry bulb reading, and quantity of moisture present for any specific wet bulb temperature varies with the dry bulb temperature, it follows that the quantity of moisture present does not affect the total heat, provided the wet bulb temperature remains unchanged.

Locate the point on the wet bulb curve corresponding to 65½ degrees (the inside condition). Follow vertically to the intersection of Curve C, then horizontally to the left to Scale C, this indicates 29 B.T.U. Follow this same procedure from the point on the wet bulb curve corresponding to 54 degrees (the outside condition), scale C indicates 22½ B.T.U.

Subtracting—29 B.T.U minus 22.5 B.T.U. equals 6.5 B.T.U., the difference in total heat per pound of air.

This computation deals with a mixture of one pound of dry air with the amount of moisture present under the given conditions added to it.

This procedure represents the method used in determining the total heat to be added to, or removed from, air to heat or cool to certain given conditions. Whether to heat or to cool depends upon whether summer or winter conditions are prevailing. In this specific case it would be heat added.

To find the difference in vapor pressure: Using the same conditions, outside dew point, 50 degrees, inside dew point, 63½ degrees. Follow from the outside indicated dew point 50 degrees vertically to the intersection with Curve A, then horizontally to Scale A, indicating .352 inches of mercury.

Follow the same procedure for the inside condition 63½ degrees dew point, Scale A indicates .54 inches of mercury.

Subtracting — .54 inches of mercury minus .352 inches of mercury equals .188 inches of mercury.

This is interesting and indicates that the air in the theatre is actually heavier than it is outside. Not an appreciable amount, it is true, but very sensative barometers would be able to indicate this difference.

It follows that vapor pressure is dependent upon the dew point and is always indicated in inches of mercury.

Absolute Humidity—This refers to the weight of water vapor expressed either in grains per pound, or in grains per cubic foot of air. Absolute Humidity is a function of the dew point.

Find the absolute humidity of the outside and inside conditions as set forth in this problem: Outside conditions, dew point 50 degrees; inside condition, dew point 63½ degrees

From the point representing 50 degrees dew point, follow horizontally to the left

REFERENCE CHARTS

The adjoining chart, as applied to theatre air conditioning, is the final one of the series of four. Accompanying the first chart in the June 3d issue, was an announcement that if enough requests were received, these charts, with proper explanations, would be made available in a form suitable for ready reference. Those wanting this service who have not sent in their requests should please do so at once.

to Scale X. This indicates 53 grains of moisture per pound of dry air.

To interpret this in grains of moisture per cubic foot of air, find the point of intersection of the vertical dry bulb temperature line 60 degrees (outside conditions) with the Curve E, follow horizontally from this point to Scale E (labeled cubic feet per pound). This indicates 13.03 cubic feet per pound of dry air.

Now from the point of intersection of the vertical dry bulb line 60 degrees with the Curve D follow horizontally from this point to Scale D (the same scale as E), this indicates 13.53 cubic feet per pound of saturated air.

Subtract—13.53 minus 13.03 equals .5 cubic feet increase in volume due to 100 per cent saturation.

The relative humidity of the outside conditions was found to be 70 per cent; therefore, .5 cubic feet times .70 relative humidity equals .35 cubic feet, or one pound of air at outside conditions is equivalent to 13.03 plus .35 equals 13.38 cubic feet.

Now to express the Absolute Humidity in grains of moisture per cubic foot, divide:

$$\frac{\text{53 grains of moisture per pound of air}}{\text{13.38 cubic feet per pound of air}} = \text{3.96 grains}$$ of moisture per cubic foot of air, or an Absolute Humidity of 3.96.

By following the same procedure it may be determined that inside the theatre the Absolute Humidity is 6.14.

General observations from this chart and this problem: When air is heated without the addition of water vapor, the relative humidity decreases. . . When air is cooled without the extraction of water vapor the relative humidity increases. . . . The higher the temperature of air the greater is its capacity to hold water.

There is a distinct difference between Relative Humidity and Absolute Humidity. Referring to the problem, the Relative Humidity of the inside conditions over the outside conditions is an increase of 14.29 per cent, while the increase in Absolute Humidity is 55.3 per cent.

In winter try to raise the temperature, raise the Absolute Humidity and cut down on air motion (for in the August 26th article it was shown that air motion has a cooling effect).

In summer try to lower the temperature, lower the Absolute Humidity and produce as much air motion as possible conducive to comfort.

capacity, which was used in the earlier days for fire protection. Of course, there also is an asbestos curtain on the stage. And the engineers of that day were not to be outdone, either. An iron ventilating system installed under the stage changed 175,000 cubic feet of air every five minutes.

This gigantic undertaking of its day cost the Tootle Estate $150,000, with an additional $100,000 for the remodeling in 1893.

"Ben Hur" still held the Tootle house record to the last. Special matinees were offered to accommodate the crowds which came from cities and towns within 300 miles from St. Joseph. And it was at the Tootle theatre that a stagehand forgot his cue and pulled the wrong treadmill for the famous chariot race. He lost the race for Ben Hur!

The Tootle Estate operated the house until 1904, with C. U. Philley named manager in 1898. In August 1904, Martin Beck leased the house for the then small Orpheum circuit. In September 1905, the well-known Woodward Stock Company leased it. The Shuberts took it for the season of 1911, bringing all of their glamorous offerings to St. Joseph. Dubinsky Brothers, operating a string of theatres in Missouri and Kansas, took the place for stock presentations from September 1916 until August 1925. The Hostettler Amusement Company of Omaha, which operated for Universal, leased it then until August 1928. After that the building was rented periodically until last year, when it was taken by the St. Joseph Little theatre.

The passing of the Tootle Opera House in St. Joseph, Mo., truly symbolizes the end of an era doomed soon to end that day in 1895 when motion pictures were brought to Broadway.

Constructing Theatre Advertising

art work, reduced to the size of the advertisement. The negatives of both the illustrations and the type are then stripped together, according to the layout, for etching on the same plate.

One other method of rendering an advertisement entirely in plate form ready for the newspaper's use is that referred to earlier in the article—that of the combination halftone and line etching. When the art work requires the halftone process, this method must be used. The type dimensions are scaled as in the procedure last described, is similarly set and proved-up. From this proof the engraver makes a finished line etching. At the same time, the art work is made into a halftone in a reduction dictated by the size of the advertisement. Both of these elements, each in separate pieces of metal, are mounted (tacked on wood blocks, as all engravings are) together according to the layout. This single block is all that need be sent to the newspaper.

Each of these processes make the cost somewhat larger than it would be were

MODERN PROJECTION

PROJECTION • SOUND REPRODUCTION • ACOUSTICS

DISTORTION IN THE PROJECTION AND VIEWING OF MOTION PICTURES

[The following discussion of one of the most vital problems of the theatre, and one which recommends itself to the attention of the architect as well as exhibitor, was presented before the first 1933 convention of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers by Clifton Tuttle of the Kodak Research Laboratories, and is reprinted from the September issue of the S.M.P.E. Journal.—THE EDITOR.]

THE WHOLE subject of warped perspective and distortion can conveniently be divided into three phases in accordance with three causes which adversely affect true rendition of form on the screen and in the eye of the observer. These are: (1) The discrepancy between camera point of view and audience point of view involving the relative values of camera and projector lens focal lengths. (2) The vertical elongation of figures and the keystone effect resulting from projection from a point above the screen. (3) The error in perspective caused by the off-center view seen by many members of the audience.

The three types of distortion are, of course, additive in their effects, but for the sake of simplicity in this discussion it seems best to treat them singly, leaving to the reader the task of evaluating the combined effect for the set of conditions in which he is particularly interested.

It was pointed out by Hardy and Conant[1] that ideal conditions of viewing appertain to only one point in the theatre—namely, a point on the axis of projection, normal to the screen, and at a distance D from the screen such that

$$D = \frac{\text{focal length of camera lens}}{\text{focal length of projector lens}} \times \text{projection distance}$$

At other axial points, either closer to or farther from the screen, the observer sees an image distorted from its true perspective. If the focal length of the projection objective is chosen as recommended by Hardy and Conant to make the point D fall near the center of the audience, the average distortion is reduced to a minimum. This viewing distance defect in motion picture projection is obviously of a nature which can not be overcome, although, fortunately, in practice it does not seriously handicap the illustion for the average person.

Projection at an angle and viewing at an angle also are causes of distortion which can not be eliminated in practical presentation; but since both these are controllable to some extent in the design of theatres, it remains of practical interest to consider these matters and perhaps to specify limiting values for the guidance of architects and theatre owners.

PROJECTION ANGLE DISTORTION

THE QUESTION of projection angle has been frequently discussed, the most thorough treatment of the problem being that presented by the Projection Committee in 1929. The committee recommended, first, that the angle be kept as near zero as possible, and then proceeded to analyze the amount of distortion as a function of the angle of divergence of the projected beam and of the angle which the axis of projection makes with the horizontal. They expressed the distortion as the percentage increase in height which results when the picture is projected at an angle to a vertical screen.

To quote from this report: "Now, the maximum permissible amount of distortion is a matter on which there seems to be considerable divergence of opinion. The committee feels that in recommending 5 per cent as the maximum increase in picture height, it is erring on the side of laxity rather than on that of rigidity." For practical projection conditions a projection angle of 17 degrees results in an increase of image height of about 5 per cent. The committee therefore fixed on this angle as the limiting value.

Through the kind offices of the chairman and members of the present Projection Screens Committee, the author has been supplied with data concerning the projection angles existing in one chain of theatres. These data show that about 60 per cent of the theatres in this group have projection angles equal to or greater than that recommended by the committee, and about eighty per cent have an angle greater than the more rigorous specification of 12 degrees recommended in the standards adopted by the Society as the limiting value. Since the theatres of large seating capacity have the larger projection angles, it follows that the vast majority of theatre patrons habitually see pictures which are projected at angles greater than 12 degrees. It would seem desirable either to bring the recommendation of the Society into line with practice or to exert pressure to bring future practice into line with our recommendation. Thus, it appears that a continued discussion of the problem is not out of order.

From some points of view it seems indeed that the 5 per cent increase in the ratio of height to width is a lax enough tolerance. Consider for a moment the effect on the human figure. While the pictures of some of our Hollywood actors and actresses might undergo with aesthetic advantage a 5 per cent increase in vertical to horizontal ratio, it hardly seems probable that the result would be highly satisfactory in the majority of cases. The 17-degree projection angle should in its effect be roughly equivalent to the once highly advertised 18-day grapefruit diet. Greta Garbo, Ruby Keeler, Joan Crawford, and others in the light-weight class apparently lose five or six pounds by the treatment.

There is a strong tendency on the part of the general public to accept what it sees on the motion picture screen as the last word in fashion and beauty. Large projection angles may, therefore, be largely responsible for the vogue for slender figures. It may thus be a grave responsibility upon the motion picture engineer in the interests of public health to prevent the motion picture screen from setting up an ideal of dangerous emaciation.

In addition to elongation of figures there is, of course, a second defect in an image projected at an angle which follows from the fact that the bottom of the screen image is magnified more than the top. What should be vertical lines in the image become convergent upward. A rectangular screen shape is maintained by shaping the mask, but nothing is done to rectify the convergence of lines within the picture. It is well known that the eye is extremely sensitive to the lack of parallelism between two lines. Mitchell[2] has recently thoroughly discussed this question for the edification of the cameraman, pointing out several matters which should be observed in scene composition. In some actual cases in theatre projection the convergence amounts to five or six degrees, which is very apparent at the edge of the screen.

Fortunately, the attention of the audience is seldom concentrated on vertical lines in a picture. This is more true now than in the days of the silent picture with its numerous titles. It seems, therefore, that experimental demonstration of the practical effect of projection angle should be confined principally to such subjects as make up the greater bulk of motion picture presentation.

In preparing experiments to demonstrate and evaluate the limits of allowable distortion, one is confronted by two diametrically opposed points of view. Either one should seek to determine limits which would prevent the audience from ever seeing an image in which distortion could be recognized, or one should seek to find the limits which in the majority of cases would not allow distortion to destroy the illusion of naturalness.

In view of data which show that many successful theatres have projection angles in excess of the arbitrary limit recommended by the Society, it seems of interest to proceed on the latter basis; that is, to determine the degree of distortion at which the illusion of naturalness breaks down.

A number of still pictures of motion picture scenes were reproduced as lantern slides. These were projected on a screen at vertical angles which gave progressively 2.5, 5, 10, 15, and 20 per cent distortion. The screen picture was photographed at each position and lantern slides were made of the results.

All the groups of slides thus obtained were thoroughly shuffled together so that during projection no one of a series of slides would follow another of the same subject. The slides were then shown to a group of persons, each of whom was asked to select all pictures which looked unnatural and to state the reason for the objection.

Results of this test are summarized in Table I. In column one of this table, the subjects have been classified in a general way. The terms "close-up," "semi-close-ups," and "full-length figures" apply to human figures. Well-known inanimate subjects included pictures of houses, doorways, wagons (showing wheels), etc. The remaining columns headed by the value of distortion in per cent contain the record of the relative number of observers who objected.

Individuals participating in the test were not informed of its object and they probably were neither less nor more critical than members of the usual motion picture audience.

The conclusion from these data is that for scenes in which actors or actresses form the principal interest, the image can be distorted 10 per cent before the illusion of naturalness is impaired. Stated in another way, this means that most persons unacquainted with what the real subject looks like are satisfied even though the picture is decidedly distorted. In the case of very familiar objects of definite shape as, for instance, a picture in which there was an axial view of a wagon wheel, the tolerance is somewhat narrower—some persons objecting when the image is distorted as much as 10 per cent.

DEFINITION AND AREA LOSSES

THIS DISCUSSION thus far has been limited to true image distortion. There are two other undesirable effects, however, which accompany projection at an angle. The first is the loss of image area which follows inevitably when the sides of the picture aperture are cut to make the frame rectangular. The second is the effect upon top and bottom image definition because of the path difference. Though neither of these can properly be classified as distortion, an evaluation of both has been included in Table II. The third column shows approximately the area loss in per cent which results when a picture is projected with a 6-inch lens to a rectangular vertical screen, and the fourth column shows the diameter of the circle of confusion, or, more accurately, the major axis of the ellipse of confusion at the bottom and top of the field for a perfect lens working at an aperture of $f/2$.

The area loss, that is, the amount which must be masked from the lower corners of the picture, is not particularly serious at any commonly used combination of projection distance and focal length—provided that the elongated picture is not masked off to maintain the 3×4 picture.

The lack of definition as judged from a viewing distance of twenty feet becomes noticeable if the image size exceeds about 1.5 mm. Since the image size resulting from the projection angle is superposed upon the effect of the lens aberrations, it is probably reasonable to state that with practical projection lenses of $f/2$ aperture definition suffers noticeably at projection angles greater than 17 degrees.

SIDE VIEWING ANGLE DISTORTION

THE SECOND matter upon which some experimental data may prove of advantage concerns the viewing angle forced upon all the members of a motion picture audience except those located opposite the screen center. At first thought, this problem appears to be closely related to the former one. Both projection at an angle from the horizontal and viewing at an angle other than the normal produce a similar kind of elongation of the screen image, and one might expect that a distortion tolerance set up for the one case might apply to the other. The conditions, however, are somewhat different; a person viewing the screen from an angle is conscious of his point of view, and instinctively makes a correction for some distortion of the image. He is not conscious of the projection angle, and therefore has no means of compensation which will aid him in rectifying his concept of the picture.

Table 2

It is common experience that motion pictures viewed from extreme front and side seats in some theatres appear badly distorted. At the same time, it is true that one's enjoyment is not adversely affected until the angle becomes fairly large. The author has attempted to determine the limiting angle experimentally by projecting before a group of persons motion pictures of a screen image photographed at different angles.

There seems to be quite good agreement among the persons before whom these and other pictures of the same kind were shown that any angle less than thirty degrees is not objectionable. Forty degrees seems to be passable, but the opinion was unanimous that the illusion is spoiled at angles greater than 40 degrees.

One can not say that these demonstrations adhere closely enough to theatre conditions to justify any general conclusions. One is quite justified in questioning: How much does motion in the picture affect the feeling that the illusion has failed? And how much does the angular field of view change one's judgment?

A few trials were made in which a large black border was shown around the rotated picture. This, it was thought, would supply a comparison reference as to the amount of foreshortening to be expected in the picture. The judgment of distortion did not seem to be much changed. Pictures filling the screen appear better to represent the view which a member of the audience has in a seat close to the screen—the only location in which the viewing angle problem is serious. On the basis of a number of observations in theatres during the projection of pictures, it appears that motion in the picture does not affect the result to any great extent.

A seat which forces one to see any part of the picture at an angle greater than 40 degrees is undesirable. For full-length figures the judgment is more critical.

The larger the screen, of course, the worse is the distortion at the farthest edge at a given viewing distance. In recommending practice for the guidance of designers and architects, the specification for the position of the extreme seat should be based upon the angle at which this edge can be seen. Assuming that the distance from the first row of seats to the screen is equal to 1.5 times the screen width, the first row of seats should be not longer than 1.5 times the screen width if the extreme viewing angle for the edge is not to exceed 40 degrees. Data supplied to the author by the chairman of the Projection Screens Committee give the average maximum viewing angle of a number of theatres at 34 degrees at the screen center—an angle which makes the extreme edge viewing angle somewhat in excess of the distortion limit.

DISTORTION REMEDIES

MANY ATTEMPTS have been made in the past to cure the evil of viewing angle distortion—usually by the use of curved screens. Anamorphotic lens systems also have been suggested. The fallacy of such suggestions has been pointed out so frequently that apparently no proposal of this kind has been made for several years. There is, of course, no remedy except proper design of the seating space. Any correction of the screen image for one position can be made only at the expense of the perspective obtainable from other positions.

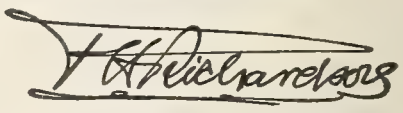
F. H. RICHARDSON'S COMMENT

• • AND ANSWERS TO INQUIRIES •



SEEKING A BETTER UNION MEMBERSHIP SYSTEM

FROM a projectionist on the Pacific Coast comes a most interesting letter from which the following excerpt is taken:

"It was with much interest I read the letter of Ed Warrentjen of St. Louis, Mo., and your comments thereon. I am myself one of those forced into the position of being outside the union and therefore dubbed a non-union projectionist. I say 'forced' for the simple reason that I find it impossible to join, and lately have been feeling much the same as Friend Warrentjen seems to.

"Perhaps, though, I am not entitled to make a kick, being merely an 'operator' in the sticks, in charge of an ancient outfit that much be kissed and kidded along if one hopes to induce it to give a decent performance, either in picture or sound. I have worked hard and studied though, and some day, somehow hope to get somewhere in what I regard a profession. In order to have that chance, however, one must belong to the union, and the union is taking in just exactly no new members for the reason that it already has too many.

"Now, Friend Richardson, one cannot perhaps blame it for that too much, but here is the catch! I have myself witnessed projection faults in deluxe theatres manned by union men having the best of equipment, which could not possibly be charged to anything on earth but rank carelessness—results that I, with this old worn-out, punk equipment that I must literally coax results from, would be ashamed to put before audiences. I have actually seen a flash of white screen once, and a trailer once in one production—and in the box office window of that theatre was a framed card showing the I. A. emblem. And the queer part was that when I talked with one of the projectionists and mentioned the matter he did not seem to be particularly interested.

"Now, Mr. Richardson, please don't get me wrong! I most emphatically am not either saying, intimating or believing that all union men are in that class, or for that matter anything more than a (let us hope) small percentage of them. Certainly not! Of my own knowledge the union contains a goodly percentage of really splendid men who respect both themselves and their profession. That is beyond question, but it offers no explanation as to why the don't-care-Adams are permitted to remain that way and disgrace the union, keeping on the outside men who would, it appears, make far better union material.

"Seems to me it should, in the very nature of things, be up to unions to penalize if necessary members who fail to deliver the very best results that can be had from the equipment provided, including of course the films. They should, it seems to me be either compelled to do that or step aside to make room for those who will.

"Many men are thus kept outside the union who are really deeply interested in their work, regarding projection as a profession, being sincere in their desire to build it up to that plane. Why will not or cannot unions replace those who refuse to study, and therefore are unable to work efficiently and well, or who are careless, unambitious and too shiftless to do their work right, with men who are competent, ambitious and willing?"

This gentleman says considerable more, but the gist of the argument has been already well stated. First of all, friends, the "sticks" man is most emphatically entitled to have his say. It would be unfair and cowardly to refuse to accord him that privilege. It one way he is of far greater importance to the country and to its people than is the city man. He is a very vital factor in supplying whole isolated communities with the chief form of amusement available to the people as a whole and the only form of theatrical amusement available to those communities.

Moreover, the "sticks" projectionists are much more basically competent than is the average city man. They have to be! They cannot jump to a telephone and quickly summon aid every time something goes haywire. There is none to be had except after hours of waiting, hence they must be able to effect repairs themselves or see their employer turn an audience out, handing them back their coin—and his own too, probably. In the very nature of things the small town man must study. He must have a pretty darned good basic understanding of motion picture and sound equipment.

As to the union, all that our correspondent says is unfortunately quite true. I have long held that when a competent projectionist working under the jurisdiction of a local union (and every working projectionist in the United States and Canada works under the jurisdiction of some I. A. union) makes application for membership in the union and is refused merely for the reason the union does not wish to admit him, he cannot thereafter justly be termed a non-union man. It seems to me the whole I. A. membership layout stands in need of rather radical revision, at least insofar as has to do with projectionists. As the matter now stands it is unfair to those many competent working projectionists now being kept out merely for the reason that it is impractical to admit them under present conditions.

There would be no point in making such an assertion without offering some reasonable remedy, and that I shall now attempt to do, believing what I will offer to be practicable and workable without serious inconvenience or "kick-back" to either unions or their individual members. Even the most rabid stand-pat man cannot deny that what the West Coast man says is true.

While it is the fact that unions cannot and should not admit a too-great surplus of men, for reasons set forth in some detail in April 8 issue of BETTER THEATRES, and while unions by force of circumstances are often forced to admit not-too-competent projectionists, still when that latter situation is forced upon a union by short-sighted exhibitors, it becomes the obvious duty to itself, to the motion picture industry and to the public, to insist that such men immediately use every means within their power to improve themselves to the point where they will be able to deliver the best possible results the equipment provided them can be made to deliver, or that failing to do so, they be relegated to inferior jobs and kept there until reasonable evidences of reform becomes evident.

That, it seems to me, is a proposition no honest union man can seriously object to. It is nevertheless a difficult thing to handle effectively. I believe the average union tries to do the best it can though there are exceptions. Unions that do not are showing disloyalty not only to the motion picture industry from which they derive their very existence, but to the I. A. as well, for all of which they should feel shame. Unions have rights, yet! However, it must not be forgotten that so far as projection is concerned, the employer, the industry and the public also have rights, and certainly it cannot be denied that those rights are being violated when any projectionist, union or otherwise, fails in his duty.

No use letting your angry passions rise, gentlemen. Your really best friend is not the noted "yes man" who pats you continuously on the back in hopes of a return pat. The I. A. is a great organization. It has done a great work for the men, as well as for the exhibitor, though few of the latter will acknowledge that fact. Like most man-made creations, however, it has its faults. It is idle to deny that. The particular point I now am directing your attention to is one of them. It serves, as our correspondent says, to keep a percentage of incompetent, careless projectionists working, as I know, you know and exhibitors know, to the exclusion of careful, competent men, and that is neither fair nor right, though it is freely granted that it is a situation which it would be quite impossible to completely eradicate at once.

What I shall now lay before you for consideration is not intended as a complete remedy. It only is designed as a long step toward right and fairness. Its effect would, in my opinion, be altogether beneficial to the I. A. There may be objections, but the benefits, if carefully worked out and put into operation, would outweigh them.

First.—A change in I. A. laws which will divide projectionist membership into two classes. "Full" and "Provisional."

Second.—Full membership shall be and remain as it now is without change.

Third.—Provisional membership shall admit any projectionist working within the jurisdiction of a local union but outside full membership territory, provided he be able to prove himself a man of good character and a competent motion picture-sound projectionist, examination to be based upon the class of equipment he is then handling. Note: It would be manifestly unfair to base the examination of a small town or village projectionist upon deluxe theatre equipment.

Fourth.—Full membership territory shall consist in the town or city in which a local union is located, plus such immediately surrounding territory and such other cities and towns as the union may decide upon. All other territory within the jurisdiction of the local shall be provisional territory.

Fifth.—Provisional members may be admitted at such reduced entrance fee and dues as the local or an I. A. convention may decide, or there may be no reduction.

Sixth.—Provisional members may work only in provisional territory, except for a period of 60 days under direct authority of the local union. If the provisional member be permitted to work in full membership territory for a period exceeding 60 days he shall automatically become a full member after paying difference in entrance fee stipulated in Section 5 above.

Seventh.—Upon becoming a full member the provisional member shall pay any difference there may be in full and provisional entrance fee.

Eighth.—Provisional members shall have the right to fill any and all vacancies occurring in full membership territory, in the order of their admission as provisional members. Should any provisional member not desire to fill such vacancy, then the next provisional member in order for advancement shall be called. Being called into membership territory, except for temporary work as set forth in Section 6, shall entitle said provisional member to full membership upon paying any difference there may be in provisional and full membership entrance fee.

Ninth—Each local shall undertake to do whatever may be possible to improve working conditions and increase wages in provisional territory, but provisional members shall have no guaranteed rights to such improvement.

This pretends to be only a very rough, incomplete draft of what is proposed. It is only intended to lay before you the general idea. I ask, however, for it very serious consideration. Do not overlook the fact that dual unions are forming and many are joining them for no other reason that, although competent projectionists actually are working within the jurisdiction of a local, they are refused admission, in some instances such refusal being done harshly and discourteously. Many such cases have been reported to me. In many cases men have made application to the union they were working under and have, after months of waiting, been unable to get even an answer to their application. Such a condition as this makes bitter enemies for the I. A., and not without justification. Putting into effect a provisonal membership molded somewhat along the lines I have suggested would largely put an end to this. Men who desire to enter projection will then of necessity do their learning in the smaller towns. It is even possible some sort of provisional territory apprenticeship system might be worked out.

Also do not overlook the obvious fact that with such a system the provisional member, once he has joined, will hesitate to drop out or to do anything injurious to the union, since he then would lose his right to advancement to full membership, and to advancement of any sort in the projection field.

THE CARE OF COMMUTATORS

JOHN L. NELSON, writing from Pensacola, Fla., asks, "Will you be good enough to attend to the trouble of a small town projectionist? I am projectionist in a small theatre in a small town, but one at least fairly well equipped. I have a motor-generator set which sparks considerably and continuously at the brushes. Will you tell me how to stop it and what to do to keep the commutator in condition?

"I have in the past subscribed to three different projectionist publications. Still take one of them, the best of the lot, but when the subscription runs out I'm through, for after all, F. H. R., I find that from the MOTION PICTURE HERALD and BETTER THEATRES I get more real projection knowledge and help than from all of them put together, twice over. I have found, old friend, that what you say usually is either right, or pretty close to it."

Many widely different conditions might cause sparking at the brushes. First of all, is your set working at full capacity, or possibly even above capacity? Working at full capacity, it is necessary that the commutator be in perfect condition to avoid sparking. Even then there may be some, but the sparks would be very small and weak. Moreover, there would be very little sparking. If the machine is working at overload, sparking may and probably will result, regardless of the condition of the commutator, except that there will be an increased amount of it if the commutator be not in good condition—increased in proportion to the amount of the fault of course. In addition, the following various conditions will induce sparking:

1. Insulation between commutator bars insufficiently undercut—comes too close to surface. Caused by commutator bars or segments wearing away under brush friction. (See also Cause 5 below.) Remedy (using broken hack saw blade, working very carefully): Scrape insulation down to about 3-64ths of an inch below the commutator surface.

2. Brushes set at wrong point circumferentially. Test out by moving, loosening holding bolts and moving brushes slightly. There should be a mark indicating exactly correct position of rocker arm, or whatever takes its place.

3. Dirty brush ends. Examine contact surface of brushes after a reasonable amount of use. Do this regularly. If there is indication of questionable spots, replace brush, apply usual tension and draw No. ½ sandpaper around curve of commutotor to grind said spots off brush contact. If brush does not fit snugly in holder, better draw sandpaper only in direction of commutator rotation.

4. Dirty commutator surface. Should be a clean, glossy, brown color. Sometimes spots will accumulate a coating that is, in a measure, insulating, in which case apply No. 00 sandpaper while machine is running, but with no current. Apply lightly and afterward brush off with fairly stiff brush to remove all sand and dust. Then apply a pad made as follows: Piece of canvas 6 inches square with light coat of vaseline on one side; fold twice with vaseline inside so that you have a strip 2 inches wide by 6 inches long. Let lay in a warm place a day. This will supply all the commutator lubrication required. Note: It is well to secure instructions for commutator lubrication directly from the maker of your set. Very, very little lubrication is necessary in any event.

5. Brush tension too light. Remedy: Do whatever may be necessary to increase it. Different makes of machine have different brush tension arrangements. Brushes should have only sufficient tension to insure good electrical contact with commutator. Too much tension will wear down the segments too fast, and replacement of segments (commutator bars) is expensive. Too little will cause sparking.

6. Brush ends do not fit commutator curve properly. Grind to curve by drawing No. ½ sandpaper around commutator, sanding side next to brushes, of course, until they fit the curve. If not a snug fit in holders, better draw paper in direction of commutator rotation only.

7. Commutator may have a high bar. Remedy obvious.

8. Commutator may be worn slightly eccentric in form. Must be re-turned in a lathe.

9. Commutator bars worn down too thin. Install new bars.

10. Brushes may stick in holders. Do whatever may be necessary to stop it.

11. Bits of dirt of copper pulled across insulation. Usually shows up in the form of a ring of fire around commutator.

12. Brushes may have too high resistance. Such brushes will heat and probably will crumble at their points.

13. Worn bearings. In some machines worn bearings will throw armature sufficiently out of center to distort magnetic field enough to set up sparking. Evidence is that armature is out of center between pole pieces. New bearings needed.

14. Shorted armature coil. Such coil will heat badly, and voltmeter needle will probably fluctuate heavily.

WHAT IS INSULATION?

JOHN L. DANBY of Detroit wants to know what insulation is. He says, "We of course know what insulation is, but would like to know the really officially definition of it as applies particularly to electrics. The dictionary definition is not very complete."

Hawkins Electrical Dictionary defines insulation as follows:

"The condition of a conducting body when insulated by the interposition of non-conductors to prevent the escape of electricity. The substances that will not conduct electrical current, but interfere with its transmission, are coils, porcelain, wool, silk, resin, gutta percha, shellac, ebonite, paraffin, glass. On account of this property they are extensively used in all branches of the electrical industry where it is desirable to confine the current to definite limits. They are thus called 'insulators,' from the Latin insula, an island; insulatus, made into an island."

The list is not complete. Just why mica, for example, is omitted I cannot say. It certainly is an insulator, as also is rubber. Nevertheless the definition is the most "official" I know of.

My own definition of the term would be somewhat as follows: There is no such thing as "insulation." What is known as insulation is the segregation of electrical conductors by interposing between them and other objects substances offering such high resistance to the flow of electrical current that there will be little or no leakage across it at ordinary commercial voltages, and relatively small leakage at high pressures.

CLEANING OF TUBE PRONGS

TWO ALERT projectionists, S. VanBuskirk and Edgar Kroll of the Maltz theatre in Alpena, Mich., arise to remark, "We do not know whether or not all projectionists are aware of the fact that poor sound not infrequently is due to imperfect contact of the vacuum tube prongs at the bottom of the holes receiving them. At the end of the prong is a small bit of some lead mixture, presumably plain solder, which sometimes gets very dirty. Naturally, since the prongs make contact through this bit of solder, if it gets dirty the contact may and probably will not be perfect, whereupon Old Man Trouble makes his appearance.

"To avoid the possibility of this we take all tubes out at regular, fixed intervals and clean off any accumulation of dirt with "crocus cloth," which removes all dirt without removing any of the solder. Also, before replacing the tube we clean the spring contacts in the panel with an ordinary eraser such as comes on the end of a lead pencil.

"Sometimes it will be found that on the 43-A amplifier the solder has melted off the prong ends, resulting in very poor contact with the springs in the panel sockets. Most all modern projection rooms have, we believe, some sort of soldering iron. By cleaning off the prong ends it is a simple matter to replace the solder, so that again everything will be jake.

"We also have found crocus paper to be excellent for use on generator commutators. It does no harm to the commutator and will remove nothing from it except carbon dust and dirt."

Possibly many of our readers knew all about this; also, possibly many of them do not. Putting them wise does no manner of injury to Brothers VanBuskirk and Kroll, and very possibly helps many of you. Why do not more of you kick in with things of this sort? Why be a clam in your shell? Things such as these are, when published in BETTER THEATRES, laid before many thousands of projectionists in this country and abroad.

A GROWING BRITISH JOURNAL

IN AUGUST, 1932, in London, England, the first issue of the Projectionists' Journal came off the press, sponsored by the Guild of British Kinema Projectionists. The new journal was put forth for the reason that there was no English motion picture journal willing to give projection matters what seemed to be adequate prominence.

Mr. Fred G. Humberstone, a working projectionist, was selected as editor. The first issue consisted in merely four pages of Guild news. A copy of the August 1933 issue lies before me. It is an 18-page magazine, four pages of which form an advertising insert in color. Besides the insert there are approximately three pages of advertising. It is a monthly publication.

I compliment Editor Humberstone and all those who have given aid to the upbuilding of this fine magazine. It is especially admirable when we consider it the result of effort by men who all make their living as projectionists. The editorial committee is composed of P. O. Farrell, chairman, assisted by P. Pilgrim, F. W. Thearle, F. H. Woods and G. E. Lansdown.

The publication is purely educational in its work. It does not deal with labor matters at all.

DOES COPPER LOSE CONDUCTIVITY?

SEVERAL INQUIRIES have come from managers, projectionists and exhibitors through a space of considerable time, asking whether or not copper wires suffer any loss in conductivity through long use. One typical inquiry lies before me. It is from an exhibitor in a small city in Iowa, who says, "I own a small motion picture theatre (seats 476) which is 11 years old. I have had pretty heavy current bills lately. When I kicked about it my projectionist said it was because of the age of the wires, which he said caused loss of current. Our local electricians rather backed him up in the matter, though without committing themselves to any fixed expression of opinion.

"Now, Mr. Richardson, I have followed your writings for many years. I have your books—every edition from the second—on my desk. I have always found you always to be either right or pretty nearly so, therefore I appeal to you to settle this matter."

That was some months ago. I replied by mail to the effect that so far as I knew copper loses none of its conductivity through use, unless it is overloaded and therefore subject to high temperature. I expressed the opinion that unless there had been such heating, or would be in future he might use the wires for 25 years and find them to have no more resistance than at present.

During the past month, however, three inquiries of something of the same nature have arrived, so I finally wrote the chairman of the National Fire Protection Association Electrical Committee, Mr. A. R. Small, asking him for an opinion. He replies:

"Acknowledging your letter of August 14, I know of no basis on which to expect that the conductivity of copper, as regularly used for electrical conductors, will change on account of the length of time it is in service."

The matter of insulation, however, is quite another matter, and that I have taken up with the National Board of Fire Underwriters. Mr. Paul Ferneding of that body replies as follows:

"Answering your inquiry, we regret to advise that in our opion it is impossible to judge even approximately the age at which rubber insulation on electrical conductors, whether exposed or in conduit, may deteriorate to a point beyond a reasonable safety limit.

"Many installations of rubber-covered conductors have been in use for periods of from 20 to 25 years and are still apparently in an excellent state of preservation. On the other hand, we find many cases where wires have been in use for periods of less than 10 years in which the rubber insulation has deteriorated to a considerable degree. It therefore is apparent that while age has a deteriorating effect on rubber insulation, local atmospheric conditions are a decided factor in the service life of this material."

Mr. Ferneding then suggests that the best method of determining the condition of insulation is the test applied by laboratories, commonly called the "break-down" test, which he is certain the Underwriters' laboratories would be willing to forward upon request.

SUPERVISORS OF PROJECTION

FROM a conscientious, progressive projectionist, whose name I withhold for very obvious reasons, comes this letter:

"Dear Brother Richardson: The theatre situation here remains about the same as during the earlier part of the year, although, as does every one else, we are anticipating the return of prosperity and an end to these very trying times. One thing I do hope to see the return of, and that is the projectionist being master in his own projection room, without the constant interference of some so-called Supervisor of Projection who does not really supervise, but sets up standards of miscalled economy which work out to the ultimate injury of the work and in the end save nothing in overhead expense but instead lose money at the box office.

"Such 'supervisors' ignore the recommendations of sincere, competent projectionists just about wholly and completely, after which they have the nerve to expect to obtain co-operation from the said projectionist.

"Well, most real projectionists are too independent to submit to such authority in a co-operative spirit. The day surely cannot be far off when authority will be placed where it properly belongs, where it will do the most good, and do it economically, too."

We have had a few really competent, progressive supervisors of projection who have done good work. We have had some socalled supervisors of projection that were something worse than a bad joke.

I recall an illustrative instance: Much to my amazement a large theatre chain appointed a man to supervise projection who not only had never made any mark of any kind in the projection field—if, indeed, he had ever really had any actual practical experience as a projectionist at all. He claimed to have had, but if the claim was true the experience amounted to next to nothing. Certainly to my own knowledge he had not had any for many years. He had in fact been a supply dealer of such high integrity that he once said to me personally when I "landed on him" for pushing forward some perfectly punk projection apparatus, "What difference does it make to me whether it's good or bad? That's the buyer's lookout." Yet this great theatre chain, after this man was out of the supply business, appointed him supervisor of projection!

Some while after his appointment I one day witnessed some very poor projection work in one large theatre under his charge and mounted to the projection room to find out what was wrong. I was not long in ascertaining that there were good men in that theatre, but this imitation "supervisor" had forced them to let the equipment deteriorate in such a condition that it was impossible to put a decent picture on the screen or even to get good sound.

One wonders by what process of reasoning executives select such men for such positions. To hold such a position creditably a man must be a progressive, thoroughly competent motion picture-sound projectionist. He must have practical experience and plenty of it. He must understand handling men and the technical side of projection. He must be well acquainted not only with the underlying principles governing the action of projection equipments, but also must have at least a fairly good personal knowledge of the different makes of apparatus.

As this correspondent intimates, he must not imagine he can possibly know all the needs of any given installation as well as does the projectionist in charge of it, assuming him to be a competent man—and one duty of a supervisor is to select competent men, though it is admitted this cannot in all cases be done, due to some unions' refusal to permit free selection. However, when the projectionist requisitions something the supervisor believes should not be supplied, as a matter of common sense and good procedure the request should not be turned down until the projectionist has been invited to set forth his reasons for making the requisition, and why in his opinion it should be allowed.

I thoroughly believe that theatre chains should have a supervisor, but some of the appointments made in the past have caused me to wonder whether the selections were made by placing names in a hat.

A MANAGER ASKS A FEW QUESTIONS

HARLAN P. STORMBERG of Truesdale, Mo., writes, "Like many others I have not written to you who have helped me so very much until I wanted something. I am a small town theatre manager and one who agrees with you that excellence in projection is one thing that helps get the coin in at the cash drawer. The men we little fellows can afford to employ are not always of the best, so I try to study projection matters myself.

"Will you please take time to answer a few questions that have puzzled me quite a bit. First, what is meant by a 'soft' and a 'hard' vacuum tube? Second, what do you regard as the best light source (projection, of course) for a small theatre? Third, how may I arrange a means for quickly testing out equipment and circuits for grounds? Fourth and last, is there any practical way by means of which my projectionist may clean the oil off film? We get some film that is terribly smeared with oil. I know I am asking a lot, but trust you will be charitable and help me out."

That, Friend Stormberg, is both my duty and my pleasure. Answering your questions:

First: A "soft" tube is one that has a relatively poor or low vacuum. A tube having a high vacuum is a "hard" tube.

Second: If the theatre is sufficiently small so that low screen illumination will serve acceptably, Mazda has merit because of its very low operating cost. However, taking them as they come, I regard the straight reflector type lamp (reflector type using no condenser) as best. It is not high in cost of operation and gives relative brilliant screen illumination. It has distinct advantage over Mazda, due to the fact that so many prints are now very dense—so dense, in fact, that nothing but plenty of light will place a creditable image on the screen.

Third: A very simple matter. To some water pipe attach a copper wire so that perfect electrical contact will be had and maintained. Attach the other end of this wire to a porcelain lamp socket attached to ceiling or wall at any convenient spot. In this socket place a lamp of low candle power of the voltage of the circuits you propose to test. To the other binding post of the socket attach an insulated copper wire long enough to reach everything you may wish to test. The rest is obvious. Touch the object or wire you wish to test with the end of the wire. If the lamp glows there is a slow ground—current leakage. If it lights up fully, there is a heavy ground. Warning: You of course understand you cannot test an Edison 3-wire circuit by touching the neutral wire, or what it is attached to, the neutral itself being grounded.

Fourth: It is the duty of the exchange to clean film. It is not the duty of your projectionist. It may be done by using a cloth moistened with carbon tetrachloride, but I do not advise it. If exhibitors as a body did as they should do and refused to accept oil-smeared film, oil-smeared film would soon disappear.

AUTHOR'S CORRECTION

Data given in a table on possible savings in lighting costs in the March 11th issue, now proves to have been slightly in error. The table formed part of an article by Francis M. Falge and appeared on page 7. The error, concerning the first item, "'Euclid Theatre' (Two Sides)," was noted by the Sign Animation Corporation of Philadelphia, and the author concurs in this observation as follows: "The figures should have been either two hundred 25-watt lamps, or (for one hundred and fifty 25-watt lamps, as cited) 3,750—1,875 — 3,750 — 1,875. However, the main idea was to show the difference resulting from flashing."

MARKING LENSES FOR REASSEMBLY

IT IS NECESSARY that projection lenses be disassembled at intervale to clean the inner surfaces of their elements and to examine the interior black coating. No use disputing this. It must be and is done, and not infrequently inexperienced men get one of the lenses reversed in reassembling. Manufacturers may strenuously dispute the necessity for disassembling their lenses. Well, we won't quarrel with them on that point. The fact remains that projectionists do and probably always will do that little thing and in reassembling inexperienced men sometimes commit the above named sin.

To a man sitting on the summit of a tall stump it would seem there can be no reasonable reason why lens manufacturers cannot, with very slight trouble to themselves and considerable help to those using their lenses, affix a mark near the extreme outer edge of each lens on the side belonging next the screen. Such a mark could be made very visible to any one looking for it. It could be so placed that it would be under the retaining ring, hence invisible until the lens was disassembled.

SOUND WAVES BEND AROUND CORNERS

GEORGE L. DENCE of Brooklyn, N. Y., asks a most interesting question, as follows, "Will you please explain how it is that when I lie at ease upon our sun porch, with a solid 16-inch practically sound-proof brick wall between myself and my darling squaw, and with the wall having no opening except a doorway located at least 10 feet from each of us, she can berate her loved one (myself) and I can and must hear the verbal barrage. We are, mark you well, each on the same 'side' of the said door, as viewed with relation to the length of the wall. How is this? Do not sound waves travel in straight lines the same as light waves do? What is the answer anyhow?"

This query shortly after I had prepared a paper dealing, among other things, with this very general phenomenon, and read before a joint meeting of the New York section of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers and the Projection Practice Committee. . . . No, friend Dence, sound and light waves are very different, insofar as has to do with the amount they will pass around corners.

When a sound wave passes through an opening or an obstruction it actually curls around the edges of such opening or obstacle, seretching its length, or at least a portion of its length, in the process. The only way you can retain your relative positions and escape the probably well deserved lecture of friend wife, is to close the door tightly. If it be left ajar by anything except the smallest crack, the verbal onslaught, rated in decibels, will continue with almost full effect. You see, Brother Dence, light waves are only about one-millionth as long as are sound waves, hence they will bend only about one-millionth as much, which means that they hardly bend at all.

On the face of it, to the layman it would seem that inasmuch as screen perforations include only appproximately 9% of the screen area, and the screen is itself too thick to communicate much sound from the air on one side to the air upon the other, only perhaps 10% of the sound put forth by the sound projectors would be communicated to the auditorium.

With screen present, as compared with it absent, the loss is approximately as follows: one-half (.5) decibel at 55 cycles (extremely low tones); one decibel at 500 cycles; 1.5 decibels at 1,000 cycles; 1.75 decibels at 2,000 cycles; 2.25 decibels at 4,000 cycles, and about the same at 6,000 cycles, according to a recent test I made. Beyond 6,000 the loss was more rapid, until at 10,000 it was 3.5 decibels.

preserve the appearance of the arms and backs of the theatre chairs, the hand rails on stairs and the finish of furniture in foyers and rest rooms.

Provide good materials and good tools for your janitors and cleaners. Give as much thought and attention to the selection of your janitors and cleaners as you do to your ushers, doormen, cashiers or your assistant manager. Give your cleaners the same intelligent instruction and guidance as you give other employees in the theatre. Such a policy on the part of the manager will develop a new standard in cleanliness for the theatre. More to be thought of is that, by proper cleaning, the deterioration is lessened and replacements reduced.

The general theatre-going public appreciates cleanliness in theatres just as it expects to find it in restaurants and soda fountains.

Cleanliness is an ever-effective sales argument. People won't spend the admission price just to come into a clean theatre, but other things being equal, they will select the clean theatre in preference to a dirty unsanitary one.

Rights of Parties to Labor Disputes

sued an order preventing further picketing, and said:

"The respondent (union) has the right to persuade the public by any lawful means to patronize or to refuse to patronize complainant's theatre. But this right is not superior to the right of complainant (theatre owner) to conduct his business free from unlawful interference. . . . Granting that peaceful picketing is lawful and the display of placards of the kind in question on the public street is lawful, all the authorities agree that such actions are unlawful when accompanied by coercion or intimidation. . . . In the circumstances and in view of the deliberate violation by respondent of the rights of complainant, we think that to now permit any picketing in the limited space near the theatre would inevitably result in the obstruction of the public use of the street and sidewalk and an added injury to complainant."

INTIMIDATION HELD ILLEGAL

IT IS WELL settled that the courts will promptly enjoin any acts of union members which are sinister, menacing or intimidating.

CASE:

For illustration, in Vaughan vs. Kansas City Union (36 F. [2d] 78), it was shown that a theatre owner alleged that when he installed talking picture equipment in his theatre the union demanded new contracts increasing the wages of the operators. The theatre owner refused to enter into new working agreements although, according to the evidence, he indicated a desire for a conference with the officials of the union so that a satisfactory arrangement might be made.

One night, soon afterward, the operator quit his employment without giving notice to the theatre owner with the result that the theatre owner was compelled to close the theatre and return the admission fees of the patrons. The next day the theatre owner procured the services of a non-union operator.

The owner of the theatre filed suit and alleged that members of the union performed acts of vandalism, intimidation, sabotage, and willful destruction of his property. Also, "stink" bombs were exploded in the theatre. Testimony was given to the effect that the narrow sidewalk in front of the theatre was picketed by members who interfered with patrons and made sinister threats to the theatre patrons. In view of this testimony the court granted an injunction against further picketing, or other interferences by the union members, and in doing so made this statement:

DECISION:

"He (theatre owner) was peremptorily told, according to the evidence, either to sign 'or else.' The last-quoted expression was menacing and sinister, as subsequent events showed. . . . The hostile attitude of the defendant (union) has been so impressed upon the public and upon the mind of plaintiff (theatre owner) that even an act which might ordinarily be classed as a peaceful and lawful act would be considered in the public mind as sinister in purpose and effect. Such acts are interwoven with a plan of intimidation and destruction. . . . Undeniably plaintiff (theatre owner) has sustained serious injury and is menaced with a threat of irreparable injury. He has no adequate remedy at law. The right of the plaintiff (theatre owner) to have injunctive relief is admitted. It is claimed, however, that the defendant (union) is not responsible for the unlawful acts heretofore committed and for the menacing threats either made directly or communicated to plaintiff. The court cannot agree with this contention. There was much testimony that fully justified the inference that all the wrongful acts and all the sinister threats were committed and made at the instance and direction of the defendant."

FALSE STATEMENTS HELD UNLAWFUL

stitution and laws of this country. Therefore, any person who interferes with a theatre business for the purpose of compelling patrons to withhold their patronage is responsible for the harmful consequences, unless he proves that he had a legal justification for such interference. In order to prove a legal justification it must be shown that not only the interference was in pursuance of a lawful purpose, but that it was carried on by lawful means. So held a higher court in Operating Company vs. Cost (179 N. E. 804, Springfield, Massachusetts).

CASE:

In this case it was disclosed that a theatre in Springfield had employed members of a local union. However, a discussion arose between the theatre owner and the union, and the former discharged the union members.

On the same day two members of the union began walking back and forth in front of the theatre, each carrying a printed sign which stated among other things "Union Billposters Locked Out. Union Sympathizers Stay Away."

Suit was filed by the theatre owner who argued that the picketing was unlawful because a statement printed on the sign carried by the picketers was untrue, since he had not locked out the members of the union.

It is important to observe that the lower court granted an injunction restraining the union members from picketing the theatre, and the higher court upheld this verdict, saying:

DECISION:

"The statement on the placards carried on the sidewalk in front of the plaintiff's theatre 'Union Billposters Locked Out' was false. The defendants (union members) were not locked out. . . . It follows that the false statement that union billposters were locked out was an unlawful means of conducting the strike. In effect it amounted to the boycotting of the plaintiff's (theatre owner's) business by the defendants causing it loss and was plainly unlawful."

UNIONS CANNOT VICTIMIZE THEATRE

IN SOME instances two unions conflict so that although a theatre owner employs members of one union, the members of the other union picket the theatre at considerable annoyance to theatre patrons and loss to the theatre owner.

Many courts have held that when any act on the part of union members actually drives customers from a theatre, the theatre owner is entitled to an injunction and this rule is applicable, although the strife and disagreement is between members of two unions.

CASE:

For instance, in Nann vs. Raimist (174 N. E. 690, New York, New York), some difficulty in operating conditions became apparent between the two unions. The members of one union would go from place to place and enter into strife with members of the other union.

An employer who employed members of one union sued the other union and proved that its members denounced his employees as being members of a "fake" union made up of "scabs." Also, the employer asked for an injunction restraining members of the other union from picketing his place of business. The lower court granted an injunction against further picketing and the higher court sustained this decision, saying:

DECISION:

"Where unlawful picketing has been continued, where violence and intimidation have been used, and where misstatements as to the employer's business have been distributed, a broad injunction prohibiting all picketing may be granted."

ANTI-COERCION LAW VALID

CONSIDERABLE controversy has arisen in the past whether or not an ordinance is valid which prohibits union members from attempting to induce patrons not to enter theatre buildings. Therefore, it is important to know that an ordinance of this nature was held valid and enforceable in the late case of People vs. Armentrout (1 P. [2d] 556).

CASE:

The facts of this case are that the city of Los Angeles enacted an ordinance which specified: "It shall be unlawful for any person, in or upon any public street, alley or public place in the City of Los Angeles, to speak in a loud or unusual tone for the purposes of inducing or influencing, or attempting to induce or influence, any person to refrain from entering any works or factory or any place of business or employment. . . ."

The owner of a theatre refused to employ union operators and newsboys selling a paper in favor of the union were stationed near the theatre and yelled "Rialto (theatre) unfair to labor." The employer of the newsboys was arrested and heavily fined for violating the above mentioned ordinance. Notwithstanding the contention that the ordinance was illegal, the higher court sustained the lower court's verdict, and said:

DECISION:

"The words 'Rialto Theatre unfair to labor' thus became words intended to achieve the result denounced in the ordinance, and charged in the complaint. And the mere fact that, at the same time, the newspaper may have been exhibited, does not change the character of the words. . . . In interpreting the ordinance, it is well to bear in mind that courts have recognized the right of workmen engaged in industrial disputes to appeal to others in sympathy with their cause by spreading the news of this dispute. Whatever be the loss the employer may suffer from the social pressure resulting from this appeal, he cannot complain. . . . It must be evident that, by the enactment of the ordinance against picketing, the council of the city of Los Angeles intended to punish not the mere doing of certain acts, but the doing thereof, with the specific purpose (i.e., intent) there denounced, namely, to induce or influence persons to refrain from entering a place of business, or from trading therein, or workmen from working or offering to work therein."

UNION EMPLOYMENT CONTRACT VALID

IT IS IMPORTANT to know that any contract is valid by the terms of which a theatre owner agrees to employ union members at a stipulated wage. Moreover, the theatre owner may be liable in damages for failure to fulfill the terms of the contract.

CASE:

For example, in Weber vs. Nasser (286 Pac. 1074), it was disclosed that a representative of several theatre owners of San Francisco was authorized to enter into valid contracts to control the employment of members of unions. A contract was entered into by the terms of which the theatre owners agreed to employ certain union members for a period of two years at a stipulated wage. Before termination of the two year contract some of the theatre owners installed talking pictures and refused to fulfill the contract with the employees.

DECISION:

The union filed suit to compel the theatre owners to continue during the remainder of the two year period to employ its members, and the higher court held the theatre owners bound to complete the employment contract.

EMPLOYER'S LIABILITY FOR EMPLOYEE'S ACTS

THE LAW is well established that a theatre owner is liable for all authorized acts of an employee. Moreover, if such act is not authorized by the employer he may be liable if it is shown that he previously had authorized and approved of the employee performing similar acts.

CASE:

For example, in Luney v. Furgis (2 P. [2d] 112), it was shown that an employee had been for many months in the habit of employing small boys to assist him. This fact was known to his employer, a company.

One day while a young boy was assisting him he was seriously injured. The parents of the boy sued the company to recover damages. The counsel for the company endeavored to avoid liability contending that the latter did not authorize the employee to employ the injured boy.

DECISION:

However, the higher court held the employer liable, and said:

"The record before us shows that on various occasions Pappas (employee) se-

HORN BRACKET

● An adjustable horn mounting bracket has been developed by the Macy Engineering Company. The bracket is so designed that the horn may be swung through a complete circle and tilted up or down to any desired angle. After adjustment it may be locked in position for operation.

Adjustment is by means of hand screws. By loosening two screws the horn may be removed from the bracket for use without it. Castings are of brass. The bracket can be used for both round- and square-mouth horns.

NEW NEON LAMPS

● Three new neon glow lamps for general indicator service have been added to the line of the Westinghouse Lamp Company. They are so far available in sizes of one-half, one and two watts.

The 1- and 2-watt lamps may be burned on either a.c. or d.c. current. The ½-watt lamp requires a.c. They emit distinctly red light, and on a.c. current the electrodes glow alternately in tune with the frequency of the power supply. On d.c. current only the negative electrode glows.

NEW INSTALLATIONS

● The past month has brought a rapid increase in reports of new installations, which points to a decidedly quickening interest on the part of theatre operators in equipment. Space does not permit a very complete listing, but a few will at least show the range of the most recent interest.

General Talking Pictures reports the installation of the new DeForest extended frequency sound equipment in 20 theatres of the Durkee circuit, 18 in Baltimore, one in Annapolis, and one in Havre de Grace. General has also equipped the projection room of the Pennsylvania State Board of Censors.

Reseating has been another leading field of interest, one concern alone, the General Seating Company, having reported their installation of new chairs in 18 houses, 16 of them in Chicago and its suburbs. The others were Keith's in Indianapolis, and the Vita in Galesburg, Ill.

A notable group of installations of air conditioning equipment is reported by the Adams Engineering Company—notable because every theatre was small. They were the Gables in Merrick, the Laurelton in Laurelton, the Little Neck in Little Neck, and Island in St. Albans, all on Long Island. Ice is used to cool the water for the spray chamber.

The new installations of sound equipment made by Herman A. DeVry, Inc., cover a wide area, ranging from theatres in Georgia, Texas, South Dakota, Wisconsin, Kansas, Ohio and Illinois. Fourteen theatres were equipped in these States.

Incidentally, Al Becker, manager of the Buffalo branch of the National Theatre Supply Company, states that he received more inquiries concerning new equipment last July than in the entire preceding six months.

VOLTAGE TRANSFORMER

● An adjustable voltage transformer has been brought out by the General Radio Company under the trade name of Variac. It was designed to give a continuous voltage adjustment between zero and 130 volts when operated from a 115-volt, 60-cycle line. Among the uses for which it is especially recommended is the control of the brilliancy of theatre signs.

This product is made in two models. One has a protecting case, an attachment cord, and an outlet receptacle and is intended for experimental use. The other model, without the case, is adapted to installation in other equipment. The maximum current rating is 5 amperes.

WIDE AREA HORN

● Another new development of the Macy Engineering Company is a horn designed for a wide area coverage. It is especially intended for sound truck use, but can also be installed for other purposes.

The bell of the horn measures 23 inches in height and 50 inches in width. The horn is exponentially shaped and is 54 inches in length. A detachable aluminum throat is provided for attachment of the unit.

The horn is made of a wood base composition and has brass bound riveted seams and mitered wood trim. The finish is aluminum.

BY WAY OF NEWS

● Preparations are well advanced for the convention of the S. M. P. E. in Chicago October 16-18. Usually the convention is held in the Far West or the East, and the Middle Westerner members are making the most of this opportunity. This convention of the S. M. P. E. convention will have special appeal because of the Century of Progress, and it would seem that a record for attendance should be broken.

A new company has been organized in New York to manufacture and distribute standard projection and sound equipment, under the name of the Theatre Equipment and Sound Company. The concern is headed by Robert R. French, who has been connected with the distribution of theatre supplies for some time.

cured the services of boys to assist in conducting the business of the company; that the company knew that Pappas was securing such services. . . . These facts are sufficient to support the inference and finding of the jury that Pappas had authority from the company to secure the services of the boy at the time complained of."

INTERPRETATION OF COMPENSATION LAW

DISCUSSION has arisen whether or not an employee who is injured in a quarrel, while attending to his regular duties, is entitled to receive compensation under the state laws for such injury. This point of the law was considered in the recent case of Merkel v. T. A. Gillespie Company (162 Atl. 250).

CASE:

The facts of this case are that while certain employees were engaged in their regular work, two of them became engaged in a quarrel over the manner in which the work should be performed. One of the employees was seriously injured. He filed suit to recover compensation on the grounds that the injury arose out of the employment. However, the higher court refused to allow compensation to the injured employee, and said:

DECISION:

"We are of opinion that an employer is not liable, under the Workmen's Compensation Act, to make compensation for injury to an employee which was the result of horseplay or sky-larking, so-called, whether the injured or deceased party instigated the occurrence or took no part in it; for while an accident, happening in such circumstances, may arise in the course of it, it cannot be said to arise out of the employment."

Constructing Theatre Advertising

the newspaper to set the type and, with the engravings, make up the advertisement in the printer's regular manner. In many instances, however, this extra cost is balanced by the possibility of more attractive display and an absolute assurance that the advertisement is going to appear as wanted.

ORDERING ENGRAVING

IT SHOULD always be remembered that the better the copy, the better the result which the engraver can get. Engraver's copy should be carefully examined before it is submitted. Sometimes a drawing that appears all right comes up as a halftone or line etching quite different from the effect intended. One should remember first of all that engraver's copy has to be photographed.

Because photography is fundamentally involved, attention should be given the shades of any copy done in color and not intended for printing in color. In halftone reproduction, even a light yellow will come up darker than a fairly light blue or violet. Red is always a decided black, and even green reproduces dark. Photographs in sepia, even when there seems to be contrast, come up very dull. To some extent the engraver can filter out obtrusive shades, but it is better to have the copy in the blacks and whites and grays that photoengraving is best adapted to reproduce well.

Precise stipulation of dimensions wanted is, naturally, very important. In lieu of a layout in scale, the width or height need only be stated, with the portion of the copy to be reproduced indicated on the face (with a china marking pencil if a glossy print) or on the back. When both the height and the width must be of certain exact dimensions, both dimensions must be given, and the engraver will take in as much of that indicated as they permit.

It is almost always better to reduce the copy in the engraving than to enlarge it. A small amount of the brilliance of copy is lost in the photographic process, and spreading the tones tends further to dull the effect.
